Tennis teams split matches against Big Eight opponents

The K-State tennis teams had mixed results in their meets over the weekend. The men's and women's teams both went 1-1 against Big Eight foes.

The weekend started off very poorly for both squads, as both lost to University of Nebraska teams by 9-0 scores. The men were playing at home; the women were at Lincoln.

None of the Wildcats had any luck against their Nebraska opponents. Curt Thompson and Gary Hassenflu each won one set in the men's singles division, but that was all K-State was allowed by the Cornhuskers.

In doubles play, the team of Thompson and Kris James won its first set, taking a 7-3 tiebreaker over Brian Edwards and David Schulze of Nebraska. The Huskers won the next two sets, however, to take the match. The team of Brady Tinker and Kent Smith also won one set in the doubles, but got no farther.

Men's coach Steve Snodgrass said he was disappointed in the Nebraska matchup.

"We played doubles first and were ahead in two of the doubles matches but ended up losing them. So the guy just went into the singles matches with almost no hope at all," he said. "Nebraska is definitely the third place team in the Big Eight."

The Cyclones of Iowa State proved to be a better match for the Wildcats, as the men won 6-3 and the women topped the Cyclones 9-0.

Jeff Jackard, Thompson, Gary Hassenflu and Mark Hassenflu all captured singles victories for K-State, while the teams of Thompson-James and Jackard-Gary Hassenflu won doubles matches.

The K-State women totally dominated Iowa State, as the Cyclones managed to win only one set, that being in the No. 2 doubles competition.

"I think we played up to our potential against Iowa State," Webb said. "The women played with a lot of confidence. That's something they haven't done before. We went into the match feeling like we were just as good or better than them. The women won all their singles matches and got together and decided to win the meet 9-0."

The next action for the women is the Big Eight Tournament Tuesday and Wednesday at the Woodside Racquet Club in Kansas City, Kan. They go into the tourney at 8-10, 1-5 in the conference, and ranked sixth, one better than the No. 7 prediction given by coaches.

K-State golf squad finishes fourth in Heart of America Tournament

WARRENSBURG, Mo. — The K-State golf team came away with a fourth-place tie in the Heart of America Tournament, competing in a field of 15 teams.

The Wildcats were led by Kevin Crow, who shot 18-hole rounds of 77 and 76. Robert Sedorcek shot 77 and 81, followed by Mark Small, who had a pair of 79s. Reagan Crow and Rich Olson rounded out the K-State field, shooting 83, 76 and 82, 76 respectively.

The tourney was won by Central Missouri State University, the host team, with a 600 total. Missouri Southern placed second with 603 and William Jewell took third with 619. K-State and Northeast Missouri tied for fourth with 622.

"I was well pleased with how the team performed. We drove down Wednesday in rain the whole way, thinking we would get to play the course Thursday before Friday's play," he said. "But we didn't see the course until Friday because it continued raining.

"The course was hilly with a lot of blind shots. All in all I think we did pretty well. I was especially pleased that we had four out of our five golfers shoot in the 70s on Saturday."

The Wildcats were in sixth placed after Friday's play with a team total of 315, but moved up on the second day of play. The tourney was the first complete match the men have played this year. The other one in which they competed was the Park City Tournament, in which they tied for fifth and only got in one round out of the scheduled two.

K-State will head for the Drake Relays Tournament in Des Moines, Iowa, Wednesday morning. The tourney takes place Thursday and Friday.

Baseball team splits with KU to end losing streak

By ANDY SCHROCK
Collegian Reporter

K-State's baseball team broke out of a 10-game losing streak Sunday, as the Wildcats won the second game of a doubleheader against the University of Kansas at Frank Myers Field to split with the Jayhawks. K-State lost the first game, 3-0, and won the second by a 10-9 count.

In the first game, the Wildcats were held to five hits by KU's Dennis Coplen, who pitched the entire game and picked up his fourth win of the year.

KU center fielder Dick Lewallen got things started in the top of the second inning with a walk issued by Gerry Zimmerman, and took second on a wild pitch by Zimmerman. Designated hitter Kevin Bascue also drew a walk, and both runners were brought in with a double by shortstop John Glenn, giving KU a 2-0 lead.

Things then grew quiet, until KU second baseman Mark Gile led off the seventh with a single. Gile stole second, reached third on an error, and scored the final run of the game on a single by Gibson.

Zimmerman took the loss for K-State, dropping his mark to 0-1. Coplen upped his record to 4-3.

K-STATE BOUNCED back in the second game, winning 10-9 on shortstop Mark Teague's two-out single in the bottom of the ninth. The RBI hit was the only sweet spot of the game for Teague, who was charged with two fielding errors in the game.

The Wildcats grabbed a 1-0 lead in the second inning when left fielder Bob Simmons singled and was driven in by designated hitter Rich Phillips' triple with two out.

After a scoreless third inning, KU came back with four runs in the fourth. Third baseman Joe Heeney, KU's leadoff hitter, reached first on Teague's second error of the game. Heeney went to second on a fielder's choice by Lewallen, which K-State third baseman Scott Pick could not handle. Bascue walked to load the bases, bringing up first baseman Phil Doherty. Doherty hit a sharp grounder, which K-State second baseman Kerry Golden turned into the Wildcats' third error of the inning. Heeney and Lewallen both scored on the error.

A WILD PITCH by Scott McClanahan kept the inning going for KU, scoring Bascue and sending Doherty to third. Doherty scored on a sacrifice fly by catcher Robert Thomson for KU's final run of the inning.

K-State answered with four runs of their own in the bottom of the fourth. Pick started things off with a one-out single and took second on Simmon's single. Phillips was hit by a pitch, loading the bases. An error by Jayhawk right fielder Jim Heeney scored all three runners and put right fielder Dwayne Belcher on third. Teague doubled to score Belcher, putting K-State on top 5-4.

The Jayhawks scored a run in each of the fifth and sixth innings, while the Wildcats picked up four more in their half of the sixth.

KU TIED the game at 9-all in the top of the seventh, scoring three runs. The game remained tied until the ninth inning, when Wildcat center fielder Don Grause singled to lead off the inning. Grause took second on a ground out by Simmons but Belcher failed to advance him, flying out to center for the second out. That brought up Teague, who rapped a single to bring Grause home with the winning run.

K-State is now 17-14 for the season and 1-9 in the Big Eight. KU is 14-15 overall, 6-7 in the conference.

"guinea pig" in the 1,500-meter run, which she finished fifth with a time of 4:33.69.

"We tried something different," he said, "and sent her out faster in the first 100-yards than she usually does."

Donna King was also a top performer in the women's division. She place second in the 100-meter dash with a time of 11.33.

Other top K-State finishes went to Mike Bradley, Gregg Bartlett and Ray Hansen.

It was a battle between Kansans in the 400-meter dash as Bradley ran to the finish line with a time of 46.48. He followed Deon Hogan of KU to the wire who finished with a time of 46.24.

In the shot put competition, Bartlett threw the shot 62-5¼ to take top honors among the collegiate competitors. He placed second behind Janis Bojars from the Soviet Union who heaved the shot at 68-7¼.

K-State showed strength in the javelin competition with three athletes finishing with the top four spots. Hansen finished second with a throw of 232-0. He was followed by Donnie McKinnis, with a throw of 229-8 and freshman Gary Arpin who ended the scoring with a fourth place finish of 213-1.

THE MEN'S MILE RELAY TEAM finished in second place with a time of 3:11.71.

Throughout the race, K-State was trailing KU and it was obvious that the anchor leg would be a rematch of the 400-meter race held earlier in the day. Bradley challenged Hogan the entire distance but the victory for the last race went to KU with a time of 3:11.47.

Bryan Carroll finished third in the 500-meter run behind a duo from Colorado, Mark Scrutton and Mick Bannister. Carroll's time was 14:30.85 and Scrutton's and Bannister's times were 14:20.19 and 14:27.59 respectively.

Also finishing third was Kelly Wenlock in the long jump. She leaped 20-7 behind Tudie McKnight who leaped 21-7½ and Thacker of Nebraska who jumped 21-5.

With a throw of 58-7½, Andy Gillam captured fourth place in the shot put. Bartlett threw the discus 174-4 to finish fifth in that event. Another K-State athlete, Darrell Wait, finished fifth in the high jump with a leap of 7 feet.

Three other K-State athletes qualified for the finals in their individual events. Michelle Maxey participated in the 400-meter dash and finished fifth with a time of 57.17.

Erin Ficke and Jack McDonald competed in the women's and men's 800-meter runs. In the women's division, Ficke placed seventh with a time of 2:14.52.

McDonald finished eighth in the men's division of the 800-meter run with a time of 1:55.7. Dave Uhrich of Marquette took top honors with a time of 1:51.9.

K-State rowers win one event in Topeka race

The K-State Crew experienced tougher competition than expected over the weekend, as the University of Kansas totally dominated the rowing regatta in Topeka on Saturday. KU won six of the nine events. K-State, Washburn University and Wichita State University each won one event.

K-State's lone victory came to the men's varsity four team, which is undefeated in its races this year.

"KU has a good rowing program going," Wildcat coach Pete Hamma said. "They're one of the best around here. "It was pretty tough — they (KU) were waiting on us," he added.

The Wildcats will head to Madison, Wis., on Thursday to participate in the Midwest Regionals.

Soviet

Dial, Oklahoma State's all-time best pole vaulter and the 1982 Relays winner, and Buckingham, this year's NCAA Indoor Champion, found the winds too wretched as they battled to keep themselves in the race with the other vaulters.

No matter what the two did, neither could keep the pace up as both finished with record jumps of 18-0, still shattering the 1980 Relays record of 17-8 set by Brad Parsley of Abilene Christian.

With Dial and Buckingham gone, Lytle had a chance to make a name for himself as he battled the Soviet's Krupsky. For Lytle, the war paid off as he soared to a record and personal best of 18-4.

Even though Lytle finished second to Krupsky — both cleared 18-4 but Lytle had more misses — his performance was phenomenal. While going for the 18-8 jump, Lytle almost pulled off an upset as he barely missed in all of his tries.

Both performers missed their first attempt at cracking the 18-8 barrier, Lytle missing only because of a foot which hit the top of the bar.

The second attempt didn't get any better as both performers launched over the bar only to find themselves and the steel pole lying on the mat.

According to Lytle, reaching the 18-0 barrier was a confidence builder.

"It naturally felt good to clear 18 feet," Lytle said. "I went to KU for training sessions and I felt I had some good sessions. I've been frustrated all season long with the weather. I knew it would be a matter of time when we would get good weather and I would jump well."

LYTLE SAID that fatigue was the reason for him not making the 18-8 mark.

"With each jump I was getting more tired. I thought that I had the bar beat. The confidence was there but I guess I just ran out of juice," he said.

Even though Buckingham finished third, Lytle said he was surprised at the performance of the Soviet athlete and Buckingham.

"I didn't expect him (Krupsky) to be ready as early as he was," he said. "For them, this would be the indoor season and I have already competed in the indoor season.

"Going into the meet, I felt that my strongest competition would come from Jeff (Buckingham)," Lytle added. "I felt that Jeff was the man to beat. We both practiced together and we were clearing the bar at 18 feet. I think what happened with Jeff was that he started off hot but ended up poor at the end."

THE FEAT gave Lytle more to look forward to in the remaining K-State meets. He said the mark has changed his attitude toward future meets.

"My attitude was different in the indoor season," he said. "I was more prepared to jump this weekend. I was a lot more confident. Before I was concerned about what would go wrong. I would let the outside factors get to me. On Saturday, I didn't let that happen. Because of that, I was much more aggressive."

Besides Krupsky, the Soviet Union not only caused problems for K-State athletes but for the rest of the country's collegiates as they proved their strength in all phases of the Relays, setting seven meet records.

The men's triple jump team of Nikolai Musyenko and Gennady Valyukevich were unstoppable as both finished 1-2 in the event. Musyenko's jump of 55-9¼ broke the old mark set by Keith Connor of Southern Methodist University last year. His jump was two feet longer than Vaylukevich and six feet longer than the closest American athlete, Tom Webb of Wichita State.

Softball

an error all day and we got hits when we needed them."

Saturday's replay with the Gorrillas and the Shockers was closer than the previous matchups. K-State kicked the day off against Pittsburg State in the same style as Friday's, this time winning the contest by a 2-1 margin.

Scoles got K-State's scoring going in the second inning as she tripled. She then scored the 'Cats' first run on a sacrifice fly to left field. K-State was unsuccessful from then on as Pittsburg State's pitcher retired the next three batters.

The Gorrillas held the Wildcats until the seventh inning. That's when the 'Cats' Wasinger scored the winning run on a walk.

Anderson picked up the victory for K-State. In seven innings, she gave up one run on five hits.

K-State's finale with Wichita State was a little tougher as it escaped with a 2-1 victory.

The second and fifth innings were the reasons for K-State's win.

In the second inning, Scoles opened the inning with a single. Rufener flew out and Borders grounded out to put runners at third base with two outs. Wasinger again saved the Wildcats as she singled in Scoles.

Wasinger didn't stop in the second inning. Her power kept the Shockers reeling as she singled at the start of the fifth inning, setting up the 'Cats' final run of the day.

Wasinger was the leading hitter for K-State. In four games, the outfielder pounded out 5-10 hits for a 50 percent accuracy.

The Wildcats, 11-11 on the season, will take a breather before heading to Norman, Okla., to participate in the Big Eight Championships Friday and Saturday.

New book reveals Nazi dictator's hypochondria

And to get rid of a ringing in his ears, he allowed his personal physician, Dr. Theodor Morell, to use leeches.

According to a new book by David Irving, the British author who contends that Hitler has been treated unfairly by historians, Morell sometimes administered 10 shots a day. Most were glucose solutions and vitamin mixtures. Some contained liver extract and testosterone, a male sex hormone.

According to Morell's diaries, Hitler was injected with cocaine and adrenaline for conjunctivitis and belladonna and strychnine for gas. He was given 10 different painkillers and sedatives, including Eukodal, a synthetic morphine derivative.

By 1944, Morell had trouble injecting Hitler because he couldn't find areas without needle scars.

"The Secret Diaries of Hitler's Doctor" will be published June 15 by the Macmillan Publishing Co. It is based on the diaries and reports of the German doctor who attended Hitler from 1937-45.

"What doctors will find quite interesting is that in the last two weeks of Adolf Hitler's life, he was subject to a terrible tremor in his arms and legs and doctors have long squabbled about the cause," Irving said in a telephone interview from London.

"DURING THOSE last two weeks, he was given Homburg 680 in rapidly increasing amounts and Harmin. Those are indicated for Parkinson's disease. It doesn't mean Hitler had it."

Dr. Leonard Heston, a University of Minnesota psychiatrist, concluded in a 1979 study that Hitler's trembling was a toxic reaction to amphetamines he was getting from Morell.

Irving studied physics and mathematics at London University. He worked in the German steel industry because he wanted to learn the language, and later worked for the U.S. Strategic Air Command in Spain. His first book, "The Destruction of Dresden," was published in 1963.

In "Hitler's War," published in 1977, Irving wrote that Hitler did not order the massacre of Jews and did not even know about it until very late in the war.

OF HIS LATEST WORK, Irving said, "I was very astonished to see a man of such intelligence submit to medication on a grand scale and experiment with things like leeches at this most important time in his life.

"This book will reopen the controversy as to whether Morell was advanced for his time or was a charlatan and quack. He had a patient on his hands who had acute hypochondria. He gives him injections as a kind of placebo."

"Hitler didn't want a no-nonsense doctor. He wanted a doctor fussing over him. He was rather child-like in that way. But whenever a serious crisis was indicated, like the coronary sclerosis, Morell turned to an expert."

Heart disease was diagnosed in August 1941, according to the book. Morell was summoned to Hitler one day and found his face "deathly white." The dictator complained of a ringing in his ears. Morell ordered leeches, and made a small incision under the ear.

"THE FUHRER himself shook the leeches out of the jar," Morell wrote. "I had to apply them with my fingers, as they slithered out of the forceps."

The buzzing in the ear abated. Days later, Morell ordered an electrocardiogram, and called in a heart specialist who diagnosed coronary sclerosis — a potentially lethal

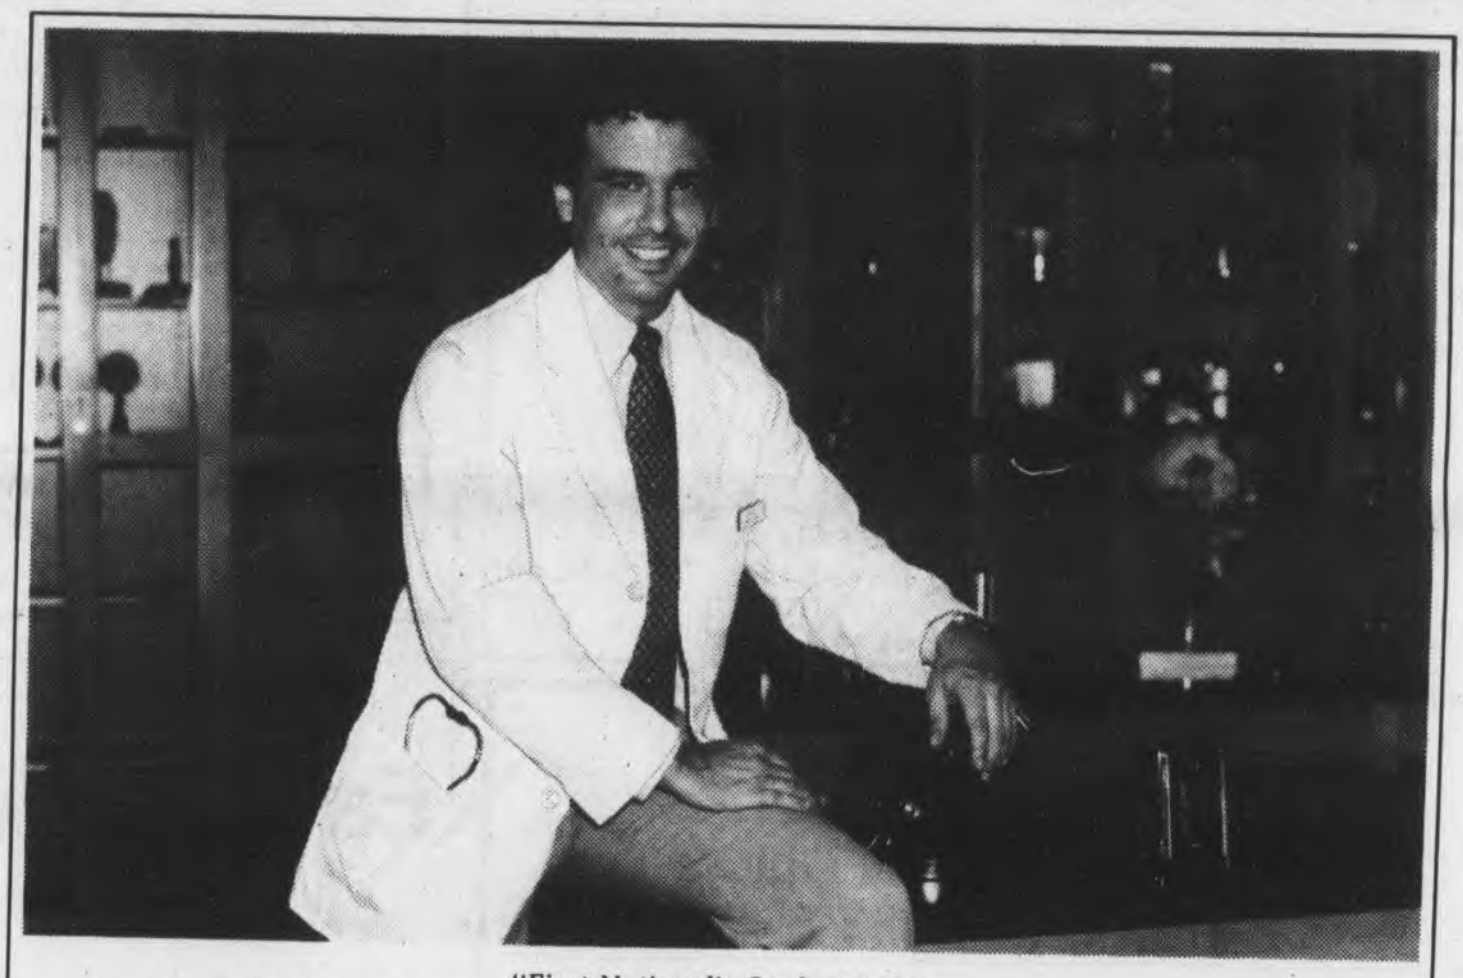
Experts debate validity of Hitler's diaries

LONDON (AP) — The publication of excerpts purportedly from Adolf Hitler's diaries has set off a debate among historians who insist the papers are authentic and experts and former Hitler aides who believe it is one of history's most elaborate frauds.

The Sunday Times of London published selections from the 60 diaries in which the Nazi dictator speaks with contempt of his propaganda chief Joseph Goebbels, of SS commander Heinrich Himmler and of other Third Reich figures and suggests that Europe's Jews "should be sent to sea and the boats sunk."

Hitler's attempt to exterminate the Jews led to the death of 6 million in Nazi concentration camps during World War II.

The West German magazine Stern, which originally acquired the diaries along with hundreds of other documents and unpublished book manuscripts purportedly by Hitler, is to publish excerpts on Monday.



Two of Hitler's personal aides were quoted Sunday as saying the bound notebooks — said to have been found in a plane wreck by a German army officer and hidden in his hayloft for 35 years — are fakes, according to the Hamburg weekly Bild Am Sonntag.

"The discovery of Hitler's alleged diaries is one of the many fairy-tale lies that we have known since the war," said Hitler's Luftwaffe adjutant Nicolas von Below, according to Bild Am Sonntag.

"We often sat until three or four at night and Hitler would then go to bed. He had no more time to write."

Another aide quoted by the paper, Richard Schulze-Kossens, asked, "When

"First National's Student Loan Program not only helped put me through Washburn, but it's staying with me at medical school. My student loan means even more to me now because the tremendous classroom schedule and study load doesn't leave any time for a part-time job at med school. defect that could produce the chest pains of angina pectoris or an embolism.

"This explains why Hitler developed this frantic haste to get things done," Irving said. "He knew he might suffer an angina and blot out."

In 1944, Morell told Hitler that if he had been attended by a 'normal' doctor he "would have been off the job for so long that the Reich would have gone to the dogs because of it."

"I HAVE HAD to go right to the limits of the permissible," Morell told his patient, "even though I might be condemned by many of my colleagues for so doing."

Morell, whose diaries are now in the National Archives in Washington, had served as a battalion medic during World War I and then later as an army doctor in a prison camp. He married a wealthy actress, Johanna Moller.

In 1936, his movie contacts introduced him to Hitler's personal photographer. Morell cured the photographer of a venereal disease and soon developed a relationship with Hitler.

When Morell first began to treat him, Hitler had stomach problems and eczema. Over the years he suffered gastrointestinal problems and tremors in his hands and leg. He also was treated for sinus trouble, jaundice and swollen tonsils.

Diaries

could Hitler have written these 60 diaries?"

The Sunday Times said the diaries had been authenticated by a team of scientists and handwriting experts. Another person who examined the material and judged it authentic was historian Hugh Trevor-Roper, the man sent by British Prime Minister Winston Churchill in 1945 to confirm the circumstances of the dictator's death.

He told reporters Sunday that there was always the "possibility that the diaries were forged," but said their quantity and range means "it would have been a very difficult operation."

The Sunday Times said Stern magazine's discovery of the diaries was the culmination of an investigation by 51-year-old Hamburg journalist Gerd Heinemann. He located the former German officer who'd hidden the material after finding it in a plane. The plane is said to have taken Hitler's papers out of Berlin on April 21, 1945, 10 days before Hitler's suicide, as the Soviet army closed in on the German capital.

A 1956 diary by Gen. Hans Baur, Hitler's personal pilot, records that when told of the crash, Hitler exclaimed: "In that plane were all my private archives, what I had intended as a testimony for posterity. It is a catastrophe!"

West German historian Werner Maser said Hitler was plagued by nerve ailments toward the end of his life, and that his right arm was badly damaged by the bomb that nearly killed him in July 1944.

"He was hardly in the position to write something down with his own hand," Maser said. "He had to prop up the underarm and hold the right hand with the left to prevent excessive trembling."

Ticket sales disappoint Jett concert sponsors

Ticket sales were a sorry disappointment for the Joan Jett/Huey Lewis concert Friday night. A total of 4,385 tickets were sold, according to Mike Hatch, Union Program Council program director.

To break even on costs for the concert, at least 1,000 more should have been sold. Barbara Burke, UPC advisor, had estimated earlier that 5,500 tickets of the 9,300 available needed to be sold.

As of Friday about 4,000 tickets were sold, but 450 tickets were sold at the door, Hatch said. He isn't sure how much UPC lost on the concert.

"We're not really sure at this point how much we lost," Hatch said, "We have to see how much the facilities bill is."

Joan Jett and the Blackhearts came a day early to practice for the concert and so workmen had to be paid an extra day.

Hatch finds it hard to attribute the cause for low ticket sales.

"We were a little bit surprised that the college crowd didn't come; it was heavy on non-students," Hatch said, adding that most of the tickets sold at the door were to non-students.

Jett has had trouble selling tickets "at all her college dates," Hatch said. The appearance of Joan Jett and the Blackhearts along with Shooting Star and Modern English at the Hawkstock concert at the University of Kansas has been canceled because of low ticket sales. Currently, only Huey Lewis and the News and The Fabulous Thunderbirds will perform at the Sunday concert.

million during the five-day cleanup session, including the severance tax on oil, gas coal and salt which will pump $97 million into the treasury and an income tax hike which will add $42 million, plus $24.8 million increases in cigarette and liquor taxes.

The Senate voted 24-15 for the compromise highway funding package after a dinner break Sunday night, during which Carlin and GOP leaders worked to persuade more Democrats to support the package.

After a 20-20 tie on the bill in late afternoon, two more Democrats and three more Republicans voted for it the second time around.

Those who switched were Democrats Norma Daniels of Valley Center and Jerry Karr of Emporia and Republicans Paul Burke of Leawood, Joseph Harder of Moundridge and Don Montgomery of Sabetha.

Sen. Norman Gaar of Westwood, who voted for it Sunday afternoon, was absent for the night vote.

There was no debate or discussion on the major new highway funding proposal the second time around in the Senate, after Karr moved for reconsideration.

Senate passage broke a logjam which had prevented the Legislature from adjourning Saturday night, forcing a rare Sunday meeting to finish the work.

Carlin agreed in mid-afternoon Sunday to accept the new compromise worked out primarily by Sen. Fred Kerr, R-Pratt, and accepted by other members of a conference committee which had been striving three days to try to get an acceptable agreement.

It included raising the state's motor fuel taxes by two cents a gallon in July and by a third cent in January, plus an indexing system which probably will tack on another penny to the tax in July of 1985.

Carlin accepts motor fuel tax as compromise

Claims Republicans demanded measure

TOPEKA (AP) — Gov. John Carlin said Monday he accepted a motor fuel tax increase as part of a new highway funding package without regard to its potential political liability because the majority Republicans in the Legislature wouldn't adopt the desperately needed program without it.

Whether it means that he or GOP legislators will feel the wrath of voters at some future election only time will tell, the Democratic governor told a news conference a day after the highway finance plan passed the Legislature.

But he said he's comfortable with his decision to accept the gasoline tax hike, which will amount to 2 cents a gallon in July, another cent next January and probably a fourth cent in July 1985 under an indexing system which will increase the tax as the price of the fuel goes up.

Development of a program to rehabilitate the state's crumbling roads which is visible to the public will dictate the political pluses and minuses, Carlin said.

"People are willing to pay taxes, for the most part, if they see results," he told reporters. "The key will be whether they see results. Given some time, I believe the story will be, as I've always believed, that good government is good politics."

Carlin paid tribute at his day-after news conference to a half-dozen legislators of both parties as being instrumental in getting through the program which will put $171 million more into the state highway fund over the next three fiscal years, and at least $59 million a year thereafter.

HE CITED House Democratic Leader Fred Weaver of Baxter Springs, for "holding the Democrats together," and Republican Sens. Robert Talkington of Iola and Fred Kerr of Pratt, because "without them we just wouldn't have been able to put this package together."

Talkington, Senate Majority Leader and chairman of the Senate Transportation and Utilities Committee, and Kerr, chairman of the Senate Agriculture and Small Business Committee, were members of the highway funding conference committee and put together the final compromise which was

Motorcycle issue tops discussion at traffic hearing

Questions about the overcharge for motorcycle parking permits dominated a public hearing on Traffic and Parking regulations Monday in the Union Big Eight Room.

The hearing was held to give anyone concerned a chance to ask questions and voice opinions on proposed changes in traffic and parking regulations, although the actual changes did not generate much discussion among the 20 people attending.

If the Traffic and Parking council approves the regulations, they will be submitted to the Kansas Board of Regents for approval, where they are routinely passed, Helen Cooper, designated hearing officer for University Facilities, said.

Paul Mulcahy, graduate in computer science, was concerned with the clerical mistake made in motorcycle parking permits which cost students $20 instead of $10 and whether there would be refunds given.

Cooper said the University will ask for legal opinions from the University attorney and the regents staff attorney, although Mulcahy said he believes the issue is more of a moral question than a legal one.

Mulcahy said Bill Kaufman, regents staff attorney, knew nothing about the error and would check into it. The University could give refunds to those who were overcharged, but will not take the initiative, Mulcahy said, because of the time it would take to go through the channels to be approved.

If a student makes a mistake and gets a ticket, for example, his transcripts can be withheld or he may not be allowed to enroll until it is paid, Mulcahy said. "But if they (the University) screw up, they don't do anything to correct it. They don't take the initiative, but leave it up to the students."

Cooper said because "the $20 went through the whole procedure and was never questioned by anyone," it might be considered a regular proposal, in which case, there would be no refunds given. Either way, the new cost will be $5 per semester under the proposed regulations.

In other matters, Security and Traffic Chief Art Stone reaffirmed that bicycles are not allowed in University buildings because of the maintenance required to clean up after them and the chance that many would then be parked in the halls.

Instead of making any exceptions to faculty, no one is allowed to have bicycles anywhere in the buildings, Stone said.

Departments compete for funding from Fine Arts Council

(Editor's note: This is the second of two articles dealing with the Fine Arts Council and its members.)

By LINDA GROSS
Staff Writer

The music department would like to see the status quo remain; so would the speech department. Combined, the two receive 67 percent of the funds allocated by the Fine Arts Council.

But other groups are not as content with the allocations.

Charles Stroh, head of the art department, said, "Visual arts programming could be as expensive as music or theater if top exhibits were brought in.

"(The art department) can only bring in minor exhibits because the Fine Arts Council doesn't use zero-based budgeting, which means we must predicate our next year's budget on last year's," he added.

Stroh explained the overall problem which the smaller groups such as art, architecture, dance, Ebony Theater and the minority cultural programs must face. "Our needs are based on how much we are going to receive rather than on what those needs really are," he said.

Luke Kalich, assistant professor in dance, said, "Of course, theater and music are much larger programs, but you can't have a large program unless you have the money."

Dance, which has been been part of the FAC since 1976, receives 5 percent of the FAC fund.

"WE (DANCE DEPARTMENT) can only afford to perform twice a year," Kalich said. "It costs the department approximately $800 to rent McCain for each performance and that doesn't include costumes, sets, printing and advertising.

"The public sees the dancers perform twice a year and think of them like birthdays — once it's over they forget we're here."

Audience attendance is one argument the larger groups use in making their case for priority funding. The audience that a group can attract is an important factor in deciding the best use of FAC funds, John Chalmers, professor of finance and former vice president of academic affairs, said.

Music and theater cultivate audience attendance in a way other groups would like to be able to do. Numbers are on their side, simply with more theater and music events to attend.

ROD WALKER, assistant professor of music, estimated that the choral groups perform approximately 50 to 55 times during the year. Jack Flouer, professor of music, estimated that 50 to 60 performances are given by the symphony and theater orchestras, wind ensemble, concert band, lab bands and jazz ensembles.

Audience support is also built through advertising and promotion. K-State Players budgeted $2,000 for its programs this year, while art budgeted $50.

A third factor in the audience support is McCain Auditorium, where the majority of music and theater productions are held. According to Norma Bunton, head of the speech department and adviser for K-State Players, McCain "demands a certain amount of money be spent."

The productions put on by music and speech tend to be large-scale performances which demand not only a certain amount of money be spent but also commands attention.

THE QUESTION of relative costs is also brought up when discussing the distribution of funds.

Bunton said the K-State Players "costs are greater" than other FAC groups.

One costume can cost as much as $350, with sets costing between $1,000 and $3,500. Bunton explained the cost of one play can run into the thousands. "Bedroom Farce" ran Oct. 7-9, costing $3,380, and "Cabaret" ran Nov. 18-20, costing $9,060.

Commencements to honor nearly 4,000 grads

Graduation ceremonies are scheduled for May 13 and 14 and in addition to the All-University Commencement at 9 a.m. May 14 in KSU Stadium, there will be nine other separate ceremonies.

The first two will occur Friday, May 13, in McCain Auditorium when students receiving masters and doctoral degrees will be honored at 2 p.m. and those receiving Veterinary Medicine degrees will be recognized at 4 p.m.

Individual colleges will hold their ceremonies May 14, following All-University Commencement.

Nearly 4,000 names will be listed in this year's commencement program. Included will be the names of 1,634 who have completed degrees since last May, and about 2,300 others who are candidates for degrees this spring.

The "Charge to the Class," at both the graduate exercise on May 13 and All-University the following day, will be delivered by President Duane Acker.

One honorary doctorate will be conferred at the All-University service to Roy Bainer, a 1926 K-State graduate who has since earned an international reputation in the field of agricultural engineering.

Also to be awarded at the All-University exercises are four "excellence in undergraduate teaching" awards of $1,000 and three "Alumni Medallions." A Distinguished Graduate Faculty Award of $1,000 will be presented May 13 at the graduate exercises.

Persons planning to attend the All-University exercise May 14 should park on the west side of KSU Stadium and sit in the west stands.

In the event of inclement weather, the All-University exercise will be canceled and awards planned for the exercises will be made at appropriate college exercises later in the day. The arts and sciences exercises, scheduled to follow the All-University exercise in KSU Stadium, would be rescheduled for 3 p.m. in Ahearn Field House if the weather is bad.

College of Engineering rain plan calls for postponing its 1 p.m. ceremonies until 3 p.m. when it can be held in McCain. Announcements concerning cancellations will be made on radio stations KMAN (1350 AM) and WIBW (Topeka 580 AM).

The schedule for the undergraduate college exercises on May 14: (immediately following the All-University ceremony) — College of Arts and Sciences, KSU Stadium.

11 a.m. — College of Architecture and Design, Union Forum Hall.

11 a.m. — College of Business Administration, Ahearn Field House.

11 a.m. — College of Education, McCain Auditorium.

1 p.m. — College of Engineering, KSU Stadium.

1 p.m. — College of Agriculture, Ahearn Field House.

Dog lovers surrender after holding hostages

NORWICH, N.Y. — A heavily armed couple who held 16 people hostage Monday and demanded the return of their 43 dogs surrendered after a day-long siege in a county office building, authorities said.

The pair entered the Chenango County Office Building at about 9:20 a.m. and took the hostages, demanding the return of the dogs taken from them two years ago by animal control officials, police said. Two of the dogs were returned to the couple during the standoff.

Sheriff Moe Eccleston said no one was injured and the Gladstones surrendered peacefully shortlty after 5:30 p.m. They were ushered out a back door, and the two dogs were returned to their owners.

Lawrence B. Gladstone, 49, and Christine Gladstone, 31, of nearby Preston, were arraigned on a charge of first-degree kidnapping before Norwich City Court Judge Howard Sullivan. He remanded them to the Chenango County Jail without bail pending a preliminary hearing Friday. The court papers charge them with holding "about 15" people hostage.

New comic book heroes conquer drug abuse

WASHINGTON — "Skree! Blam! Foom!" The White House presents a special issue of "The New Teen Titans," a comic book about super-heroes who vanquish drug abuse.

The comic book, produced by DC Comics of New York and underwritten by the Keebler Co., was unveiled Monday as a new tool to help prevent drug use among fourth graders.

In a cover letter, Nancy Reagan tells the youngsters: "Don't let anyone tell you that you can't be a hero ... Declare that you will stay drug-free. At any cost ... And you'll be a hero — to your mother and father, family and friends, but most of all, to yourself."

The comic book is built around the heroic exploits of the "The New Teen Titans" characters. A new character called "The Protector," a troubled teenager trying to atone for his drug-ridden past, was created especially for this issue entitled "Plague."

The comic is being distributed by the Education Department to an estimated one million fourth-graders in 35,000 schools. That amounts to about 40 percent of the nation's fourth-graders.

Officials to seal off dioxin-tainted community

TIMES BEACH, Mo. — Plans are being made to seal off all but one entrance to this dioxin-tainted community to protect outsiders from the town and the town from looters, officials said Monday.

"We're going to cut off all outside traffic," said Laine Jumper, an aide to acting Mayor Marilyn Leistner. "Passes will be issued only to property owners and to the two businesses that are still operating.

"We'll issue temporary passes to those with legitimate business, but we are no longer an open town."

Jumper said officials, prompted by the almost lackadaisical response to health officials' warnings to avoid the area, decided to seal off the town. Sightseers, reporters and curiosity-seekers have passed through since freak December floods ravaged the area.

Jumper said the mayor issued the order to close the town under emergency powers spelled out in state law.

Two dead, 21 arrested as result of feud

SAN JACINTO, Calif. — Twenty-one people have been arrested following the ambush slayings of a brother and sister on an Indian reservation, and authorities said Monday the violence stemmed from a feud that began more than 10 years ago.

Marco Mojado, 32, and his sister, Fawn Vasquez, 26, were killed in a volley of gunfire as they drove to church in separate cars Saturday on the Soboba Indian Reservation in the San Jacinto Valley.

Shots also were fired at Riverside County sheriff's deputies patrolling the area because of an earlier shooting, but none was hit, Lt. Tim Botts said.

Fidelia Salgado, who lives on the reservation, said the feud dates back to 1970 when another resident, Steve Modesto, was shot and killed at a New Year's Eve Party.

Brooke Shields to enter Princeton, report says

PRINCETON, N.J. — The Princeton University student newspaper reported Monday that actress Brooke Shields has been admitted to the Ivy League school.

University officials refused to confirm The Daily Princetonian report, but editor Daniel Irom said Sunday night the story was based on reports from sources and on-the-record comments by two students at the Dwight Englewood School, the private Englewood, N.J., high school that Shields attends.

The Daily Princetonian has conducted a "Brookewatch," updating students on news of the 17-year-old teen-age movie actress and model and has said Princeton is her first choice.

The associate dean of admissions, Spencer Reynolds, told The Daily Princetonian that the admissions dean, James Wickenden, had made a decision on Shield's application personally, Irom said.

Weather

There's eight days left, of classes that is, and if the weather stays nice, we'll have a good fizz. (We don't understand either, but with temperatures in the 70s, who cares?) The low should be around 50.

Battle for funds is far from over

The battle has stopped, but the war is far from over.

The Kansas Legislature ended its session Sunday after 95 days. While many legislators expressed relief after the session ended, many wonder what the lawmakers' actions will mean to the state.

On the positive side, a severance tax on oil, gas, coal and salt — the first of its kind for the state — was passed after a spirited debate. A new rape law was passed, bringing Kansas into the 20th century. A law to increase the penalty for manufacturing or using a fake identification card was passed.

In addition, a $21.2 million appropriation to the state's universities and the Kansas Technical Institute to pay for increased utility costs was passed, and an attempt to raise the legal drinking age from 18 to 21 was defeated in a House committee.

However, the Legislature failed to allow Kansans the right to vote on liquor by the drink and pari-mutuel betting. The state's property tax system was left in its troubled state. Education bore the brunt of the budget cuts. Students at the state's regents universities will pay about 20 percent more for their education, with more increases planned for the future.

In addition, the regents schools will be forced to lay off personnel in an attempt to balance their budgets. The draining of top faculty by private industry has accelerated. Services — some cut to the bone already — will have to be cut even more. These services may include reduced library hours, paying for syllabi, reduced building maintenance, etc.

"We started the session with several priorities, foremost the severance tax and education," said Bill Hoch, Gov. John Carlin's chief of staff. "The governor is certainly pleased that the severance tax will become law, but the governor is disappointed that more couldn't be accomplished for education. That has to be one of our top priorities for next year."

Education must become the top priority for next year. Otherwise, there may be no "program" left to finance.

Point(s) of view

The media takes a lot of flack due to so-called inaccuracies in reported stories. Some of it is warranted — we all make mistakes — some is not.

A survey, compiled by a group of non-journalism students for a class project, reported the least trusted of all the news media are the newspapers.

Perhaps the reason newspapers are accused of so many errors is they directly quote much of what is said by other people whose facts or ideas are inaccurate. They also report much of what happens at an event from people who were there at the time. The public then takes it as truth; and when they find out it is not, the newspaper is blamed.

Many times reporters are accused of misquoting people, which I'm sure does happen. But many times people don't think about what they say. When it comes out in print and they aren't portrayed well, they get upset. Understandably, nobody likes to look bad. But it doesn't mean the person was misquoted.

According to Dill, a person running for the Wichita City Council said in an interview the high unemployment problem in Wichita was due to the lack of laser production plants, which could have been recruited a few years ago. A few days later, Dill said, she overheard a conversation repeating the same philosophy the candidate had expressed.

Her point is that people must stop and analyze what they read in the paper. They must sort the good from the bad, the true from the untrue. And then, before repeating the idea as true or blaming the paper or reporter for printing false information (or even ideas), they must look at the source of the information. Who said it? Was the person who said it important enough to print the quote, even if his ideas were possibly false? In the case of the council candidate, her platform was based on such ideas — wasn't it the duty of the newspaper to educate the readers that this was the idea of the candidate?

THE PURPOSE OF A NEWSPAPER is not to report only facts, but to report those whose ideas and action affect the public which the newspaper serves.

Let's face it — people's ideas, even their ideas of what is true and false, differ. What seems stupid to you may make perfect sense to someone else.

People also see things differently. A simple event can be described many different ways, and still be accurate from one point of view. It's sort of like deciding if a glass of water is half full or half empty.

What you, as the reader of a newspaper or viewer of a news broadcast, must do is learn to listen and read with an open mind. You must take what you see and hear, sift through it, analyze it, and then make your own decision as to what did happen, what's true or false, what's a good idea (or a bad one).

This is not an easy task. The only way to do it well is to expose yourself to as many different types of media as possible. Learn what news is most accurate in which newspaper. I would be inclined to believe a story I read about the government in the Washington Post, more than the same type of story I read in the New York Times, simply because the Post is on the spot. Chances are better it got the information first hand.

TELEVISION NEWSCASTERS acquire reputations, too. The way some people talk, you'd think Dan Rather and Abe Lincoln were brothers. But, they have a point. If he says it, I'd believe it.

The idea here is not what I believe, or what your friend believes, but what you believe. People make mistakes; they often don't mean to, but they do.

People make wrong judgment calls. They think and speak too quickly; they see what they want to (or what they think they should have), and then report it to the press.

The people and the press are one. We get our stories from people and their ideas. We get information about what we can't or don't see from people — people who sometimes see things their own way.

Don't get me wrong. I am not passing the buck. Newspapers make mistakes, and sometimes the mistakes are big ones; other times they go unnoticed. But not all blame lies with the press, the press' sources and the audience — the public, also, needs to see the forest through the trees.

'Say it ain't so,' folks

Editor,

When I discovered I would have to pay $20 for a permit to park my motorcycle, I thought this fee increase to be rather unreasonable, if not altogther surprising. Now, I find the big increase was due to a typing error, which was eventually noticed but could not be corrected for technical/bureaucratic reasons.

I have some difficulty accepting such reasoning. At the very least, it should be possible for the powers that be to extend the validity of the permit for another year, thereby compensating those of us remaining at K-State for the overcharge (though this solution still is not fair to those who leave).

What disturbs me most, however, is the claim that our Board of Regents is incapable of correcting such a simple mistake in less than six months' time. If this claim is false, it seems the board is due an apology for such an almost libelous statement. On the other hand, if the allegation should indeed be true, then — heaven help us. How can any real problems (of which we have plenty) be solved by such an unwieldy machine?

Somebody say it ain't so.

Forums provide insight to Russia

Editor,

Virtually everyone wants to avoid a nuclear war. At the moment there are two major competing strategies concerning what the United States should do toward that end.

One, represented by the Reagan Administration, is to massively build up our nuclear arsenal and to deploy, among other things, a first-strike (MX) delivery system. The other, represented by the Freeze Movement, is to bilaterally stop development, production and deployment of new nuclear weapons, and then try to negotiate a reduction on both sides.

Which of these is the better plan depends in part upon the Russians. How do they perceive us and how would they react to each of these strategies? What is their history? What are their plans? What are their hopes? Their fears? Their strengths? Their weaknesses? In short, what makes them tick?

These are, of course, very difficult questions to answer and, unfortunately, most of us don't have the chance to easily acquire knowledge to help answer them. But now we have the opportunity! Three experts on Soviet affairs, Joseph Hajda, associate professor in political science, Jacob Kipp, associate professor in history, and T. Alden Williams, professor in political science, have agreed to share their expertise through short talks and discussions about the Russians and their policies. These will occur on Wednesday and Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in Room 208 of the Union.

I urge anyone who believes the avoidance of nuclear war is of fundamental importance to attend these talks, to ask questions and to become informed. In this case, ignorance is not bliss — except possibly in the context of blissful annihilation.

Nurses 'rude'

Editor,

I have had it with Lafene Student Health Center.

Last week, I needed to have a physical performed. I was in and out of Lafene everyday in the process. My physical was in-depth and involved a lot of work.

What upsets me is the attitude of the nursing staff. I found the nurses rude, arrogant and occasionally incompetent. The nurses seem to forget they are the employees of the students. I also spent entirely too much time in the waiting room.

On a final note, the doctor that worked with me did a very good job. All the doctors at Lafene are excellent and do good work.

Panel expresses skepticism about Reagan missile plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration's attempts to spur major reductions in Soviet land-based missiles have "virtually no chance" at the bargaining table, a Carnegie panel said Monday.

The bipartisan group also expressed reservations about a nuclear freeze, saying that could prove a "two-edged sword" by precluding the development of weapons which actually could enhance strategic balance.

The Kremlin's rigid bureaucracy, wedded to long-term military planning, is highly unlikely to agree to radically reduce the heavy intercontinental ballistic missiles which account for about 75 per cent of Soviet nuclear strength, said the report.

BUT WHILE IMPLICITLY criticizing the administration's proposals for a strategic arms reduction treaty and its stress on air-tight verification procedures, the panel said the Soviets may be willing to accept more limited restrictions on nuclear weapons.

"While (Leonid) Brezhnev's passing and Yuri Andropov's accession to the top post produced some tentative signs of shifts in Soviet policy at home and abroad, there were no signs that the new leadership would reverse course in arms control," the report said.

It was prepared by the Carnegie Endowment's Panel on U.S. Security and the Future of Arms Control. The chairmen were William G. Hyland, a leading analyst on Soviet affairs in the Nixon and Ford administrations, and Joseph S. Nye Jr., a security specialist under President Carter.

The report cautioned against freeze proposals that might tempt one side to strike first and said making deep cuts in nuclear arsenals would not necessarily reduce the risk of war.

"Small numbers of weapons could invite preemption or create uncertainties about the perceived stability of the military balance," it said.

WHILE THERE IS wide public support for some sort of freeze, the panel said freezing technology could be a "two-edged sword." While some threatening systems would be stopped a freeze could also prevent such developments as the Stealth bomber or a new singlewarhead, land-based missile that many experts consider the best approach to ICBM stability, the report said.

At the same time, the panel said that while there is "persuasive evidence" that the Soviets have violated treaties banning biological weapons, they are not the "dedicated arms cheaters" that critics accuse them of being.

The Soviets "press at the ambiguities" of the 1972 treaty limiting strategic nuclear weapons but the record "does not show any case of deliberate violations of agreed limits," the panel said.

Assessing various arms control plans, the report favored those that would eliminate multiple-warhead intercontinental ballistic missiles. Converting them to single-warhead missiles "greatly reduces the incentive to strike that force in a crisis," the panel said.

Pioneer 10 capsule passes Pluto's orbit on endless journey

MOUNTAIN VIEW, Calif. (AP) — Pioneer 10, the "ultimate time capsule," crossed Pluto's orbit 3.5 billion miles from Earth on Monday and sped on its endless journey through the Milky Way galaxy. Scientists hailed the event as as a "proud day in America."

The spacecraft with a "simple, straightforward design" has outlasted its intended 21-month life by nearly a decade and scientists now predict that the craft, built for $20 million and launched March 2, 1972, will outlive the solar system.

"Some five billion years from now, our sun will self-destruct," said Dr. Joseph Wampler of the Lick Observatory at the University of California at Santa Cruz. "This spacecraft has escaped the solar system."

Wampler said Pioneer 10 "will live in interstellar space 100 billion years."

"For me, that is an eternity," he said. "In that time, our entire universe will evolve into something quite different."

Pluto, normally the most distant planet because of its elliptical orbit, is currently nearer to the Sun than the planet Neptune. It will remain inside Neptune's orbit for the next 17 years.

Pioneer 10, sending data to Earth with a radio transmitter powered by eight watts, or the equivalent of a Christmas tree light, exceeded Pluto's distance from the Sun, nearly 2.8 billion miles, on Monay. It will surpass Neptune in distance from the Sun on June 13.

When it crossed Pluto's path, Pioneer had traveled nearly 3.5 billion miles from earth on a curving flight across the solar system.

Radio signals from the craft, which spins at the rate of four to five times a minute for stability, take more than four hours and 15 minutes moving at the speed of light to reach the earth.

Experts wonder about authenticity of diaries purported to be Hitler's

HAMBURG, West Germany (AP) — Stern magazine held a news conference Monday to bolster a claim that its "Hitler diaries" are authentic, but two expert witnesses said the documents would have to be studied further.

British historian Hugh Trevor-Roper, who gave the documents his unqualified endorsement last week, backtracked and said at the news conference, "A final judgment cannot be given until the whole text of the documents can be examined."

"There are further tests that are necessary," said another authority on Hitler, Professor Gerhard L. Weinberg of the University of North Carolina.

The magazine barred a British historian, David Irving, from speaking, presumably because he already had challenged the authenticity of its find.

"I had similar documents put in my hands last November, a very large collection — 800 pages — from exactly the same source," Irving told NBC-TV. "I've got some of them here, and there is no doubt in my mind the ones I have are fakes. The whole thing stinks."

Complications for Stern from the government also loomed. A spokesman for the federal Interior Ministry in Bonn said the state of Bavaria has a legal right to ask for the documents since it was made the "beneficiary" of the Third Reich at war's end. In Munich, a spokesman for the state government said it was considering whether it should request the documents.

The German Federal Archive in Koblenz, which is to receive the diaries after Stern finishes its excerpts, only plans to take the material if it is genuine, spokesman Wigard Haerdtl said in Bonn.

Stern editor-in-chief Peter Koch asserted that the diaries are "the journalistic scoop of the postwar period."

But Trevor-Roper said he judged them authentic because he understood one man could prove they were found in the wreckage of a Nazi plane that had left Berlin before Hitler committed suicide in April 1945.

"I am now told that this is not quite as I thought, and that in fact the link between the airplane and the documents here is not absolutely established," he said.

Trevor-Roper said Stern told him Gert Heidemann, the reporter who it says found the diaries after a three-year search, could not reveal who gave them to him or whether they came from a number of people.

"We have to rely absolutely on Mr. Heidemann," the historian said, "but it is always possible for a single person to be deceived."

Trevor-Roper, who has the title of Lord Dacre, is the author of "The Last Days of Hitler" and numrous other books on the Third Reich, worked for British intelligence during World War II.

The diaries, which Stern claims Hitler kept from 1932 until shortly before he shot himself in his Berlin bunker in 1945, are now in a Swiss bank vault. Trevor-Roper and Weinberg said they were shown some of the papers during separate recent trips to Zurich.

Spring exhibit fulfills fine arts requirement

A "Face Lift" can be seen on the first floor of the Art building.

The "Face Lift" is a series of cast aluminum sculptures made by Linda Daumen, senior in fine arts. They are being exhibited as part of the spring 1983 bachelor of fine arts (BFA) exhibitions.

Pat Hagan, academic adviser for the art department, explained that students wishing to receive a BFA degree must participate in the exhibitions as partial fulfillment of degree requirements. Completing regular class work is the rest of the requirement.

Eight students, all seniors in art, are participating in the spring showing, the last exhibition before the end of the semester. They are Annette Hutfles, Cara Fairchild, Talina van der Hoeven, Daumen, Ed Myers, Tony Karman, Larry Schmidt and Diane Werner.

The students are responsible for framing, presenting and hanging or setting up their artwork. "They find out exactly what it's like to put a show together," Hagan said.

Publicity is also the students' responsibility. "For example, if they want to write a story for their hometown newspaper about their exhibition, they can," but getting it published is up to them, Hagan added.

Although Rosella Ogg, BFA coordinator, makes the final decision on whether a student has passed the BFA requirements, she also asks for input from faculty members.

"All of the (art) faculty go around and look at the BFA shows and make comments," Hagan said.

The exhibitions are on a credit/no credit basis and "basically, if the students participate in the exhibition, they meet the requirements" for a BFA degree, Hagan said.

The decision of where the students will exhibit their work is made "in conjunction with their major professors." It depends on the type of artwork the student does — painting, sculpture, ceramics.

This is the third exhibition of the year which finishes up requirements for the 29 students graduating with a BFA degree this semester.

Carlin

accepted after two earlier ones collapsed in a weekend of hard bargaining.

Carlin also singled out three Democratic senators for their courage in changing their votes to support the compromise package, when Senate Democratic leaders were trying to scuttle the agreement and the GOP leadership was demanding more Democratic support before they would pass it.

THE SENATORS cited by Carlin are Norma Daniels of Valley City, Jerry Karr of Emporis and Billy McCray of Wichita.

"Those three votes were absolutely essential to pass it," said Carlin, who got involved personally to help persuade the trio to buck Senate Minority Leader Jack Steineger and pass the bill.

Only five Democrats voted for the bill in the Senate and 21 in the House, but Republicans demanded at least that much minority party support if the bill was to pass.

Carlin said it became clear to him some time ago that he absolutely had to accept a motor fuel tax increase if the program was going to win approval, but some Senate Democrats "thought I compromised too soon."

The governor proposed last Friday a package for ending the stalemate, including a 2-cent motor fuel tax increase. "I got exactly what I wanted," he said Monday. "I only gave on the gas tax. That's part of the process. You have to give to get something. I'll accept their gas tax to get a total program.

"IF THE REPUBLICANS hadn't wanted the gas tax, we wouldn't have had it. We didn't propose it. But it became apparent that 80 to 90 percent of the Republicans said it had to be part of the package.

"The package we worked out is as palatable as you're going to get it."

Carlin proclaimed himself very pleased the Legislature passed the mineral severance tax and the highway funding package, but expressed disappointment that more wasn't done for education — both public and higher.

Art

Smaller fine art programs simply do no have the same advantages.

The assumption that the Players can spend $350 on a tailor-made costume is not one which the smaller groups can make.

The art department can only afford to bring in a few minor exhibits on its budget of $3,041, Stroh said, adding that a top exhibit from the Smithsonian Insititute could run between $5,000 to $25,000 for one exhibit.

YET, EVEN IF a top exhibit were brought to K-State, it probably could not be accommodated in the relatively small space of the Union Art Gallery.

McCain provides the medium for major productions by speech and theater, but the Union Art Gallery presents certain limits on the shows which can be exhibited, Stroh said.

The "more popular exhibits in the Union Gallery are seen by about 2,000 students during each two-week show," he said, adding that the attendance could be larger if more funds were available to advertise the shows and to print materials to educate the public about the works of art.

McCain is FAC's most recent addition and it received $3,000 last year and $3,647 this year from Student Governing Association.

According to Doreen Bauman, director of McCain, she requested that McCain be admitted to FAC because programming is done with the students in mind and "they (students) should make a commitment" to support McCain.

STUDENT FUNDING is not used for actual fine arts programming, since initial cash flow comes from the season ticket sales. Endowments, grants and box office receipts provide the remainder.

Bauman said that the FAC funds were used to hire a part-time "audience development specialist."

In comparison to attendance by Manhattan residents, student attendance has been slipping, Bauman said in a March 29 Collegian article, and is "less than 50 percent" of total attendance.

Large student audiences are an important prerequisite for receiving FAC funding and McCain has had trouble maintaining just that.

Another reason Bauman said she believes McCain should receive FAC funding is because McCain could be losing "potentially thousands" by offering student discounts.

THIS YEAR THE six smaller groups — art, architecture, dance, Ebony Theater, the minority cultural programs and McCain — received a higher increase in percentage of funds than the K-State Players or the music department.

Robert Steinbauer, head of the music department, said he considered the percentage increase which the smaller groups received this year "more than adequate — to the point of being prejudicial," considering the visibility of the larger groups.

Theoretically, money is allocated on a zero-based budgeting proceedure, with each group beginning with zero funds and budgeting its needs from there.

However, input from students not involved with any FAC groups is needed for effective zero-based budgeting, Chalmers said. These students provide a third-party influence.

BEING "IN THE same boat together," the FAC groups must reach a consensus on how to allocate funds. It is this atmosphere which limits robust criticism of another's budget. Chalmers added that the groups "fear cutting their own throats."

Specific guidelines concerning the use of FAC money do not exist and rules laid out under general SGA guidelines apply to all groups.

FAC money generally goes toward bringing in lecturers, poets and playwrights and buying costumes, sets and music, posters, programs and ads.

Music department is "primarily supported by state funds," Steinbauer said. The $19,000 which the department receives from the FAC repesents less than 4 percent of deparment's total budget, he explained, and is used for rental of performance rights, exotic instruments and outstanding performers wth a unique or academic quality.

According to Steinbauer, the reason for music and speech receiving funding priority is because these groups are "highly visible. They involve a broad cross section of students and act as ambassadors for K-State as they travel and perform."

Funds for theater are used to produce one musical, two major plays and four minor plays in the Purple Masque Theatre. The speech department and music department collaborate on producing the musical and the opera, Bunton said.

Money for the minority cultural program goes toward artists, dancers and lecturers which relate to the different minority groups established on campus. The recent Hispanic cultural awareness week, which featured the bands Caribe and El Nuevo Mariachi Estrella, a mariachi band from Topeka, as well as dancers and art displays, was funded by FAC funds.

According to Anne Butler, instructor for Center for Student Development, Ebony Theater produces two plays and helps sponsor a minority artist.

Veryl Switzer, assistant vice president of student affairs in charge of minority cultural programs, said he believes "under the circumstances there has been equity in distribution of the funds."

Sale barns face demands of competition, costs

By DAVE BERGMEIER
Collegian Reporter

The future of many sale barns across the Midwest could be in jeopardy.

The reasons for this include rising operating costs and increasing competition from meat packing plants and contract buyers.

Walter Epke and his brother own and operate the York Cattle Co. of York, Neb. Epke said a sales operation must sell at least 500 cattle and 1,000 hogs per week in order for it to be profitable.

"If a sale doesn't average that many animals a week, then the operating expenses will make it too costly to run a sale," he said.

Unless these figures are attained, according to Epke, the sale barn owner can't make enough money on commission to cover costs. Commission is a fee charged by the sales barn operator for selling the animal.

EPKE, WHO operated a sale barn in York from 1952 until Jan. 1, 1983, said when he and his brother began, competition was keen among many small sale barns in the area. Today, the only small sale barn is in York.

"When we started, there weren't any roads or equipment to drive livestock a long distance. Also, the farmers in those days operated a lot smaller operations and almost all of them had cattle and hogs," he said. "Today, the farms are bigger and more specialized. This hurts the market by having fewer people to buy and sell, which cuts down on the competition and volume at a sale.

"Today's sale barns need to have a larger trade area in order to survive," he added.

Brad Cooper, sales manager for the livestock marketing association which represents sale barns and stockyards across the Midwest, said trends are leaning toward bigger and possibly more regional sale barns.

HE CITED reasons for the trend as being higher overhead and expenses each year. The sale barns need to expand their territories to do a better job of providing services.

"The more efficient sale barns, with better management, will have an improvement in sales, while the poorly managed sale barns won't be able to operate," Cooper said. "It is encouraging for the small sale barns in the future that the projected number of cattle will be up. However, when the numbers get low again, it could be serious trouble for those operations."

Joe Raines, part owner of the Manhattan Commission Company Inc., said he looked for more smaller sale barns in the Manhattan area to close down in the future due to stiffer competition from bigger livestock sale operations in surrounding areas. The bigger operations have financial capability to survive any future economic problems.

VERN LANGVARDT, president of J.C. Livestock Sales in Junction City, said family operations which have worked well in the past may someday be replaced by corporations because of prohibiting costs.

Cattle purchasing by meat packing plants and direct market purchasing, which eliminate the need for public sale, may be a problem sale barns will have difficulty overcoming.

"The meat packing plant, as a direct buyer of market animals, is one of the farmer's worst enemies," Langvardt said.

If all sale barns closed down, meat packers would replace sale barns as major cattle purchasers and farmers would be forced to take whatever price packers charged, he said.

Langvardt explained that if farmers put their trust in sale barns, they may receive less money per pound at times, but in the long run, they receive the same amount of money, or more.

HIDDEN COSTS add to meat packers' purchasing prices. Packers and similar operators may offer farmers more money initially, but often dock farmers for physical markings on the animal, such as rashes, forcing them to take a lower price than what they could have received at a sale barn, Langvardt said.

One reason many farmers have turned to direct purchasers is to avoid paying the sale barn commission for livestock sales, Cooper said.

Farmers think the sales commission is a waste of money, but sale barns need it in order to stay in business, Cooper said, adding that public sale auctions are needed to ensure that farmers are getting a top price for their livestock and the market place remains open.

Although the cattle market has largely avoided the trend until now, direct buyers have damaged the market for hogs, Langvardt said.

"When the packing plants and Farmland hog buying stations opened up around the area, it pretty well destroyed our local market for hogs," he said.

In the future, sale barns need to be more efficient, Cooper said, adding that even the biggest sale barn can go out of business without proper management.

"When prices are good, it is easy for a sale barn to make money, but when they are low, it is hard for anyone to make money," Langvardt said.

Epke said, "A good operator can make it even in these difficult times."

Economics professor receives adviser award

"He has helped build comradeship among the members and guided the club into being very rewarding for the members," Cheri Schwartz, senior in agricultural economics, said.

Schwartz is one of five students who submitted a letter nominating John Riley, associate professor of economics, for an adviser award.

Riley was recently named the 1983 University Activities Board Adviser of the Year. Riley was nominated by both the K-State National Agri-Marketing Association (NAMA) and the Agricultural Economics Club, Sally Routson, UAB adviser, said.

Riley is also an adviser to Farmhouse fraternity.

"Recently, I wondered what really makes Dr. Riley tick, how can he have so much energy? I decided it comes back to him from what he gives," Marilyn Clawson, senior in agricultural economics, said.

"All of his activities seem to stem from this central theme in helping others grow through projects, clubs and social contact with others," Clawson said.

Nominations for the award can come from any registered UAB club or organization on campus, Rouston said. This year, 23 advisers were nominated from six colleges in the University.

In future years, committee members hope each student organization will nominate an adviser for the award.

After the committee receives letters of nomination from students in the clubs, it selects one adviser for the award.

"The award was established in 1981 to recognize advisers of registered student organizations for their time and energy above and beyond their job responsibilities to the University," Rouston said.

Advisers from the student organizations do not know they have been nominated until they and their department heads are mailed a letter of notification.

According to Ed McQueen, graduate in agricultural economics and NAMA president, Riley has "committed more of his time to the organization (NAMA) than any member could really expect of an adviser."

Riley's enthusiasm for NAMA and its goals are a motivating force for both officers and students, McQueen said.

Riley's award was announced April 15 at the 20th Annual Recognition Banquet of the Agricultural Economics Club.

One reason why Riley is active adviser is his history of student involvement.

"I do enjoy working with students," Riley said. "I participated in student groups even in my graduate years at school," he said.

Soap opera star relates experiences from 23-year career

By JANICE CARLTON
Collegian Reporter

Eileen Fulton, otherwise known as the daytime soap opera villainess Lisa on CBS's "As The World Turns," appeared Monday night at McCain Auditorium, entertaining the audience by telling stories about her 23-year-old soap opera career. She also explained why she recently left the show.

"We lost Lisa," Fulton said. "I want to create things. I don't want to pull (writers) out of the jams they've written themselves into."

Most of the approximate 400 people who came to see Fulton were older women and, judging from their questions, they were long-time fans of her character and the show.

"We used to have such respect on that show," Fulton said. She joined the show in 1960, and four years after it began, said the writers had lost respect for the characters the actors had created, citing Lisa as an example.

She recalled several humorous incidents on the show that had occurred over the years.

ONE INCIDENT occurred when the show was aired live and Fulton's character, Lisa, had to prepare the dessert — cherries jubilee — for her guests.

"We had to time our bites so no one would be talking with their mouth full," she said. The cast rehearsed for several hours before the show with the flaming dessert, inadvertently consuming large amounts of brandy used to make it burn.

By the time the scene was aired live, Fulton said the cast in the scene was drunk from the brandy.

"They gave me a long match to light the cherries jubilee," she said. When she did, the dessert burst into flame igniting the curtains on the set.

"Back when we were live, what you saw was what happened," she said.

Fulton also recalled the "grandmother" clause that had been written into her contract, stating that her character would never become a grandmother on the show.

"I FEEL that on that show, they don't know how to write for grandmothers," she said. The writers gave grandmothers on the show no lives except for in the kitchen, citing the character, Nancy, as an example.

Fulton said she believed the character she played had been changed too much by the writers.

"The writers used to care and I'm sure the writers on other soaps do," she said. "But sometimes I think they are more concerned with their own stories and not the characters."

In addition, Fulton emphasized that she was not like the character she played, who, for years, had been a villainess.

"I am not Lisa," she said. "Lisa doesn't care about people. She has no ambition."

Fulton, unlike Lisa, has been involved with several charity causes such UNICEF and the March of Dimes.

TOWARD THE END of her prepared talk, Fulton began to take questions about characters that had been on the show, and about herself.

The audience seemed very curious about the change in characters, occurring recently on the show.

"I think it's a damn shame to get rid of the older actors, the ones who'd been there for a while," Fulton said, in reference to members of original cast who had been written out of the soap opera.

Fulton emphasized several times she would not consider returning to "As The World Turns," although she might consider returning to daytime television if an offer came up.

"I want to act, I want to sing. There are so many parts to play," she said. "I don't want 'Lisa' on my tombstone."

Staff/Scott Williams

Eileen Fulton, better known to the daytime television audience as "Lisa" on CBS's "As The World Turns," spoke to approximately 400 people Monday night in McCain Auditorium.

Health group notes increase in cases of Malaria

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — Since 1955, the World Health Organization has struggled against malaria, and for a time many experts believed the debilitating, and sometimes fatal disease, would become a forgotten danger.

But today, experts at WHO headquarters believe that 40 percent of mankind is still threatened by the disease — and that old solutions no longer work against new strains of mosquitos and malarial parasites.

"While past programs have not been a failure, we are still a long way from reaching our goal," said Ned Willard, a WHO spokesman. "Malaria is a problem most governments wish would just disappear, but instead it is worsening."

Many countries, which a few years ago were on the point of announcing the eradication of malaria, are struggling with an onslaught of pesticide-resistant mosquitos and drug-resistant parasites, the WHO says.

"RUMORS THAT THE DISEASE has been eradicated in India are false," said Willard. "Nor are rumors that a new vaccine will soon solve the malaria problem entirely true."

WHO estimates new malaria cases at about 7.5 million per year, double the rate of 10 years ago, with most cases found in Southeast Asia, South America, Central America and the equatorial region of Africa. There is no accurate count of malaria deaths.

Although the United States is considered free of home-grown malaria, the number of cases doubled between 1978 and 1980, with 1,864 reported in 1980, said the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta. But these cases involved travelers returning from outside the country or recent immigrants.

THE AGENCY EXPECTS between 700 and 800 cases in the United States during 1983, said Dr. Kent Campbell, the chief of the CDC's malaria branch.

The disease is caused by single-cell parasites, injected into the bloodstream by a mosquito. When the organisms enter the body, they become lodged in the liver and multiply. After several days, they travel into the bloodstream, causing high fevers and chills.

The parasites can attack different parts of the body. In the cerebral type of the disease, the onset is rapid with delirium and coma, and death can occur in several hours without return to consciousness.

And some strains of mosquitos are becoming more resistant to the pesticides used in eradication.

WHO researchers say that in 1968, 38 species of the Anopheles mosquitos, which carry the malaria parasite, were resistant to one or more types of commonly used pesticides. By 1975, however, the figure had risen to 42 species and by 1980, 51 species, including all the main malaria-carrying species, the researchers say.

"The intensive, and in many instances excessive and irrational, use of pesticides was responsible for the 'selection' of resistant mosquitos," Willard said. "Those which are resistant survive and go on to multiply."

Fortunately this has still to happen in most of South America, Africa and the Western Pacific but the problem is already serious in Asia, WHO experts say, adding they fear the disease will follow the same pattern it has taken in Southeast Asia and India.

EVEN MORE DISTURBING, the WHO says, has been the appearance of new strains of the most deadly form of the parasite, Plasmodium falciparum, which do not respond to the drugs commonly available.

These new parasite strains have spread rapidly, the WHO says. In the Americas, forms of falciparum resistant to chloroquine, the favorite medicine, are found in 10 countries as far north as Panama.

In Asia, they are found as far West as India and as far East as some of the Pacific Islands, the WHO says. In some places such as Thailand, up to 90 percent of all falciparum cases fail to be cured with chloroquine, and generally obtain no benefit at all.

ALTERNATIVE DRUGS, SUCH AS quinine, teracyclines and combinations of sulfamides with pyrimethamine are available but reports are coming in of the failure of some of these drugs, according to the WHO.

Willard said countries fighting malaria urgently need more research and new drugs, citing two "particularly promising" drugs, mefloquine and Qinghaosu, the latter derived from an ancient Chinese herbal remedy.

Neither is ideal and both require further laboratory trials before they can be released, he said.

The highest hopes are placed on the development of the first anti-malaria vaccine, Willard said, noting that WHO experts hope that before long one or more vaccines will be ready for testing on human beings.

Topeka explosion injures three, cuts downtown power

TOPEKA (AP) — An explosion in an underground electrical vault left two utility workers with critical burns and the Shawnee County Courthouse and several other downtown Topeka buildings without power throughout the day Monday.

Edwin DeVader, 34, and Terry Coward, 37, were transferred to the University of Kansas Medical Center in Kansas City, Kan., after treatment for burns at Topeka hospitals. They were listed in critical condition.

Hospital officials said DeVader, a Kansas Power & Light Co. lineman for 14 years, suffered burns over 90 percent of his body. Coward, a 17-year lineman, suffered burns over about 30 percent of his body.

Hal Hudson, a KP&L spokesman, said Monday night that power was fully restored about 7 p.m.

Hudson said DeVader and Coward were in the vault containing electrical cables for the downtown area when an electrical circuit breaker apparently exploded. Shown and a fourth member of the crew were standing at street level near the manhole leading to the vault.

Witnesses said one of the workers emerged from the manhole in flames and the second man was pulled out by a fire rescue crew.

"All of a sudden there were two explosions, and flames shot up out of the hole," said an unidentified witness at the scene.

Another witness said one of the workers climbed out of the manhole in flames and the other workers did "anything they could do to put out the fire. Then I stood there for a minute hoping there was nobody else in there, but there was."

The explosion occured near the U.S. Post office, about four blocks northeast of the Capitol. The Post Office, Courthouse, Capital Federal Savings and Loan building, American Home Life Insurance Co. and the 12-story Jayhawk Tower were the major buildings without power.

Hudson said workers had installed new cable to the IBM building, which is under construction, and the Jayhawk Tower, which has been converted from a hotel. The crew working in the vault Monday was working on new switching arrangements to the two buildings.

Men's tennis team wins final match of season

Staff/John Sleezer

No. 1 doubles... Mark Hassenflu returns the ball during doubles play on Monday afternoon. Mark and his brother Gary teamed up for a loss to Cowley County Community College's duo of Bengt Pipkorn and Tim Ritchie. However, the K-State team went on to defeat Cowley County, 7-2.

Squad prepares for Big Eight Tournament play

The K-State men's tennis team, playing in its last dual meet of the season before moving into the Big Eight Tournament, defeated Cowley County Community College 7-2 Monday afternoon at K-State's Washburn Courts.

According to Coach Steve Snodgrass, the meet was "basically a warm-up match for the Big Eight Tournament Thursday and Friday.

"It's alway a good match," Snodgrass said, referring to the annual contest against Cowley County. "I try to schedule it as one of the last matches of the season so the junior college kids can take a look at us and we can get a look at them as possible recruits."

The main recruit from the Cowley County team Snodgrass is interested in is its No. 1 singles player, Bengt Pipkorn. Pipkorn had the only singles victory for Cowley County, defeating K-State's Jeff Jackard, 7-6, 6-3. Snodgrass was impressed by the play of Pipkorn.

"Their No. 1 singles is definitely Big Eight caliber," he said. "Had Jackard been well, he would have overpowered him, though. But at the No. 1 spot you're always going to have very good players and you have to be at the top of your game to win."

Jackard was ill with a virus when he played his singles match, and did not play in the doubles match, as Snodgrass sent him home. Jackard is expected to be up for the Big Eight tourney, however, where he is seeded fourth in the No. 1 singles.

With Jackard out, the No. 1 doubles team took a change in personnel. In that match, the Hassenflu brothers — Mark and Gary — sustained K-State's only other defeat of the day, losing to Pipkorn and Tim Ritchie, 2-6, 6-3, 7-6.

The rest of the Wildcats had few problems winning their matches. Curt Thompson played in the No. 2 singles, easily putting away Ritchie, 6-1, 6-2. Gary Hassenflu started slow, but came on strong at the end to beat Mark McDonald, 4-6, 6-3, 6-0, in the No. 3 match.

The bottom three singles players for K-State cruised to easy wins. Kris James, in the No. 4 spot, defeated David Owen, 6-3, 6-4; Mark Hassenflu downed Tim Bromell, 6-3, 6-1; and Brady Tinker got past Randy Watters, 6-1, 6-4.

After losing the No. 1 doubles, K-State came back to win the next two matches. Thompson and James beat Owen and Watters, 6-2, 6-4, in the No. 2 doubles. The No. 3 doubles team of Smith and Tinker had some problems, but overcame McDonald and Bromell, 7-5, 1-6, 6-4, to finish up the match.

K-State's season record is 9-13, as the Wildcats prepare for the conference meet in Kansas City. Jackard is K-State's only sure seed in the tournament. The other players will draw from a hat to determine their seedings.

On a day which the Wildcat fans and team would just as soon forget, the University of Kansas thumped the 'Cats 16-3 and 8-4 in double-header action Monday.

With winds gusting to 35 mph toward the left field wall of Frank Myers field, the Jayhawk bats were simply too much for the Wildcat pitchers to handle. The 'Hawks roughed up K-State pitchers for 12 hits in both games.

Most of KU's damage was done by the stinging bats of Mark Gile (two home runs, three doubles and six RBIs) and Dick Lewallen with one triple and five RBIs.

The Jayhawks started their offensive show in the third inning of the first game when they touched Wildcat starter Chris Hamilton for three singles enroute to two runs.

The final hit of the inning off the bat of Lewallen moved him into first place on the KU all-time hit list.

KU scored three more runs in the fifth inning after Hamilton struck out the first two hitters he faced in the inning.

He's hitting the ball down the lines, into the gaps and over the fence.

In short, the Kansas City Royals' third baseman is hitting the ball like he did during his banner 1980 season, when he was the American League's Most Valuable Player.

Brett is hitting a league-leading .471, and his double and run-scoring single in Kansas City's 7-1 victory over Toronto Sunday extended his hitting streak to 13 games.

A two-time AL batting champion, who hit .390 in 1980, Brett is no stranger to hitting success. But even he can't explain his current pace.

"Whenever you're in a streak like I am, where you're hitting the ball hard consistently," said Brett, "you have to be in some kind of a trance or something.

Counting last season, Brett has hit safely in 19 consecutive games. This year, he has 24 hits in 51 at-bats, including 11 doubles, a triple and four home runs. That's a slugging percentage of .961. Twelve of his last 15 hits have been for extra bases.

It's the kind of performance that prompted Toronto Manager Bobby Cox to say Sunday: "George Brett is one of the greatest hitters who ever put on a uniform. I don't care whether you're talking about Ted Williams or (Stan) Musial or (Joe) DiMaggio, (Willie) Mays or (Hank) Aaron."

It's no surprise that Brett is hitting well — he's batted .300 or better seven times in his major league career — but he doesn't usually get hot until around his birthday, May 15.

Brett probably is the most famous graduate of the Charley Lau spray-the-ball school of hitting, but he credits Kansas City batting coach Rocky Colavito for some of his current success.

Brett batted .301 last season — 15 points below his career average — and also has suffered from an image tarnished by clubhouse tantrums and an off-season contract squabble.

Although determined to improve his performance both on and off the field this year, Brett understandably hesitates to compare his start with 1980, when he had the highest batting average since Williams' .406 in 1941.

But he concedes that he is waiting on the ball, seeing it well and hitting it hard. "That's what happened in 1980 and that's what's happening now," Brett said.

Baseball

The game broke in the sixth inning as six Jayhawk runners scored, knocking Hamilton out of the box. Kevin Bascue's three-run homer highlighted the outburst as all nine batters crossed home plate in the inning.

K-State scored all three of its runs in the sixth after solving the KU pitcher, Jim Phillips, who had pitched no-hit ball through 5⅓ innings.

The 'Cats scored their runs on singles by Steve Goodwin, Mark Teague, Cary Colbert and Mike Smart.

Before the dust had cleared, the 'Hawks added extra misery to the K-State team as they scored five more runs in the ninth inning.

The second game of the double-header didn't get any easier for the Wildcats as KU jumped out to a six-run lead sparked by three home runs in the fifth inning.

Gile and Heeney got the attack started as both hit back-to-back home runs. Joel Gibson continued the Jayhawk's march as he hit a two-run blast to left field.

K-State retaliated with four runs in the bottom of the fifth inning when Teague reached first on an error. A walk to Colbert followed by a single to Smart scored Teague. Designated hitter Rich Phillips doubled to drive in Colbert and Smart while Dan Grause scored the Wildcats' final run of the day with a single.

Two more Jayhawk runs in the seventh inning put the game out of reach as the 'Cats' record fell to 1-11 in Big Eight play and 17-16 overall. KU pushed its record to 8-7 in conference action and 16-15 for the season.

K-State closes out their regular home schedule this week with a game today against Northwest Missouri State and Wednesday against Washburn University.

Acker to receive recognition for action at Landon Lecture

When Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani was shouted down at the March 28 Landon Lecture, President Duane Acker first appealed for quiet, then had McCain Auditorium emptied.

To re-enter the auditorium it was necessary to produce a lecture ticket, University ID, or other documentation. Yamani, the Saudi oil minister, then delivered his address to an attentive audience with no further disruptions.

The KSU Chapter of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) has adopted a "resolution of commendation" to Acker and University administration for their actions on this matter.

Robin Smith, associate professor of philosophy and president of the AAUP Chapter, said the action was taken by its Executive Committee for two reasons:

1. Because the AAUP has long supported the principle that campuses must provide full opportunities for the expression of diverse points of view and that it is the responsibility of all members of the academic community to see that speakers have an opportunity to be heard;

2. And because "some press reports concerning Yamani's appearance at KSU...are incomplete or misleading."

Smith said he was upset by the Kansas City Times' coverage of the lecture, saying the Times only reported about the lecture being stopped and not that it was continued later. He added The Wall Street Journal reported the lecture was at the University of Kansas and another national newspaper reported it was in Kansas City.

"We believe President Acker and the Administration should be commended for their proper handling of a difficult situation," Smith said.

1983 session pleases legislators; tax negotiations called delicate

TOPEKA (AP) — Rank and file legislators generally were pleased with the accomplishments of the 1983 session, relieved a raft of tough decisions on raising taxes were behind them and confident they could look forward to the next several sessions without having to raise them again.

"We could never have done what we did if it had been an election year," said Sen. Dan Thiessen, R-Independence, the Republican nominee for lieutenant governor last year.

"I don't know how we'd have gotten so much tax legislation passed if everyone had been facing election this year. I just don't think we'd have done it."

"People may not be real happy right now, but when they see some new highway projects in their areas I think they'll be pleased," said Sen. Fred Kerr, R-Pratt, a member of the highway finance conference committee and the legislator generally credited with putting together the final, finely-turned compromise package which won approval and went to Gov. John Carlin Sunday night.

"It was about as delicate as it could get. If that one had failed, I don't know whether we could have gotten another one," added Kerr.

What the Legislature did in the five-day wrapup session which began last Wednesday and concluded at 9:24 p.m. Sunday was send Carlin five tax measures which will generate an additional $198.8 million in revenue during the fiscal year which begins July 1.

Included is $35 million new revenue from a two-cent motor fuel tax taking effect in July and an additional one-cent tax taking effect in January; a projected $104 million from a mineral severance tax, $97 million of which goes to the state treasury; a $42 million increase in individual income taxes to be paid by those in the upper income brackets, and $24.8 million in increased cigarette and liquor taxes.

Kentucky spelunkers alive, dry after two days in flooded cave

MOUNT VERNON, Ky. (AP) — Two rescue divers found a handwritten note Monday that said eight amateur spelunkers, trapped for two days in a southeastern Kentucky cave by rising water, were alive and in good condition, officials said.

Word of the note reached rescuers outside the cave about 5:50 p.m., four hours after a time written on the note. It said the eight took shelter on a dry ledge after a sudden rainstorm caused a stream inside the cave to rise Saturday and sealed the only escape route.

The note, signed by the exploring team's co-leader Gary Bush, was headlined "HELP" in large, capital letters. It said:

"Eight cavers waiting 1,800 feet upstream from here. Leave diving tanks here. Only needed for entrance. Been here since 11 a.m. Sat 4-23. Now Mon 4-25 12 noon."

Tom Staubitz, vice chairman of the Greater Cincinnati Grotto, the club to which the explorers belong, joyously announced the finding of the note, saying the eight were waiting on a dry ledge 1,800 feet upstream from where the note was found in an empty supply box.

"They wanted us to know they were OK," Staubitz said. "They brought the note as close to us as they could, knowing we'd be back to find it."

He said the rescue teams hoped to have the group out by midnight Monday.

"They're right where I've been telling you all day," said Staubitz, who had speculated the spelunkers instinctively had retreated to higher ground when they encountered the swollen stream.

The logical spot for the retreat, Staubitz had said, was a ledge where tools and provisions had been stored in cae of emergency. The ledge was about 1,800 feet from the entrance.

"They're right by the equipment cache. All members of the party are in good condition," Staubitz said.

The note indicated all eight were "active and moving around," he said.

Staubitz said now that he was convinced the spelunkers were safe, a rescue would be "just a matter of getting the water level down."

Before the note was found, the six men and two women from Cincinnati were last heard from Saturday before they entered the cave.

Earlier on Monday, a diver trained in emergency cave rescues searched six hours but found no trace of the explorers.

George Veni, a doctor and the lead diver for the Cave and Rock Rescue Team of Warren County, had said he found the main passage flooded as he traveled 1,800 feet into the cave, located in an isolated hilly area about 50 miles south of Lexington.

Jim Burch, coordinator for the Warren County rescue team who was monitoring the efforts via a ham operators' radio network in Bowling Green, had said Veni's discovery of water everywhere "sort of shook us up."

After Veni emerged, officials began pumping water away from the 6-by-6-foot entrance in preparation for sending in an eight-member team, in groups of four.

Faculty disapprove of possible 9/12 payroll change

Faculty members, at a special meeting Tuesday, voiced strong disapproval for discontinuance of K-State's 9/12 month payroll option.

Possibility of eliminating the payroll policy concerning payment of faculty salaries over 12 months to those persons on 9-month appointments brought together more than 70 faculty members who would be affected by this change.

"For a number of years, K-State has used a 9/12 payroll to distribute nine-month salaries in 12 equal installments if the employee so requested," Daniel Beatty, vice president for business affairs, said.

This was accomplished by reserving one-fourth of the nine-month salary during September through May and using the reserved amount to pay three installments during June, July and August which were equal to the monthly amounts during September through May, Beatty said.

Beatty said the state's procedures for doing this have not permitted the employees to withdraw their reserve amount — the amount of money saved during September through May — until the summertime unless the employee resigned.

In the current system, faculty are not receiving interest on the amount of money in reserves and the state is involved in personal budgeting.

Beatty said the current 9/12 payment option may also not fit into the new Kansas Integrated Personnel Payroll System.

The Office for Business Affairs, in a search for a better method than the 9/12 month option, contacted several banks and loan associations in Manhattan to inquire about placing one-fourth of each check of a nine-month employee's salary in an interest-bearing account and three-fourths in a checking account during the academic year, Beatty said.

During the three summer months, he said, one-third of the reserved amount in the interest-bearing account would be transferred to the employee's checking account, with the interest earned on the reserves transferred each of the three months or at the end of the summer.

Any nine-month employee wishing this service would need to make arrangements for it, according to Beatty.

"Using the 9/12 payroll option has caused a large amount of extra work for departments and central offices when processing personnel and payroll transactions," said James Cobler, a certified public accountant and director of the Division of Accounts and Reports for the state.

Cobbler introduced the new Kansas Integrated Personnel Payroll System (KIPPS). "With the new KIPPS system we'll be able to shorten the time it takes to employ people by two to three weeks and we're going to save at least 50 million keystrokes a year," Cobbler said.

Faculty members had the opportunity to express their concerns throughout the meeting. One major concern among those attending was the effect the change would have on their income taxes.

The majority of faculty members attending was in favor of the current payroll system.

House committee halves Reagan's request for $60 million in military aid to El Salvador

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's request for $60 million in military aid to El Salvador was cut in half by a House panel on Tuesday as he readied a special plea to Congress and the nation to rally behind his Central America policy.

The 7-5 decision by the Appropriations subcommittee on foreign operations to slash the Salvador aid to $30 million followed a tie vote, 6-6, that would have barred any decision at all for 90 days. The compromise was engineered by Chairman Clarence D. Long, D-Md., who just returned from El Salvador.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee already had settled on an identical cut.

Meanwhile Tuesday, the full Senate talked behind closed doors about whether the administration is waging a covert campaign against Nicaragua. And Reagan promised to name a special envoy for Central America, whose duties will include assisting "the Salvadorans in their efforts to find a basis for dialogue with their opponents."

Long said he supported the the scaled-down aid package after assurances that the new ambassodor "will be charged with advancing the peace process" in El Salvador.

The Maryland Democrat also said he was satisfied with promised steps toward opening of Salvadoran prisons to inspection by the International Red Cross, freeing political prisoners and undertaking a review of evidence in the 1980 killings of four U.S. churchwomen in El Salvador.

Long acknowledged that "this is not a perfect solution," but he said the assurances represented substantial progress "in view of the tortured history of El Salvador."

After the vote approving the $30 million, the subcommittee released a letter to Long from Secretary of State George P. Shultz, in which Shultz said "we favor a negotiating process which would lead the way to a political solution through free and fair elections."

"To advance this objective, the president will soon be designating a senior U.S. official of ambassadorial rank to act as a special envoy to Central American governments," the secretary wrote.

Shultz said the envoy "will assist the Salvadorans in their efforts to find a basis for dialogue with their opponents on the terms and conditions for free, fair and safe elections."

But he cautioned that the United States "will not support negotiations for power-sharing" — moves to bring the Salvadoran guerrillas directly into any new coalition regime without an election.

The motion to defer a vote on the military aid for up to 90 days was offered by Rep. Matthew F. McHugh, D-N.Y., who said that regarding the administration's policy toward El Salvador "we have had some constructive statements but very little concrete action" toward a political settlement.

"I remain skeptical and I remain unconvinced," he said.

Reagan himself will address a joint session of Congress — and a nationwide broadcast audience — on Wednesday night to ask support for his policies toward the volatile region.

The closed Senate session lasted an hour and 40 minutes. It was sought by Sen. Christoher Dodd, D-Conn., who has contended that the administration is illegally using funds for covert actions in Nicaragua. That nation has been accused by the United States of funneling arms to rebels fighting the Salvadoran regime.

Dodd said between 70 and 80 senators attended the secret session, which included a briefing by the Senate Intelligence Committee. But he declined to discuss what was said.

The NBC-TV "Today" show reported Tuesday that Stone was "in line" for the special envoy appointment, but deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said Reagan had not formally decided who would be named.

Student Senate concludes tentative group allocations

By LISA HOOKER
Government Editor

Student Senate considered and voted on tentative allocations of nine groups Tuesday. Its final tentative allocations meeting is scheduled for Thursday night, when the body will vote on the entire bill and then hear considerations to make changes in individual allocations.

Senate voted to allocate $1,033.24 to Black Student Union, including $333.24 for state car travel to conferences and councils. Becky Royster, BSU president, said the councils provide an exchange of information between black students at predominantly white universities.

Senate next considered funding for Student Publications and approved a line item of $3 per semester for full-time students and $1 per semester for part-time students. The amount expected to be generated from these line items is estimated at $92,712.

Honorariums, which provide for "speakers or films of significance to everyone on campus," according to Mark Terril, Finance Committee chairman, were considered next. Black Student Union was allocated $1,000 for speakers or films, International Coordinating Council was allocated $1,800, MEChA $1,000, and the Puerto Rican Student Organization $500. Women's Resource Center, which requested $200, received no funding.

ASSOCIATED STUDENTS of Kansas was allocated a full-time equivalency fee of 40 cents per-student per-semester, which is expected to generate $13,500.

Mark Tallman, executive director of ASK, noted the positive effect that lobbying by ASK produced in the Legislature during the past session, citing the work-study program and the drinking age issue as examples.

The K-State chapter of ASK was allocated $431, which breaks down to $231 for advertising and $200 for private car travel. John Kohler, campus director of ASK, said the funding of private car travel was necessary for the new ASK campus director to become established with the legislators in Topeka and to travel to Kansas Board of Regents meetings and ASK board meetings.

SENATE APPROVED a $2 line item for Fine Arts Council, which supports art, architecture and design, dance, the Ebony Theater, McCain Auditorium, minority and cultural programs, choral and opera programs, band and orchestra programs, and K-State Players.

Senate went on to approve a line item of $1.50 for full-time students per semester and 42 cents for part-time students per semester for the college councils. These fees are expected to generate $44,406.60, which is broken down by college as follows: Agriculture, $5,209.20; Architecture and Design, $2,523.96; Arts and Sciences, $11,728.68; Business Administration, $6,704.88; Education, $2,581.92; Engineering, $7,574.16; Graduate, $4,175.88; Home Economics, $2,679.36; and Veterinary Medicine, $1,228.56.

STUDENT GOVERNING Association's funding was approved with several changes. Salary for SGA's secretary was decreased from $14,551.68 to $13,968 because the position is a state classified position and state employees will not receive the 4 percent increase in salary until January 1984.

Other changes included an increase in the printing allocation from $1,300 to $1,500 and a change in the allocation for dues, memberships and subscriptions from $108.92 to $139. Reason for the change was to completely fund SGA's membership in the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce.

Jerry Katlin, student body president, said

Committee votes to cite Lavelle for contempt

WASHINGTON — The House Energy and Commerce Committee voted unanimously Tuesday to cite former Environmental Protection Agency official Rita M. Lavelle for contempt of Congress for defying subpoenas to testify before the panel about alleged EPA mismanagement.

The vote sends the contempt citation to the House floor. A vote there to cite. Lavelle could result in criminal action against her in U.S. District Court. Contempt is a misdemeanor punishable by a $1,000 fine and up to a year in jail.

Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., the committee's chairman, said he would be willing to drop the action if. Lavelle appears and cooperates with congressional investigators. But he urged her to "move promptly," saying the House would vote on the resolution "in the very near future."

The committee vote came after the former EPA assistant administrator twice defied subpoenas to appear before the panel's investigations subcommittee.

Eight spelunkers rescued from flooded cave

MOUNT VERNON, Ky. — Eight explorers were rescued Tuesday from a cavern where they were trapped by floodwater for three days, and said they cracked jokes and made up songs while battling cold and fear.

"I literally shook for 48 to 50 hours," said Mark Rocklin, one of the six men and two women in the expedition from the Greater Cincinnati Grotto, an Ohio spelunking club.

Rocklin said a fear of dying gave way to the more immediate concern of staying warm in 53-degree temperatures 1,800 feet inside the cave on Crooked Creek. The cave is about 50 miles south of Lexington in a remote area of southeastern Kentucky.

The spelunkers huddled together for warmth, nibbled on luncheon meat and wrapped themselves in plastic bags to conserve heat, Rocklin said.

The eight were trapped when a rainstorm raised the water level, closing the entrance to the cave.

Atom Bomb-test court case may take months

SALT LAKE CITY — It may be several more months before a federal judge decides whether hundreds of people in the Southwest got sick or died from atom bomb testing, the judge's clerks say.

"We're still guessing the end of the summer or July, but who knows?" said Carolyn McHugh, one of two clerks to U.S. District Judge Bruce Jenkins.

In the lawsuit, filed Dec. 17, 1,192 plaintiffs allege they or their relatives became sick or died from cancer caused by exposure to radioactive fallout from open-air tests between 1951 and 1962. Some cancers took decades to develop, they said.

Jenkins is studying the record to decide such questions as whether fallout radiation actually causes cancer and, if so, what levels are needed to cause the disease's different forms.

He also must decide whether the fallout that drifted downwind from the Nevada Test Site during a decade of open-air testing was sufficient to cause harm, and whether the government did all it could to protect citizens from the dozens of blasts that seared the southern Nevada desert.

Elway shuns Colts, may sign with Yankees

SAN JOSE, Calif. — John Elway, Stanford's NCAA record-setting quarterback, announced Tuesday he would play baseball in the New York Yankees organization rather than sign with the Baltimore Colts as the top draft choice in the National Football League.

"As I stand here now, it's going to be baseball," Elway said at a news conference. "I haven't ruled out football yet, but I'm a lot closer to baseball than I was before."

Rated by NFL scouts as one of the best passing prospects ever to come out of college, Elway said he was disappointed that Baltimore did not complete a trade for him with one of the West Coast teams he preferred.

"We have the same position we had previously," said Colts Coach Frank Kush. "We drafted him with the idea of playing in Baltimore and we maintain that position."

There's just not much to do 6 feet under

INDIANAPOLIS — Except that there's not much to do, and it's a little small, Bill Shirk doesn't mind his new home — a casket.

The veteran stuntman had himself buried 6 feet underground on April 15 to promote his movie, "Modern Day Houdini."

Shirk's original goal was to stay in the casket — which is a mere 7 feet long, 3½ feet wide and 32 inches high — until the movie was sold out. But after that occurred, he decided to set his sights a little higher, vowing to remain underground until he gets an invitation to appear on Johnny Carson's "Tonight" show.

Interviewed by telephone on Tuesday, Shirk said there is no electricity, and only the phone to break the monotony. "That's about all there is to do down here — talk on the telephone and try to stay warm," he said, noting that the Indiana ground is still frozen from winter.

He's had water, but no solid food, lowered to him through an air-supply system since beginning the stunt. That's probably just as well, since he can't exactly run to the bathroom whenever he wants to.

Evans' execution raises moral issue

Once again, the constitutionality of the death penalty as a form of "cruel and unusual punishment" has surfaced with the execution of John Louis Evans, 33, of Alabama, in the first administration of the death penalty there since 1965.

It took nearly 10 minutes and three 1,900-volt surges of electricity before Evans, convicted to die in the electric chair for the 1977 robbery-murder of a Mobile, Ala., pawnbroker, was pronounced dead Friday night.

Only three attempts? One has to wonder what went through the minds of the executioners as they administered the jolt for the second time? The third time?

State officials, however, are still defending the method of execution chosen to send Evans, and future victims, to their death, saying "It's the only thing we have."

But that's where the officials are wrong. Capital punishment is not the only choice.

"Capital" punishment can be defined as the ultimate form of punishment — the maximum extent of cruelty one can administer to another person — to be used only in the most extreme instances when no other alternative of punishment exists.

Are officials saying no other alternative could possibly exist, even after a person has been forced to suffer for nearly 10 minutes because of the malfunction of an electric chair?

The Eighth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States prohibits the infliction of cruel and unusual punishment. The Supreme Court, however, has refused to adopt a blanket ruling, saying the death penalty is unconstitutional.

The fact Evans' death did not turn out to be a "nice, little, tidy package deal," as prison officials predicted, is horrifying. If he would have died without suffering, would his death have been any more justified?

Too often people tag an impersonal, often inhumane, stereotype to criminals in order to justify the morality of capital punishment — thus making it easier to forget they are human. Easy, that is, until the gruesomeness of the death is highlighted in a three-trial attempt at justice.

The Supreme Court cannot leave the legality of the death penalty issue untouched. To ignore it any longer implies advocation of such instances as the Alabama case.

Evans' execution portrays the drastic need for the Supreme Court to once again tackle the legal, and moral, practice of capital punishment.

Alcoholism: the curable disease

John was the kind of guy most people would think would be successful. Captain of the school's baseball team and a member of the football squad, John was well-liked by all his classmates. A socially motivated person, John enjoyed going out on Friday nights with friends, hitting the local bars whenever possible.

Like others at the party, John had too much to drink. While driving home, John — who was driving 85 mph in a 55-mph zone — was being chased by a policeman. The chase ended as his car smashed into a steel light pole, ending his life.

In past years it has been said drugs such as marijuana and aspirin were the No. 1 killer drugs among people in the United States. Due to a change in society, that myth is no longer in existence.

What's the No. 1 killer among Americans today? Is it tobacco? Is it heart disease?

Alcohol is a drug which has dwarfed and gripped Americans, taking its toll in agony, illness, economic loss, disrupted families and neglected children.

Like other dangerous drugs and diseases, this illness may induce people — both psychologically and physically. This dependence, an illness, is called alcoholism.

REGARDLESS OF WHAT people say, alcoholism is a serious illness in the American society which needs to be taken with more serious thought. It's an illness which, when captured, can destroy a person socially, personally and even spiritually.

A statement from the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism, indicated some 100 million Americans consume alcoholic beverages on a year-round basis. To add to that figure, experts have said an estimated 13.3 million of this group can be classified as alcoholics — an astonishing figure.

Why has alcoholism become a major disease? Could it be people are trying to find a solution to their problems and therefore believe drinking a glass of whiskey or wine is the only means to get rid of their problems? Or could it be the media, with their often distorted views, deceived people into thinking that without alcohol it's not worth having a party?

Whatever the reasons, this disease needs to be looked at more seriously and at the same time something needs to be done about it.

As inflation continues to take its toll on American wallets, alcohol has also grabbed hold of people's pocketbooks. While Americans are complaining about rising cost, no one ever thinks how much it costs to buy a bottle of whiskey in a local supermarket. Alcoholism costs Americans $43 billion a year in lost work, medical expenses, auto accidents and other related problems. To think that we, as people, spend that much money on a can of beer — the effects of which will last only for a short period — is astounding.

ALCOHOLISM HAS BECOME so violent that not only has it affected the older population of adults, the ones most people expect to be the alcoholics, but it has literally destroyed more than half of our nation's youth.

Thanks to the media and other sources which print advertisements encouraging people to drink, 36 percent of our country's high school students get drunk at least four times a year. About one in 20 get drunk at least once a week. Over 40 percent of the nation's college-age students also have the same problem.

Many of the young adults believe getting "high" or getting "bombed" is the only way to survive in this world. However, if many of the them would understand alcoholism is one of the major reasons for deaths among teen-agers and young adults, perhaps many of our young people would take a second look at the issue.

Concerning auto accidents and disrupted families — alcoholism has also become the common cause of high death rates and broken homes.

As many as 205,000 deaths a year can be blamed on drinking. Add 800,000 crashes and 25,000 traffic deaths and it would seem we would do better in a war with El Salvador than we would with a can of beer.

Even though the divorce rate is at an all-time high of 50 percent, we must acknowledge that not only is communication a problem in family life, but so is alcoholism.

FIGURES FROM THE NIAAA state between 30 and 40 percent of delinquent children come from alcoholic homes. With the figure rising daily, does this mean that in the future many of the yet-unborn children who come into this world will eventually wind up as alcoholics?

I'm not going to say drinking beer is bad. Neither am I saying getting drunk is good. I'm not attempting to punish, threaten, bribe or praise anyone who does. All I want to say is alcoholism is a disease and we, as Americans, need to recognize it as a disease.

Like some illnesses, alcoholism can be cured. The question is whether people are going to be willing to admit they have the problem and are willing to seek help.

The only way we can change something is if we admit there needs to be a change. The only way alcoholism is going to be cured is if people admit there is a problem. Until then, alcoholism is going to continue to be the No. 1 killer in our country.

Quality entertainment UPC's goal but concert selection is 'limited'

Editor,

Union Program Council. Just three words, but they mean a lot — or do they? To most students, just here for the duration, they are meaningless; but to a handful of students, including myself, they mean everything from work to play. From "A to zinc."

All of UPC's committees are composed entirely of student volunteers who work hard to bring you the best possible performances, and receive very little recognition for their efforts. Many students attend UPC-sponsored events several times a semester, never realizing that they are even sponsored by UPC. The "Let's Talk About It" series, the weekly movies at the Union, whitewater rafting and rapelling trips, and the displays in the Union Art Gallery are all courtesy of UPC. The eight committees which make up the council provide vital campus functions and a respite from the tedium of schoolwork and the sameness of Aggieville.

Recently, the council's Special Events Committee devoted unbelievable time and effort to the production of the Joan Jett/Huey Lewis concert and was rewarded with a $7,000 to $8,000 loss — but we are not discouraged. The function of UPC is not, after all, to make money, but to bring quality entertainments to the campus, and I think we've succeeded.

It was discouraging to find that only 4,300 students — not even that many when you consider the number of high school and other non-K-State concert goers — on a campus of nearly 20,000 students felt that the concert was worth their time and money.

If this was a reflection on our choice of performers, then so be it. I would not try to place the blame for the success (or the failure) of any of our shows on the student body or on the committee — we can't force you to attend shows you don't want to see; nor are we always perfect in our selection of acts.

It is also important to realize that our choice of touring acts is also extremely limited — many groups don't even consider playing at universities. This leaves us in the same situation as other colleges such as Kansas, Texas A&M, Fort Hays State and Northern Colorado universities — who also booked the Joan Jett/Huey Lewis show.

Our choice is also limited by the availability of concert facilities. We could have brought Pat Benatar to campus in November, but were unable to schedule Ahearn Field House because of conflicts with basketball season. The point is we do our best and will continue to do so.

K-State doesn't need kiddie band

Editor,

Re: "Performers praised for effort but overall, concert flops," by Tanya Branson, in Monday's Collegian.

We would like to express our dismay in the fact that the K-State students are being blamed for the failure of the Joan Jett concert.

Branson wrote, "The problem wasn't so much in her (Jett's) performance or music, it was in Kansas ears too used to pop-rock to appreciate a guitar band."

Contrary to Branson's opinion, there are those of us who consider Jett to be a pop-rock group. Maybe the problem is that Kansas ears are too used to pop-rock and would appreciate a mature guitar band.

If Union Programming Council expects to attract the support of the students of K-State, they will have to refrain from booking "kiddie bands."

Jett not 'top-flight performer'...

Editor,

I am writing this in response to the review of the Joan Jett concert "Performance praised for effort but overall, concert flops," by Tanya Branson, in Monday's Collegian.

Speaking from the experience of almost 30 past concert experiences featuring major headline acts, all I can say is Joan Jett and company left a lot to be desired.

First of all, giving a band praise for effort while putting down the audience for lack of enthusiasm is a poor way to evaluate a concert. I've never known a band with good music to put on a good show and not get a response. Jett failed to meet any of these criteria.

Her popular stuff is OK, leading one to expect a faster-paced show, with more of the same. Instead, we were greeted with a loud, distorted three-chord crash that could be rivaled by any garage band with a lot of amplifiers. Never once did her guitarist break into a searing solo or lead guitar like those crafted by Randy Rhodes or Angus Young.

He (Jett's guitarist Ricky Byrd) had the opportunity to show his stuff when Jett was looking for a guitar that worked; instead, he told a stupid joke and then tried to satisfy the crowd with lame explanations of the fret board. All in all, it was a disappointment.

If Union Programming Council wants to bring in a good show, then they should bring in a band which has skill with its instruments, as well as some integrity (even if only a slight amount). If bands such as Rush, Scorpions, Blue Oyster Cult or Triumph can't be booked due to basketball, etc., then the alternative should be to put in small hall performers like Phil Collins, Dire Straits, Weather Report or Chick Corea into McCain Auditorium.

If neither of these alternatives is feasible, then UPC should save its money and ours. Jett is not a top-flight performer — and should have never been billed as one.

...UPC needs to get student input

Editor,

Re: "Performers praised for effort but overall, concert flops," by Tanya Branson, in Monday's Collegian.

The article begins with the great line: "Maybe Manhattan just isn't ready for rock'n'roll." Wrong. If you had been to Aggieville recently, you would have seen standing-room only crowds at Brother's Tavern for the Clocks and Plain Jane, and at the Sports Fan-Attic for JTN. These are real rock'n'roll bands.

Joan Jett is a kiddy-rock band geared toward high school aged students. Union Programming Council may as well have gotten Kiss or Shaun Cassidy — but at least then we would have seen a stage show.

The second line of her article should be changed from "...anyone with an amplifier should get out of town," to "...anyone on UPC should get out of town." UPC needs to get the students' ideas on concert groups — by means of a poll or voting on a few (bands) — before they are signed to a contract, to prevent such a loss of money on ticket sales.

It was really nice of her to make excuses for the bands' poor ticket sales and performance, but I doubt they were "road-tired" on their first stop — especially when they arrived a day early.

In conclusion, I'd like to say it is not "Kansas ears too used to pop-rock to appreciate a guitar band"; rather, "Kansas ears too used to a guitar band to appreciate bubblegum rock."

Severance tax revenue 'soft and overstated'; Legislature to handle problem, Hayden says

TOPEKA (AP) — House Speaker Mike Hayden said Tuesday he believes revenue from the severance tax will fall short of projections in the first few months of collection, but it won't be a big problem because the 1984 Legislature can make adjustments next January to minimize the shortfall.

"I've always thought the revenue projections were soft and probably overstated," Hayden said in an interview as he tied up loose ends following Sunday night adjournment of the 1983 session.

"I can't tell how much the shortfall will be, but I do think there will be a shortfall.

"However, if the revenue is short and if they've got trouble over there in the Revenue Department collecting it, we'll be in a position to deal with it in January and not have it result in a large loss of revenue to the state."

Revenue Director Mike Lennen estimated the department needed 38 new employees at a cost of nearly $1 million to administer the tax. The Legislature game him 26 workers and $558,000.

Hayden commented as Gov. John Carlin, who pushed for three years for a mineral production tax and rode it to reelection last year, prepared to sign the bill enacting it into law Wednesday morning.

The signing ceremony was scheduled for 10 a.m. in the second floor rotunda of the Capitol, an unusual splash for a bill signing but commensurate with the emphasis Carlin put on need for the tax during his first term as governor.

THE TAX ON OIL, natural gas, coal and salt is projected to generate $104 million in the first fiscal year it is in effect. Of that amount, $97 million is counted upon for the state general fund. The other $7 million goes back to counties and school districts to compensate them for erosion of their local property tax bases as a result of reduced valuations on mineral property.

"I don't dispute Revenue's figures on the amount the tax should produce," said the Republican speaker from Atwood.

"I just say look at the (oil and gas) industry and look at the nature of the tax. Just like all individuals and businesses who have to pay taxes, that industry is going to make business decisions to reduce their tax liability. That is going to erode some of the revenue. I don't know how much."

The tax goes into effect May 1, but because of the gearing up of a new bureau in the Revenue Department to administer it, the first payments are not due from producers until Sept. 20.

DESPITE THE CONTROVERSIES surrounding enactment of the severance tax and increases in income, motor fuel, cigarette and liquor taxes to generate $198.8 million more revenue to the state, Hayden said reaction so far has been positive about the '83 session.

"There have been nothing but complimentary feelings from legislators, both Republicans and Democrats," he said. "And of the people who have called and written, only one opposed the gas tax and eight or 10 called to congratulate the Legislature for what it did on highway funding."

Democrats who tried to block passage of a two-cent increase in the state's motor fuel taxes effective in July and an additional penny increase in January misjudged what the public's reaction would be, Hayden said.

"Democrats feared that tax because Carlin exploited the issue of the severance tax versus the gas tax in his campaign against Sam Hardage last year. The truth is

ERA supporter to speak Friday at convocation

Co-founder of Mormons for ERA, Sonia Johnson, is scheduled to speak on "Women and the Quest for Justice" in her University Convocation at 10:30 a.m. Friday in McCain Auditorium.

Johnson is scheduled to speak for the ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment and will reveal the previously hidden and still secretive political and financial empire of the Mormon Church that the church's hierarchy has put into operation to oppose ERA, according to a flyer. The flyer was composed by the Program Corporation of America, White Plains, N.Y., and sent to Phillip Kirmser, professor of electrical engineering and chairman of the Convocation committee.

Johnson was excommunicated from the church Dec. 5, 1979, because of her outspoken support of women and the ERA.

Johnson received her doctorate from Rutgers and has taught English in both American and foreign universities. She cofounded the group Women for ERA in 1979.

A question-and-answer session will follow the speech at 1 p.m. in the Union Little Theatre.

City will submit bid for Bell Telephone Building

The Manhattan City Commission voted in a special meeting Tuesday to authorize the city manager to submit a bid for purchase of the former Southwestern Bell Telephone Building, subject to later approval of the commission.

City Manager Don Harmon told commissioners the alternatives they have regarding efforts to authorize the submission of a formal bid for the building in the 100 block of North Fourth Street. "You can recess into executive session to discuss your feelings, determine a price and submit a bid," Harmon said. "Or you can submit a bid and wait and see what happens."

Commissioner Eugene Klingler asked that if the commission submitted a bid, would the amount of the bid become public knowledge.

"Any action must be taken in a public meeting," William Frost, city attorney said. "You cannot take action in executive session. If you decide to submit a bid, it must be through the action of the commission in a public meeting."

Frost suggested the possibility of submitting a bid not binding on the city, which would be subject to later approval by the commission.

"Normally the staff negotiates a contract and it is brought back to the commission for their approval," Frost said.

Commissioner Rick Mann expressed concern that a seller might not feel comfortable with a bid that is not binding. Klingler pointed out that if the bid was not accepted, the city would not be any worse off than if it had not submitted a bid.

"I personally would like the city manager to submit a bid," Klingler said. "I think we ought to go after it."

In a memo to the commission, the city staff recommended that the city not submit a bid.

Commissioner Suzanne Lindamood had previously held doubts about the space utilization of the building, but said she wanted to find a permanent home for the health department.

"I talked to Chuck Murphy (administrator for the Riley County Health Department) and he answered my questions on how we can fill the space," Lindamood said. "Some other services could be housed in the same building."

Klingler moved to authorize the city manager to submit a bid for the purchase of the Bell Telephone Building, subject to later approval by the commission. The motion was seconded and passed.

Flaherty named acting assistant provost

Roberta Flaherty, head of the Conferences Section in the Division of Continuing Education, has been named acting assistant provost for continuing education.

J. Lance Kramer, who has been assistant provost since 1978, has announced his resignation to become director of continuing education at Ohio State University.

Provost Owen Koeppe said search for a new assistant provost already is underway.

As assistant provost, Kramer reorganized the KSU Division of Continuing Education into four sections: Academic Outreach, Conferences, Development and Sponsored Projects. This is a model that other states have since adopted.

Under Kramer's guidance, the Conference Section expanded a small national conference effort into the National Issues in Higher Education Conference Series. In the past five years more than 2,600 professionals from 400 institutions in all 50 states have attended the conferences.

Day honored with first Cobb memorial award

Elizabeth Day, junior in political science, will become the first recipient of the Reba L. Cobb Memorial Scholarship for Outstanding Women in Political Science at ceremonies Thursday.

The scholarship is in memory of Cobb, the representative to the Kansas Legislature from McPherson who died earlier this year. She was 27.

Cobb graduated magna cum laude from K-State in 1975. She was a member of Pi Sigma Alpha, national political science honor society, and was elected first woman representative from the 73rd District in Kansas in 1982.

Her family and friends established the annual scholarship to pay tribute to her scholastic achievements and leadership abilities. It will be awarded annually to a woman student at K-State majoring in political science. Selection will be made during the recipient's junior year.

Halmos to speak at mathematics honor dinner

Paul Halmos, distinguished professor of mathematics at Indiana University and internationally known for his contributions to measure theory and Hilbert space theory, will be the featured speaker at the first Friends of Mathematics Scholarship and Awards dinner Thursday.

Scheduled to begin at 6:30 p.m. in the Flint Hills Room of the Union, the dinner will be preceded by a reception at 6 p.m. in the Cat's Pause.

"The purpose of the event is to recognize outstanding undergraduate and graduate students as well as outstanding faculty," Leonard Fuller, professor of mathematics and dinner coordinator, said.

Reservations may be made by contacting Fuller at the Department of Mathematics, Cardwell Hall. Alumni and friends of mathematics are invited to attend, Fuller said.

Oukrop named as visiting professor in Hawaii

Carol Oukrop, associate professor of journalism and mass communications, has been named a visiting associate professor to the University of Hawaii at Manoa in Honolulu for the 1983-84 school year. She is scheduled to leave Manhattan in August.

While at the University of Hawaii, Oukrop will teach courses in public relations and news-editorial journalism and serve as an adviser to the chapter of Public Relations Student Society of America, a role she has held at K-State since 1972.

An accredited member of the Public Relations Society of America, Oukrop is also a member of the organization's continuing education board and is chairwoman of the Educators Section's liaison with other professional organizations.

Oukrop, who joined the K-State faculty in 1969, began an extensive study of newspaper coverage of rape last summer. During her professorship in Honolulu, she plans further research with the general public.

Computer conference to aid small businesses

There's help available for managers of small businesses who want to learn more about the advantages and disadvantages of small computers.

It will be provided through a Mini-Computer Conference, scheduled for May 4 at the Holiday Inn in Manhattan.

The conference has been planned by K-State students in a class in business policy taught by Joseph Dobenin, professor of management.

"A similar conference last year was well attended," F.J. Cronenwett, senior in marketing and a student involved in arranging the conference, said. "The conference this year promises to be even more relevant because of advances in software and hardware which are making newer models more efficient and less costly."

The morning program will feature a presentation by a Topeka accounting firm. Following lunch there will be an opportunity for "hands on" experience as representatives of nine computer manufacturers demonstrate hardware and software.

Cronenwett said advance registraton is $25 for the first person and $15 for each additional person with the same company or organization. Registration at the door will cost $5 more.

Three professors to offer insight to Soviet policy

The Russians seem to be everywhere lately. First they were at the 48th Annual Kansas Relays as an athletic delegation.

Now they are at K-State. This time, however, it is not a personal appearance but a mental one. The Soviets are the subjects of the "What About the Russians?" scheduled for Wednesday and Thursday in Union 208.

"What About the Russians?" is designed for the public to explore some of the most basic questions about the Soviet Union.

The series is the highlight of the month-long "Firebreaks," war/peace game sponsored recently by the Other Manhattan Project.

A look into Soviet foreign policy and military strategy will be presented by three K-State professors from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday. Discussions will focus on the nuclear arms race and also attempt to answer the question "What About the Russians?"

The schedule includes Jacob Kipp, associate professor of history, speaking on "Soviet Foreign Policy and Military Power" at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday. Also on Wednesday, Joseph Hajda, associate professor of political science, will speak on "The Many Faces of Soviet Foreign Policy" at 8:30 p.m.

On Thursday, T. Alden Williams, professor of political science, will speak on "Invincibility and Other Strategic Prayers" at 7:30 p.m. and Kipp will speak on "The Soviet Military and Arms Control" at 8:30 p.m.

"It is very important for the Americans to know what the American posture is and should be," Kipp said. "Americans should understand the nature and realities of a nuclear war threat."

The Soviets perceive war in a different perspective than the Americans, according to Kipp. He said that perspective is influenced and affected by the ideology, history, nature and structure of Soviet society and the Soviets' perceptions of nuclear and military strategies.

"It would be helpful for students to know what the Soviet priorities are on foreign policy and how these differ from the popular perceptions on Soviet foreign policy by the Americans," Hajda said.

Attorney General urges continuance of Kansas Crime Stoppers program

Kansas Attorney General Robert Stephan stressed the need for the continuance of the Crime Stoppers program Tuesday, while speaking at the Holidome to a group of officials involved with the organization.

"I have watched with some delight, the growth of Crime Stoppers in Kansas," he said, endorsing the group.

Crime Stoppers is the group of law enforcement officials and private citizens who publicize the facts of a "crime-of-the-week," and also offer a reward for information leading to the arrest of the people who committed the crime.

The organization has had some success, he said, because the Kansas crime rate has dropped since adoption of the program last year.

Stephan pointed out it is important to publicize the human element involved in crimes because "too often victims of crimes become just a statistic."

"We must not become desensitized to the human suffering involved with crime," he said.

According to Stephan, Crime Stoppers provides a public service by showing what crime can really be like with television commercials, making the public more sympathetic with the needs of victims.

"Crime Stoppers has helped focus in on the real people involved with the committal of crimes. Public awareness is just so very important.

"Kansans are positive people. Crime Stoppers lends citizen input to very important issues," Stephan said.

The attorney general added he hopes Crime Stoppers will have an effect on the state's sentencing and parole practices in the future and that it probably will if enough people get involved and voice their opinions on such matters.

"Generally, the same people continue to violate the law," Stephan said.

The attorney general said it would be best to "decide what is fair and then apply the law accordingly," instead of sentencing a criminal to 20 years and then releasing him after serving only a few years.

Crime of the week

CRIME STOPPERS

539-7777 CONFIDENTIALLY

Crime Stoppers of Manhattan/Riley County, Inc.

This week's Crime Stoppers crime-of-the-week involves a residential burglary.

Crime Stoppers of Manhattan/Riley County, a non-profit organization, provides details of an unsolved crime each week. Citizens are encouraged to provide information needed to assist police in solving this and other crimes. Informants, who will remain anonymous, can receive cash rewards of up to $1,000.

Between 6 p.m. March 11 and 10 p.m. March 13, someone broke into a residence in the 100 block of North Dartmouth and removed numerous items.

It appeared the suspect first tried to pry open a basement window but resorted to breaking the glass with a rock to gain entrance. Once inside, the perpetrator filled a pillow case with coins, camera equipment and a large amount of jewelry.

During the past six weeks, three other residences have been burglarized in west Manhattan. These crimes were all of a similar nature in that pillow cases were used to carry off jewelry and other valuables.

Anyone with information on this crime, location of stolen property or information on any other crime should call Crime Stoppers at 539-7777.

'The Last Metro' worth seeing despite major flaws, simplicity

By GARY JOHNSON
Collegian Reviewer

Francois Truffaut's "The Last Metro" is a tribute to the perpetual activity of gallant people who kept theaters open, and in fact thriving, throughout the horrors of the Occupation of France.

With a great degree of subtlety, Truffaut presents a penetrating account of how these people survived in those times of stress. He shows them rising to occasions and adjusting their ethics with no more or less heroism than ordinary people.

The resourcefulness of those who continued the show business tradition regardless of German curfews and censors is recorded with Truffaut's usual sweet-natured optimism. He accentuates the positive and the romantic. The idea of theater-goers who miss the evening's last train while remaining in the theater is no doubt a very romantic notion for Truffaut.

In a metaphorical sense, that is the film hero's predicament. Lucas Steiner (Heinz Bennent) was at one time a major power in the theater of France. However, during the German Occupation, he is forced to hide out in the theater's celler, awaiting the day when his wife, Marion (Catherine Deneuve), can secure him passage out of the country through the underground.

AT THE SAME TIME, Marion has taken over the business end of the theater and is preparing a new production. From a broken ventilation pipe, Lucas listens to the rehearsals, preparing notes of flaws he detects and passing them along to Marion.

The production's leading man, Bernard Granger (Gerard Depardieu), is a womanizer who fervently lusts after the wardrobe designer until he finds out she is a lesbian: "I only wanted to sleep with her. It was like craving a warm croissant." His admiration then turns to Marion.

This is where many of the film's flaws occur. Marion and Bernard spend much of the film trying to keep passion restrained, but even so, you would expect to sense it boiling below the surface, under gestures and conversations. It isn't apparent until late in the film that Marion feels anything for Bernard, and then it comes as quite a shock because no indications had been seen.

TO BE SURE, Marion is a strong woman who can keep her feelings under wraps, but this can't fully explain why no sparks between her and Bernard are noticeable until they spontaneously ignite in passion in his dressing room. Even Lucas, from his position listening to rehearsals through a broken pipe, can tell something is happening between the two, but the audience is kept in the dark.

One of the film's stronger elements is the role of compliance with Nazis in the occupied country. Marion is almost fooled into pandering to the Germans in order to keep the theater operating. At one point, she even slaps Bernard when discovering he is active in the resistance.

Initially she resents having to court a theater critic who can grant a performance visa, but later in the film she submissively reaches for German support. It's at this time she realizes the grave mistake compliance had been, and thus her admiration for Bernard and his underground activities grows considerably.

THE MOST interesting character in the film is the theater critic, Daxiat — based on the notorious fascist critic Alain Laubreaux. He is the only character in the film who gives the impression there is far more below the surface than what can be seen. After the play's opening night cur-

Irishman keeps tradition alive by fiddling his musical heritage

By CATHY KARLIN
Staff Writer

The orange-carpeted modern atmosphere of the Catskeller definitely detracted from Jim Hurlburt's Nooner Tuesday.

But to close your eyes and just listen to the magic of Hurlburt's fiddle was to take a trip back in time. The lyrical notes played to the imagination, without words to confuse the picture in your mind.

Hurlburt, sophomore in animal sciences and industry, began his songs with an occasional bit of hasty tuning, but developed each one into a full-flavored, melodious piece of history. In "Red-Haired Boy" his fiddle spoke of Scottish kilts, misty bogs and freckled lads. Old-time bluegrass tunes, such as "Old Joe Clark," suggested a dusky Texas bunkhouse full of cowboys and the aroma of chewing tobacco.

Irish slow airs such as "The Wind that Shakes the Barley" ambled mournfully like a tired laborer leaving the potato fields at sunset. Country waltzes swayed like couples at a barroom dance, garbed in smoky riding clothes and sweat-stained cowboy hats; and jigs and reels frolicked like drunken Irishmen after a holy day.

HURLBURT ENRICHED his performance by telling the history or legend behind each tune as he introduced it. Many of his songs, such as "Cold Frosty Morning" and "I'm Just a Poor Wayfarin' Stranger," are known as modal tunes.

"A modal tune is the United States-Central European derivation of the black spirituals. This is the way the people in the Appalachian Mountains had of expessing their feelings and ways of their life that were not often good. They lived in very poor conditions a lot of times, and it came out in their music," Hurlburt said.

He also played some Scottish-Irish counterparts of modal tunes, such as "Loch Loman Castle," in which the notes trickled out faster than an Irishman's wink.

Though Hurlburt never sang while he played, he did sing parts of songs like "Boiling Cabbage Down," an old European tune in which the singer takes "my girl to the blacksmith shop, to have her mouth made small; she turned around a couple times, and swallowed shop and all."

HURLBURT CELEBRATED his Irish heritage (his great-great grandfather came to America as a result of the 19th-century potato famine) not only in his music but in the green shirt and tie on his cowboy hat he wore as part of his costume. He is also a member of the group "The Life of Riley" which plays Celtic-Irish music.

Hurlburt called his music traditional, but sadly enough there were probably few in the audience who are aware of the rich heritage of the music he played.

"You can recognize the tune inside it, but you got to listen to it, you got to feel it," he said.

With the song "Down in the Willow Garden," Hurlburt told of the story of "Old Rosin the Beau," a man who was so impressed with his deeds he wrote, "I did it for the good of my nation, my sons have all gone low, I just hope the next generation, will remember old Rosin the Beau."

Meat producers respond negatively to PIK

Although the Payment-in-Kind program has lifted the spirits of the United States crop producer, it has caused no such elation for the livestock producer who specializes in feeding cattle, hogs or poultry.

"Many in the livestock segment of agriculture are beginning to think the federal Payment-in-Kind program, aimed at helping crop producers get rid of grain surpluses, has had a negative impact on livestock and poultry producers," Jack Riley, professor of animal sciences and industry, said.

The PIK program, which went into effect this spring, has been mostly heralded with praise by crop producers, especially those from the Corn Belt who often feed the crops they grow to their cattle and hogs.

For the crop producer who participates in the program, PIK is an economic shot in the arm. The farmer can cut back on crop production and receive 80 percent of the grain he normally would have produced from feed grain the government has in storage. For winter wheat, the government rate-of-return figure is 95 percent.

Or, the farmer can sell his rights to the crop without the normal input costs of growing it.

FOR THE PRODUCER of irrigated corn, those input costs can run from $200 to $300 per acre.

"As soon as the feds announced the magnitude of the sign-up by farmers for PIK (about 70 percent of crop producers), we have had a seller's market for grain in this country," Riley said. "Livestock producers currently are having to pay 20 to 25 cents or more a bushel above what the futures grain price quotes are for corn and sorghum."

Mike Sands, assistant professor of economics, said, "The PIK program has the potential for a bigger, longer-term effect on the livestock business than it has for the grain business — and in the short run, it is negative for the traditional livestock feeder.

"While PIK may affect one year's grain crop, we will be seeing the potential impact of the PIK program on the livestock business two, three or even four years down the road. The market forces are already in motion."

THE LIVESTOCK producer is the No. 1 customer of feed grains. "Short-term manipulations on demand often have a drastic effect on other segments of the marketplace," Riley said. "Assuming that the crop grower and the livestock feeder are one and the same — which I think happened here — is a mistake. But I am sure it was a popular move in the Corn Belt.

"Policy makers must realize that making moves in one phase of the market could be jeopardizing the grain market's biggest consumer and, in the Plains states, the biggest money generator for the economy. Over 50 percent of the feed grains have been used for domestic livestock feed. A smaller share of the market has been for export and human food."

Riley said he thinks it makes no sense that the formula of 80-percent base yield was derived when the farmer has no inputs for the crop.

"THE GOVERNMENT unfairly subsidizes the grain producer to enter the market to purchase calves to graze out wheat, competing with the traditional cattle man who is trying to purchase cattle to graze on native pasture.

"This situation, which is one result of PIK, has raised the price of both feed grains and calves. We have some livestock producers who are really having to bite the bullet in terms of what they pay for grain. I guess they are just going to have to watch from the bench and hope they can get back into the ballgame next year," Riley said.

Sands said, "The crops man is going to take his grain from PIK and leave it in storage and hope that prices go up even further. We are going to have a lot of people reacting to this year's corn crop much the same as they did during the drought year of 1980 when there was less corn. We may have a lot of crops people sitting on their crops at harvest time, looking for a higher price than they could have at harvest time."

THIS SPRING the purchase price for corn could be at $3 per bushel for corn, Sands said. He added that the producer cannot make much money feeding corn to hogs.

If PIK only lasts one year, Sands said, "the crops man will probably feel the impact this year with a little carry over through 1984, and then it will be back to fence row-to-fence row planting."

The effect on the livestock industry will likely be opposite. One speculation is that PIK will cause a continuation of liquidations in the number of cows, because of the negative impact on feeder prices.

As feed costs go up, livestock producers bid lower prices for feeder cattle. PIK could also cause hog producers to raise less hogs because higher feed prices make it harder for them to find a profit.

"Once that happens down the road, you will have compounded the low livestock numbers with a grain surplus, because livestock are the major feed grain consumer," Riley said.

Korean buys $20 million of grain after taking K-State short-course

Some students attend class hoping just to learn enough to receive a passing grade. But Young K. Lee, manager of the Korean-based Sunkyoung International Inc., used what he learned in an International Grains Program short course to buy $20 million worth of U.S. grain.

He bought the grain, as a purchasing agent for Korea, during the two-week course on the U.S. grain marketing system April 11-22 at K-State.

The purchase included 100,000 metric tons of corn and 36,000 metric tons of wheat. In addition, he has a tender out for another 150,000 metric tons of corn.

Korea is primarily a cash customer of U.S. grain, Harvey Kiser, associate professor of economics and short course coordinator, said.

Lee was one of 40 participants from 16 countries who participated in the course, which provided information on all aspects of the U.S. grain marketing system.

GOAL OF THE course was to increase understanding of the U.S. marketing system and the milling and processing systems related to it.

Children visit Weber Arena, meet animals 'face-to-face'

BY TAMI POTTER
Collegian Reporter

It was hard to tell which made more noise — the school children or the bawling cow.

All kinds of squeals, grunts and squawks came from Weber Arena Monday as Manhattan area school children got a chance to view farm animals face-to-face at the annual Block and Bridle Club Kiddies' Barnyard.

The project was not costly for the club because the only expense incurred was for coloring books given to the children, according to Jackie Russ, junior in animal sciences and industry and committee co-chairwoman. The coloring book, purchased from the Farm Bureau, is filled with facts about farm animals.

"All the animals came from our own research units. All we had to do was get the instructors permission to use them," said Mark Silva, junior in animal sciences and industry and a committee member.

Signs were placed above the animals' pens to tell what the animals are used for. One sign above the dairy cow and her calf showed that one cow gives enough milk to furnish nine families with one-half gallon of milk every day.

THE CHILDREN had a chance to get a "hands-on" experience by petting the animals. Cattle, sheep, chickens, horses and pigs were there for demonstration.

The club brought a Simmental cow and her calf to the arena for the children to see, but the mother was removed when she got upset from the overwhelming attention.

"We had a Simmmental and her calf penned over there," Silva said. "When all the kids came in, she got nervous and ran to one side of the pen and knocked it down. I got on my high horse and ran to that side and then she knocked over the other side. She started running toward the door where all the kids were coming in and I started after her. We finally got her after she was running down the hall.

"It was quick thinking. Just natural instincts, I guess," he said.

MOST OF the visitors were preschoolers, kindergartners and first-graders, Silva said.

"I think it's a great idea. A lot of these kids have never seen these animals up close. They may have heard what it's like to milk a dairy cow but none of them probably have done that," Silva said.

Most of the children were eager to pet the animals.

"They just get going. They are anxious to get in there and touch them. It's youth curiosity, probably," Silva said.

The children aren't so crazy about the smell.

"When they first come in they say, 'Ooh, it stinks in here.' I tell them that it's just fresh country air. They say, 'I don't like fresh country air'."

THE CLUB plans the barnyard for the same time every year.

"We have just annually had it at this time. This is the time when schools take field trips," Russ said.

Grain

ficer for U.S. Wheat Associates in Mexico City, said training provided by the course is critical. "If buyers have a bad experience the first time they buy U.S. grains, our competitors will come in and say their system is simpler — why not buy their grain?"

He also pointed out that Mexican and Colombian governments now allow mills to import their own grain. In the past, the government acquired all grain imports.

"These individuals must now learn how to import for their own companies. This means that there will be a number of new grain buyers who have no experience buying U.S. grain. It's vital to train them," Gonsalves said.

FRANCISCO GAMEZ, general manager of a flour and corn mill in Guatemala City, Guatemala, said, "The course covers all areas I must deal in. These speakers are very, very sharp on what I need to know. It has also been very important that we can ask many questions. I've received many answers for questions I have had."

Necati Erdag, assistant sales manager for the soil products office in Ankara, Turkey, added that the information he gained during the course will help him import and export the various types of grains.

"In addition to these individuals," Kiser said, "we have a gentleman from Bolivia who was concerned about attempting to buy seed oats that can be grown at higher elevations.

"And the representative for U.S. Feed Grains Council in Venezuela was interested in obtaining information that would help him set up carcass shows once he returns. From those shows he plans to convey how vital the use of good feed grains is in animal production. If he can increase meat consumption and stress the importance of good feed, he can increase feed imports."

David Salmon of the U.S. Foreign Agriculture Service added, "these executives obviously came from their respective countries with the intention of learning as much as possible about the United States grain trade. We hope they put their information to work to ensure they receive the quality of grain they desire."

The short course was provided by the International Grains Program with checkoff funds from the Kansas grain commissions, U.S. Wheat Associates, U.S. Feed Grains Council and U.S. Foreign Agriculture Service.

K-State pitching falters; 'Cats lose double-header

By BRAD GILLISPIE
Sports Editor

Big hits and poor pitching killed the K-State baseball team Tuesday at Myers Field, where the Wildcats dropped a double-header to Northwest Missouri State, 11-2 and 9-7.

The hitting of NW Missouri's Steve Phillips spelled defeat for the Wildcats in the first game, as the right fielder drove in six runs with a single and a grand-slam home run.

The Bearcats got things started early, hitting up K-State pitcher Scott McClanahan for three runs in first inning. Ron Ballard led off with a triple to center and came home with the game's first run on a ground out by Phillips. Chuck Lynn then rapped a double to center, and was joined on the basepaths by Pete Barrett, who was walked. Both runners were advanced on a wild pitch by McClanahan.

After Lynn was thrown out for the second out on a fielder's choice that put Paul England on first, Brian Quinn hit a single to center to score Barrett. England then scored on an error by K-State second baseman Kerry Golden.

K-State looked as though it was going to keep up with NW Missouri, as the Wildcats scored two runs in their half of the first. Mark Teague led off with a single to left and scored on a double by Cary Colbert. Colbert was thrown out trying to stretch it into a triple. Mike Smart then reached first on a single, went to second on a single by Jay Kvasnicka, and scored on Scott Pick's single for K-State's only other run of the game.

WHILE K-STATE'S scoring ended at that point, the Bearcats continued to build to their lead. After scoring one run in the second to take a 4-2 lead, NW Missouri tallied three runs in the fourth. The inning was highlighted by a two-run homer by Lynn that also scored Phillips.

The icing on the cake for the Bearcats came in the seventh, though, when they scored four runs on Phillips' homer. Brian Jennings got on base with a one-out single, and was advanced on an error by Colbert that allowed Biggs to reach first. Ballard walked to load the bases, setting the scene for Phillips' blast to right field.

Once again, the Wildcats were plagued with errors, being charged with three that accounted for three runs. McClanahan took the loss for K-State, allowing 10 runs on 10 hits, walking five. His record dropped to 3-4.

THE SECOND GAME was better for K-State hitters, but the Wildcats encountered the same problems with poor pitching and faulty fielding enroute to a 9-7 loss. NW Missouri was led by Lynn, who had six RBIs on a single and a homer.

The 'Cats started things off on the right foot, as Golden hit a one-out single and scored on a triple by Colbert. Colbert came in on a single by Mike Smart, who later scored on a Scott Pick triple.

Both teams tallied one run in the third, but NW Missouri exploded for four in the fourth and fifth innings. Biggs led off the fourth with a single to left and advanced to second when Ballard walked. Phillips drove in Biggs with a double to left, followed by Lynn's single that scored both Ballard and Phillips. Two batters later, Lynn was brought in by a single by England.

THE FIFTH WAS very similar to the fourth, as Biggs, Ballard, Phillips and Lynn all scored again. Biggs walked with two outs and went to second on a single by Ballard. Another single by Phillips scored Biggs and brought up Lynn. The Bearcats' catcher smacked a three-run homer over the left field fence to end the scoring.

K-State put two runs of its own on the board in the fifth. Kvasnicka's single in the inning advanced Smart, who had previously walked. An error advanced both runners, and Smart scored on a ground out by Pick. A sacrifice fly by Steve Goodwin scored Kvasnicka for the second run.

The Wildcats added another run in the seventh when Kvasnicka led off with a triple to right. He scored on a double-play ball by Don Grause, that also took Pick, who had walked, off the basepaths. Goodwin grounded out to short to end the game.

The Wildcats dropped to 17-18 with the two losses. NW Missouri improved its record to 15-16. K-State's next action is a double-header this afternoon against Washburn at Frank Myers Field. The games, which mark the end of K-State's home schedule, begin at 1:30.

Rugby club places third in western regional

By KEVIN DALE
Collegian Reporter

COLLEGE STATION, Texas — The K-State rugby team was upset in its bid for a national championship by the University of Oklahoma on Saturday, as a very fast Sooner club capitalized on the 'Cats' mistakes to pull off the upset of the tournament.

In the first game, the Wildcats came from behind to defeat the host team, Texas A&M, 16-3.

The weather was perfect for the game and the Texas A&M Aggies came out ready to play from the beginning. K-State could not get rolling and made some uncharacteristic mistakes which allowed the Aggies to connect on a penalty kick that put them in the lead, 3-0.

The Wildcats started to come alive and opened up their running game, moving the ball downfield. Greg Dentino finished off the drive as he ran through the final four A&M players to score K-State's first points of the game. Bill Knopick hit the extra point and K-State was ahead 6-3.

The second half was a mirror image of the first as K-State was slow in moving the ball. The Wildcats finally began to force the action and moved the ball. Scott Peck ran the ball into the try zone, and the Wildcats started to pull away from the Aggies.

THE 'CATS then began to stop the A&M backs before they could get moving. Texas attempted to pass the ball out, when Jeff Brunner leveled an Aggie runner and jarred the ball loose. Dentino then picked up the ball and passed it to Rick Ashelman, who outraced everyone to the goal line to finish off the scoring, placing K-State up 16-3.

K-State spent the remainder of the game trying to run out the clock and stay clear of mistakes that would rob them of the first-round victory.

After a two-hour rest, the Wildcats took the field against the Oklahoma Sooners. The Sooners were much smaller but had the reputation of being very fast.

K-State started off playing a little better and put the pressure on OU from the outset. The 'Cats were controlling the ball and moving it forward. The Sooners then began to use their speed and force the ball down the field. K-State was called offsides and Oklahoma connected on the penalty kick to go into the lead, 3-0.

THE SOONERS got the ball close again after some K-State mistakes, and once again the Wildcats were called offsides. The Sooners collected another penalty kick to go ahead 6-0.

In the second half the Wildcats could not get the ball up the field because of the speed of the OU backs, who began to run at will on the 'Cats.

The Sooners forced the ball down to the try zone and finally pushed it over for the first try of the game. The extra kick was good and the Sooners were up 12-0.

K-State tried desperately to get something going, but Oklahoma was too good to allow the Wildcats to get back into the game. Each time the Wildcats would get a run going, their mistakes would keep them from getting the ball into the zone. OU finally ran out the clock and moved to the championship game against the Air Force Academy.

PATTEN WAS happier with the play of his team compared to the A&M game, even though they lost.

"We played with more intensity," he said. "We had a few breakdowns in the first half, but overall we played better. OU is a better team. They know how to play the game."

In the game for third place, the Wildcats were out for some vengeance against the University of Nebraska.

Kansas City drafts Blackledge in first round

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The answer to Kansas City's Steve Fuller-or-Bill Kenney quarterback controversy, John Mackovic apparently decided, is neither Steve Fuller nor Bill Kenney.

And so the first-year head coach surprised everybody Tuesday by making quarterback Todd Blackledge, who led Penn State to its first national title, the Chiefs' first-round draft choice.

Mackovic, a quarterback groomer as a Dallas Cowboy assistant, has promised to reshape the Chiefs' sluggish offense into a high-powered passing attack. His predecessor, Marv Levy, spent three years waffling between Fuller and Kenney.

"We're looking for a person we can build our football team around the next few years," Mackovic said Tuesday. "He was the best player around whom we could develop a team. He's a big, tall, strong drop-back passer. He throws deep. He has a strong, quick arm. He has made a steady, consistent development through his college career."

Mackovic insisted that Blackledge's selection did not mean he had given up on Fuller or Kenney.

"If it develops into a competitive race between all three, we will turn out to have a better offense," Mackovic said. "I have no timetable for him at all. The quarterback position is the focal point of the offense. Therefore, I felt it important for us to strengthen the position. We'll probably carry three quarterbacks."

LATER, HOWEVER, Mackovic said the Chiefs had been contacted by one team about trading either Fuller or Kenney.

"I would not be truthful if I said no one has called," Mackovic said. "One team has called."

Blackledge threw 41 touchdown passes during his college career and quarterbacked the Nittany Lions to Coach Joe Paterno's first national championship with a victory over Georgia in this year's Sugar Bowl.

As a senior, the 6-foot-4, 220-pounder hit 55.1 percent of his passes for 2,218 yards and 22 touchdowns. Blackledge, the second quarterback taken behind Stanford's John Elway, said he would not expect to unseat both incumbents immediately.

"I don't think that would be a fair situation for me or for the Kansas City Chiefs," he said in an interview from State College, Pa. "I think the two guys that are there are fairly well established and they are both good quarterbacks. It would not be realistic for me to go down there and think that I could be competitive right away for the starting job. Maybe next year and the year after I'll be ready to challenge for that job. It's not feasible for me to come right in and challenge right away."

BLACKLEDGE ALSO said he was pleased to be the second quarterback selected.

"I'm real excited about coming down there and playing under Coach Mackovic and what I think is going to be a great pass offense and a great offensive philosophy," said Blackledge, whose father is an assistant coach with the Pittsburgh Steelers. "It's something I've wanted to do for a number of years. I've always wanted to play in the NFL and I've always wanted to be in a real pass-oriented offense."

The Chiefs kept the focus on offense with their selection in the second round, Georgia Tech offensive tackle Dave Lutz, 6-5½, 280.

"The fact that he played under Bill Curry at Georgia Tech certainly is in his favor because Bill was an outstanding lineman and coach of the Lions in the league," said Mackovic. "He's done a great job with some of his players down there, developing them in a pass-style protection. He has the size and the strength to develop into the type of lineman that we need."

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — The women of the K-State tennis team were beaten soundly in the first round of the Big Eight Tournament at the Woodside Racquet Club here Tuesday.

None of the singles competitors made it past the first round. The No.1 doubles team of Christel Felder and Carlye Madelen got the only win of the day for the Wildcats.

Felder and Madelen defeated a team from the University of Nebraska, 1-6, 6-2, 6-2, to stay in the winner's bracket. The pair will now play Oklahoma State. The worst they can do is fourth place. Coach Steve Webb said he was pleased with the team's performance.

"They did real well today," Webb said. "That was the highlight."

The doubles semifinal match was scheduled for 8 a.m. today.

Felder was defeated in the No. 1 singles by Allyson Ingram of the University of Oklahoma, 6-1, 6-1. Tamie Peugh was beaten by Mary Boudreaux of Oklahoma State, 6-1, 6-1; Carlye Madelen lost to Michelle Wells of Oklahoma, 6-1, 6-1; Sue Peugh was downed by Liz Mooney of Nebraska, 6-0, 6-1; Lisa Creighton lost to Sue Mowery of Oklahoma State, 6-1, 6-1; and Beth Nemec fell to Debbie Coleman of the University of Kansas, 7-6, 6-2.

The women fared better in the consolation semi-finals, as three players won their matches and one received a bye. Sue Peugh had no opponent, so she advances onto the second round to play for fifth.

Felder beat Stephanie Dicke of KU, 6-3, 6-3; Madelen defeated Julie Paulson of Iowa State, 6-0, 6-0; and Creighton got past Debbie Stevens of KU, 6-3, 5-7, 6-3. The three also advance to the second round, where they will be competing for fifth place.

Tamie Peugh and Nemec both lost their matches, finishing seventh in the tourney. Peugh lost to Iowa State's Elain Kostopowlo, 6-2, 6-2, and Nemec fell to Keri Lenz, also of Iowa State, 7-6, 6-2.

K-State women defeat Wichita in soccer game

WICHITA — The women's soccer team, playing its second game of the season, defeated the Wichita Rookies, 4-1, here Sunday. Kelly Sherwood, who scored three of K-State's goals, paced the team. K-State's other goal was scored by Anna Donnelly. Cristi Johnson had two assists for the Wildcats.

K-State is now 2-0 on the year. The squad will continue play this weekend, competing in the Terrance Scanlon Tournament in Wichita.

Rugby

The Wildcats started off the game with intensity and dominated the Cornhuskers. K-State moved the ball downfield and Brunner, kicking in place of the injured Bill Knopick, connected on a penalty kick, giving the Wildcats a 3-0 lead.

K-State was then caught offside and Nebraska knotted the score at 3-3.

K-State was determined not to let this one slip away, however, and began to push Nebraska all over the field. Dentino picked up a loose ball and raced into the try zone to put K-State up for good. Dentino also connected on the extra point that proved to be the game winner.

IN THE SECOND HALF, K-State was playing cautiously, just trying to hold off the Cornhuskers. Nebraska was doing everything possible to get back into the lead and finally pushed the ball into the zone to pull within two points.

The ball was touched down too far in the corner, however, and the extra point was no good. K-State held on to capture third place.

K-State's next game is May 1 against Johnson County at the K-State rugby field east of KSU Stadium.

Week honors role, value of professional secretaries

Businesses across the nation will be honoring their secretaries today — proclaimed Professional Secretaries Day — and throughout the week in recognition of Professional Secretaries Week which began April 24.

Sponsored by Professional Secretaries International (PSI) since 1952, 800 chapters of the group in every state in the United States and in each providence in Canada will observe the day, said Georgia Wertzberger, clerk IV with the Extension Service and chairman of the secretary week activities for the local Hartford Bell Chapter.

PSI is a non-profit professional association uniting its members for upgrading the standards of secretarial performance, Wertzberger said. Kansas has 12 chapters of the organization.

According to Wertzberger, the purpose of Professional Secretaries Week is two-fold — to increase public awareness of the role played by secretaries in business, industry, education and government; and to reaffirm the dedication of secretaries to professional performance to their responsibilities.

"Secretary Speakout '83-The Professional Secretary's New Identity in the Information Age" is the theme for the week, Wertzberger said.

A dinner is scheduled for tonight at 7 at the Ramada Inn in honor of secretaries. Lynn Hickey, women's head basketball coach, will speak to the group on motivation.

Employers will also be invited, she said.

they were both right. We had to have both the severance tax and the gas tax."

THE TAX PACKAGE, while painful for legislators to vote for, puts Kansas government on solid financial footing for several years, Hayden believes.

"We've got the gas tax indexed (so it will increase as the price rises) and we've got the income tax sunsetted if we don't need it," the speaker said.

"It's been 18 years since we had a major tax package and we knew it might be a while before we'd get another one, so we designed it in a way that it will serve the state in the foreseeable future."

Besides, Hayden added, most indicators point to a continued improvement in the economy, which should mean revenues on all taxes will more nearly match projections from now on.

"A year ago, we were sitting on quicksand," Hayden said. "It looks now like we've hit bottom and started to come back. And we've done a lot of things to deal with the crisis.

"We know we're probably going to be in an era of lower balances for a few years. We know it's a different ball game now."

"When you finally reach the goal, you're so exhausted and the path was so difficult that you don't fully appreciate what's been done," he said. "That will take some reflection. But the synopsis is it certainly was the most productive session of any I've participated in, and it certainly was the most difficult because of the decisions that had to be made."

Hayden can't disguise his pride over what was accomplished — putting the state back on firm financial footing and enacting a major new highway funding program.

"The Kansas Legislature-1983 did not flinch," he said. "It took a lot of abuse, a lot of political pressure but in the end it didn't bow to it. It didn't fail. It came through with the tough decisions to run the state and fix the highways."

The speaker said he knew it would be the toughest struggle of his 11 sessions in the Legislature — his first as speaker.

"It was about what I expected," he said. "I said from Day One we'd pass the biggest budget cuts in history and the biggest tax increase, and those are never easy votes. I never promised them a rose garden from the start."

What about the future for Mike Hayden?

"I love the Legislature and I have tremendous respect for the process," he said. "I'll be ready to return in January, if a truck doesn't hit me.

"When you get it in your blood, you look forward to every day of it — and I do.

"But I haven't thought about a second term as speaker. I just take them one year at a time."

Senate

chamber membership is important because it shows the student interest in the activities of the city and it encourages the chamber of commerce to consider the University's stance in the community.

Senate voted Thursday to allocate $539 to MEChA, as opposed to the requested $1,011.90. Rodriguez said MEChA is a "model for other universities and is thought well of in Washington (D.C.)" and he hopes senate will reconsider its action in Thursday's meeting.

Lori Leu, senate chairwoman, announced that Thursday will be senate's final meeting of the semester.

Review

tain lowers, he leads the audience in a standing ovation, but then writes a scathing review. He believes the play has the strong Jewish style of Steiner, far too much to be coincidental.

Within this character is another of the film's flaws. Daxiat is not just a bad guy because of his anti-Semitism, but because he gives bad reviews. It's as if Truffaut is himself attacking critics, which isn't surprising considering his last few films all flopped.

MOST IMPORTANT, though, in no real way does Truffaut deliver any information expanding our understanding of the Occupation. Instead, he makes anti-Semitism the only Nazi offense.

Although there are few risks taken and a great number of major flaws, "The Last Metro" is one of Truffaut's most enjoyable films to date. A rich '40s aura is created through the careful camera placements of Nestor Almendros. A great sense of suspense is created by keeping the camera at street level, never allowing the sky to creep into view, always framing upon storefronts and interiors.

"The Last Metro" is a romantic, soft-focus journey into yesteryear that, with great simplicity (maybe too much), delineates emotions of the people who continued the show business tradition.

'Mediocre' teaching concerns national educators

From staff and wire reports

A "rising tide of mediocrity" is spreading havoc on U.S. schools, according to a recent report by the National Commission on Excellence in Education.

The commission said America has squandered a post-Sputnik surge in the race for knowledge and committed "an act of unthinking, unilateral education disarmament" that threatens its very furture.

The scathing report card on U.S. schools, from first grade through college, called for tougher standards, longer school days and higher pay for teachers.

"Educators at the college level have known about these deficiencies for a long time," Rick Summerhill, head of the Department of Mathematics, said.

High schools are now being asked to emphasize the basics — four years of English, three years each of math, science and social studies, a half-year of computer science and two years of foreign language — for those going on to college.

The National Commission, consisting of college presidents, high school principals, scholars and others, stated, "If an unfriendly foreign power had attempted to impose on America the mediocre educational performance that exists today, we might well have viewed it as an act of war."

DEFICIENT SALARIES paid to teachers is the major reason education is experiencing a downward spiral, Kenneth Klabunde, head of the Department of Chemistry, said.

"Science teachers can obtain much higher salaries working in industry. They (science teachers) are being attracted to do these things just to get more money. One family can't even survive on the money made by a teacher."

Klabunde said another problem within the schools is the respect of the teaching profession has gone down.

"To be a teacher in high school used to be a respected profession, but now there is less esteem in being a teacher. Schools are not attracting the most qualified teachers now. This has caused a snowball effect. If faculty is not qualified, students lose out.

"THIS TENDS to put people who aren't trained into teaching, and because of this, the area of science itself loses. We must realize that teaching is a very admirable profession and the general public doesn't give it the respect it deserves," Klabunde said.

Stepped-up requirements in the basics during high school are generally seen as a positive step forward by college instructors. Stricter requirements for math and science are being implemented in high schools across the country.

"We have found in students at the freshman level that there is a big deficiency in formal or abstract thinking," Virgil Wallentine, head of the Department of Computer Science, said.

"We tell those in high school to take every math course they can, including algebra, trigonometry and calculus. If computers are available, the important thing to learn is problem solving and using a structured programming system like Pascal," he said.

BUT AGAIN, there is a problem with incompetent teachers.

"High schools are going out and buying computers and teachers aren't trained in problem solving. Those students spend half a year playing and think they know how to program the computer. Some with the most experience have the hardest time," Wallentine said.

Studies such as the one by the National Commission are not new, David J. Cox, head of the Department of Biochemistry, said.

"There have been quite a number of statements from a variety of studies — the information is not new," Cox said. "What is new is the prestige of this committee making specific recommendations for solving the problems we currently have within the high schools."

President Reagan summoned education and civic leaders to the White House Tuesday for a briefing on the report.

"OUR NATION is at risk," the diverse

Reagan cites nation's 'duty' to protect Central America

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan urged the nation and a skeptical Congress on Wednesday night to embrace his Central America program on grounds that the United States has "a vital interest, a moral duty and a solemn responsibility" to protect the region from leftist revolution.

In a rare address to a joint session of Congress, Reagan said, "I say to you that tonight there can be no question: the national security of all the Americas is at stake in Central America.

"If we cannot defend ourselves there," said Reagan, "we cannot expect to prevail elsewhere. Our credibility would collapse, our alliances would crumble, and the safety of our homeland would be put at jeopardy."

Reagan's nationally broadcast address was primarily an attempt to salvage a proposed $110 million in U.S. aid for the besieged regime in El Salvador. Congress so far has balked over all but $30 million of that.

But Reagan pressed Congress to approve his full request for aid for all of Central America, totaling about $600 million for 1984. "That is less than one-tenth of what Americans will spend this year on coin-operated video games," the president said.

"What the administration is asking for on behalf of freedom in Central America is so small, so minimal — considering what is at stake," he added.

Reagan said the Caribbean Basin region is "a magnet for adventurism" primarily sponsored by the Soviet Union and Cuba. "If the Nazis during World War II and the Soviets today could recognize the Caribbean and Central America as vital to our interests, should not we also?" he asked.

Reagan noted the seizure in Brazil of four Libyan cargo planes loaded with arms enroute to Nicaragua, and said "violence has been Nicaragua's most important export to the world.

Carlin signs severance bill; cites victory for state, self

TOPEKA (AP) — Gov. John Carlin on Wednesday ended a nearly 30-year battle to enact a mineral severance tax in Kansas as he signed into law a $104 million tax on oil, natural gas, coal and salt.

Heralded by Carlin as a "victory for thousands of working men and women in Kansas," the tax signing put to rest a personal three-year crusade by the Democratic governor."

"Today is, and should be, a day of pride for thousands of citizens whose advocacy for a severance tax in the halls of the Legislature and in the coffee shops of Kansas ultimately determined our success," Carlin said at the signing. "The quest for a severance tax was not without difficulty, not without strife and not without sacrifice.

"It is a very special moment in my life. And now with great pride, I sign into law Senate bill 452, the severance tax."

Carlin's fight for the severance tax, first proposed in 1981, included stormy battles with oil and gas industry lobbyists and severance tax opponents in the Kansas Legislature and a heated election campaign last fall.

The tax significantly expands Kansas' tax base and takes its place with sales, corporate and individual income taxes as one of the "big four" revenue-producing tax catagories.

"The importance of the severance tax is in its fairness and in its role for the future of our state," Carlin said. "After today, what will remain permanently established as truth is that every dollar generated by the oil and gas industry paying its fair share for schools, highways and other vital programs and services of state government is one dollar less that must be paid by general Kansas taxpayers."

THE SEVERANCE TAX will take effect immediately upon publication Thursday in the Kansas Register to allow the state to begin collecting revenues May 1.

The bill is projected to raise $104 million in new revenue, of which $97 million will go into the state general fund.

The measure contains a 7 percent rebate provision for counties and school districts to compensate them for lost property tax revenues. Also, there are exemptions on stripper wells and those using a

Acker discusses renovation of Nichols, fall enrollment

Now that the University received $1.5 million from the Kansas Legislature for the reconstruction of Nichols Gymnasium, bids will go out for the project July 1, and Nichols should be completely renovated by the fall semester 1985, Vince Cool, associate director of planning, said at President Duane Acker's final press conference of the semester Wednesday.

Cool also showed slides of the projected reconstructed building.

"I'll have to cease calling it Nichols Gymnasium and just call it Nichols," Acker said, "until we find something better to call it."

In other matters, Acker said the U.S. House of Representatives is considering a bill that would allocate $1 billion to improve science and math education. Of this money, $250 million would be allocated to upgrade teaching of these areas.

Acker also stressed that pre-enrollment should be completed now and that returning juniors and seniors should not wait until next fall to enroll.

"We can't afford a large number of drop-adds," he said, adding that new students, freshmen and sophomores will receive enrollment priority.

Returning upperclassmen who haven't pre-enrolled will enroll after the freshmen and sophomores and have to risk not getting into their desired classes.

Next fall, the same number of students should be back to classes, Acker said, with 6,279 freshmen being accepted. Pre-enrollment for freshmen is up 201 students, but down 181 for transfer students.

Acker added that the University is drawing a high proportion of applications from Kansas residents and a low proportion from out of state.

Six students apply for seven seats in Off-Campus Student Association

As of 3:30 p.m. Wednesday, six students had applied to be 1983-84 officers in the Off-Campus Student Association, Charlie Knight, president of OCSA and senior in industrial engineering, said. Applications were due in the Student Governing Association's office at 5 p.m.

Currently, the organization has a governing council of seven which includes a president, vice president, secretary, treasurer and three voting members-at-large. Officers and appointed committee members plan meetings and social events for off-campus students.

Approximately 10,000 students live off-campus, Knight said.

Knight said the group considered conducting the elections next fall but decided officers could make some plans during the summer if they chose to do so. He said he didn't think the deadlines for officers' applications would be extended.

Another member-at-large would probably be appointed to the council if only six applications were received, he said.

Voting for the candidates will be from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. May 3 and 4 in the Union Concourse.

Education department no longer enforcing draft-financial aid rule

Recent confusion among financial aid administrators over whether a student seeking student aid should be required to fill out a Selective Service compliance form has been cleared, Robert Evans, director of student financial assistance, said.

A letter from the U.S. Department of Education said no student applying for financial aid will be required to complete the compliance form which inquires about the Selective Service status of the student.

"All federal financial aid application forms should be accepted regardless of whether information as to a student's Selective Service registration status is provided. However, as stated previously, a student may be encouraged to supply voluntarily the statement of registration compliance," the letter stated.

This change in the policy is due to the preliminary injunction issued by the U.S. District Court of Minnesota prohibiting the Department of Education and the Selective Service System from enforcing the law requiring male applicants to prove they are registered for the draft.

"The court injunction pretty much stalmated the issue. They told us to 'stop doing what you're doing.' It doesn't matter whether the compliance form is signed or not until the injunction is lifted," Evans said.

If the judge does decide the law should be put into effect, every male applicant will have to come back to sign the compliance form.

"That seems highly unlikely. A federal judge is not going to issue an injunction unless he thinks serious harm or damage will result if the law is implemented or the judge feels there are strong reasons to believe the law is unconstitutional," Evans said.

Student senate to hold final spring meeting

In its final full meeting of the semester tonight, Student Senate is scheduled to approve the entire tentative allocations budget after reconsideration of the funding for MEChA, Student Governing Association and the Union.

According to student body president Jerry Katlin, some senators have requested the opportunity to re-evaluate the budgets of these three groups.

Senate will also consider allocations for two standing accounts, Long Range Reserves for Capital Outlays and Reserves for Contingencies.

"These approved budgets are only tentative. Budgets can be changed in the fall when final allocations are heard," Katlin said. "Groups allocated money can spend 25 percent of their budget between now and final allocations in the fall."

Senate will hold a special meeting Tuesday in order to approve the new student attorney and the new Associated Students of Kansas campus director, Katlin said.

Soviet's tab 'snooping' charges propaganda

MOSCOW — The official Tass news agency said Wednesday that a Swedish government charge that Soviet submarines snooped off Stockholm last fall is groundless propaganda put out by militarists and anti-Soviets.

The Soviet ambassador to Sweden, responding to the Swedish Parliament report released Tuesday, denied Soviet vessels had intruded in Sweden's territorial waters.

Tass said that "despite acknowledging the absence of any direct proof" of whose submarines were in the area, the report "too quickly states the submarines were Soviet ones."

"Although the commission, by its own admission, could not give proof to the fact that these submarines mentioned are Soviet ones, the mass media of Sweden did not count it as necessary" to question the conclusions, Tass said.

Menninger: aggresssion, self-destruction related

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Self-destruction may be the result of the aggressive nature of Americans and their unwillingness to pursue peace, says a nationally known psychiatrist.

"We are a violent, belligerent, aggressive people. The inevitable result of aggression is suicide," Dr. Karl Menninger, the 89-year-old co-founder of the Menninger Foundation in Topeka, told a conference on family violence.

Menninger said too many Americans are so confused and preoccupied with dominating others or the fear of being dominated that they do not know how to deal with problems civilly.

Menninger singled out pro-handgun groups and the military when he was asked at the University of Missouri-Kansas City conference about who promotes violence.

Those who fight anti-handgun legislation are driven by a "perverse spirit," he said. "You ought to abandon handguns in this town tomorrow. They protect no one."

Beach Boys considering Kansas tour stop

WASHINGTON — The Beach Boys are arranging a four-city "Spirit of America" tour for the weekend of July 4, singer Mike Love of the group said Wednesday.

But Love said in an appearance on the Senate steps that the group was considering an appearance in Kansas.

"My mother was born in Hutchinson, Kan.," Love said. "We've got to do something nice for our mothers."

Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., who earlier had invited the group to do a benefit concert in the state, repeated the invitation in person.

"You took the initiative to invite us there, so we're almost obligated," Love told Dole.

Asked whether he likes the Beach Boys' surfing sound, Dole quipped to Love, "I'm becoming a Beach Boys fan. I didn't know how good you were until I heard Jim Watt."

For sale: $10 million windmill, real cheap

BOONE, N.C. — A $10 million windmill, once the world's biggest, costliest and most modern, could sell next month for as little as $5 plus expenses — lots of expenses.

No minimum price has been set for the May 5 bidding, but the buyer will have to pay for disassembling and moving the windmill within 45 days of purchase. It weighs 600,000 pounds.

In addition, one of the blades will have to be put back on because in late 1981 a couple of bolts holding it to the driveshaft broke. That won't be cheap, either, because the blade is 97½ feet long and the bolts cost about $500,000 — so expensive that the National Aeronautics and Space Administration decided to sell the windmill rather than fix it.

While the windmill itself cost about $10 million, design, development and incidentals cost another $20 million, officials said. The windmill has seldom worked since its completion in 1979.

Texas university officals deny barring Nelson

AUSTIN — University of Texas officials Wednesday denied they barred singer Willie Nelson from a benefit for the mentally retarded because they feared he would attract a crowd of "undesirables."

Denis Poulos, executive director of the Texas Special Olympics for retarded athletes, said Nelson had agreed to perform free on May 25 for 15 to 20 minutes to kick off the three-day event.

But Poulos said the idea was squelched when he met with university officials Friday to discuss arrangements for the games in the university's Memorial Stadium.

"There was also discussion about the type of people who would come out to a Willie Nelson concert," Poulos said. "They said they might anticipate some undesirables."

But a university official issued a statement Wednesday denying Nelson was "barred" from the campus. He said the sponsors decided to cancel the idea when they learned that security for such an appearance would cost $10,000.

Weather

After yesterday's forecast, we've decided to go by the cricks in our backs to make today's prediction — mostly cloudy with a 40 percent chance of thunderstorms with highs in the 60s.

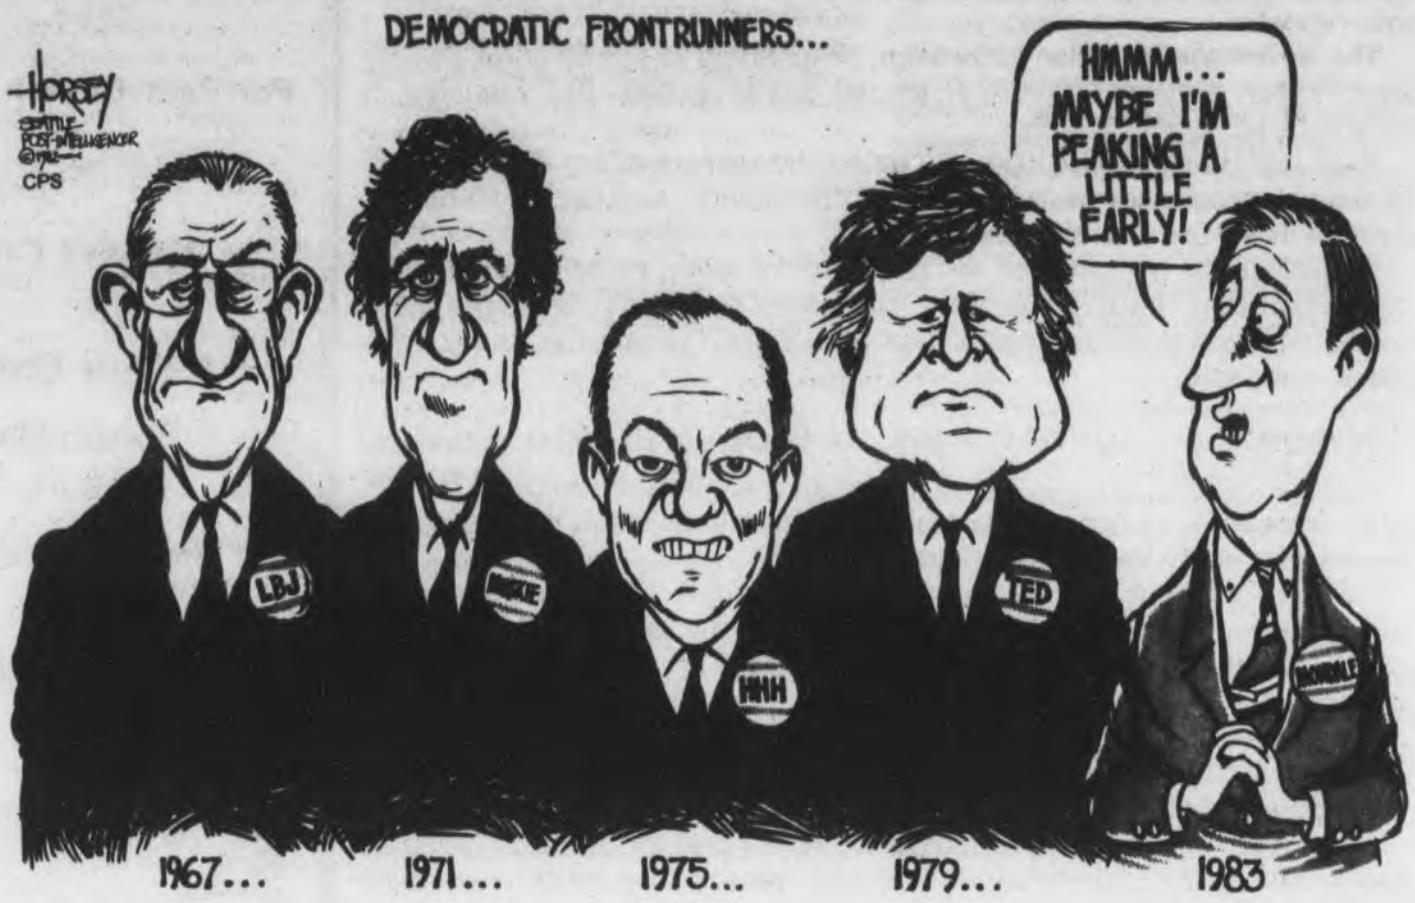
Severance tax law adds new revenue

"And now with great pride, I sign into law Senate Bill 452, the severance tax."

These were the words of Gov. John Carlin Wednesday as he signed the controversial tax into law. It couldn't have come at a better time for Kansas.

The struggle for the tax has placed oil companies against education backers, city legislators against their rural counterparts, eastern Kansans against western Kansans. It has taken 30 years for the tax to become a reality — one which should help relieve the financial crisis the state now faces.



The tax, which is expected to generate $104 million in new revenue, will become effective immediately after publication in the Kansas Register Thursday, which will allow the state to begin collecting its revenue May 1.

Of the $104 million, $97 million will go into the state's general fund. The rest will be rebated to counties and school districts as compensation for lost property tax revenue.

"The importance of the severance tax is in its fairness and in its role for the future of our state," Carlin said. "After today, what will remain permanently established as truth is that every dollar generated by the oil and gas industry paying its fair share for schools, highways and other vital programs and services of state government is one dollar less that must be paid by general Kansas taxpayers."

The severance tax is not a panacea. It will not cure mismanagement of funds, nor will it cause property taxes to plummet. It will, however, add another source of revenue — untapped revenue — to a state hungry for funding for programs which have suffered far too long.

Alcoholism 'incurable'

Editor,

Re: Tracy Allen's column on alcoholism ("Alcoholism: the curable disease") in Wednesday's Collegian.

Allen's column was, in general, a good report on America's alcoholic consumption and image of drinking. But, she made one mistake in talking about alcoholism — a common and dangerous mistake. Alcoholism is not curable.

The first step in treating this disease is admitting there is a problem. The second step is to admit there will always be a problem. This is the first rule of Alcoholics Anonymous. Through the help of medical treatment and groups such as AA, some alcoholics quit drinking. Most don't. And those who stop can never start again.

One man in Wichita, a friend of my father's, had been "dry" for 11 years of AA meetings, after being hospitalized and treated. Deciding he was cured, he took one drink. He passed out drunk in bed later that night, and burned to death.

My father is an alcoholic, and though he hasn't drank in five years, we face the fact he will always be an alcoholic. Don't tell me about "curable" diseases. I know better.

Book censorship: making a comeback

Everything, I've always been told, depends on perspective. Nowhere is this more apparent, or frightening, than through the self-appointed censors on a crusade to ban books from classrooms.

In the last few years, book censorship has grown explosively. According to a report by the American Library Association's Office for Intellectual Freedom, incidents of school censorship have tripled from 1980 to 1982 and currently average about 3,000 attempts per year.

In another survey by the Association of American Publishers, 19 percent of the school administrators and 30 percent of the librarians reported censorship challenges within the past year.

In one-third of the cases, the challengers succeeded in getting the books restricted, removed or destroyed.

The rapid growth of book banners in this country raises troubling questions about both academic and basic freedoms.

The optimum situation is to provide standards pleasing to all of the people affected. However, trying to define acceptable moral guidelines is where the heart of the controversy lies.

Instead, what too often occurs is the personal standard of one individual is adopted as community standard — the minority ends up dictating the majority.

SEVERAL INCIDENTS point to this new self-righteousness which threatens our nation.

In Montello, Wis., nine parents stroll into two public school libraries and check out 33 books that they believe to be profane, obscene or politically dangerous.

Among the titles: "The Diary of Anne Frank" and Joseph Heller's anti-war satire, "Catch-22." The parents take the books home and return them only upon official request.

On a raw December day, a handful of elderly men and women warm themselves around a bonfire in a Warsaw, Ind., parking lot. They are burning 40 copies of "Values Clarification," a state-approved high school text which encourages teen-agers to think for themselves about such controversial subjects as premarital sex, divorce and alcohol.

Other books which have been placed on the list are "Huckleberry Finn," "Mary Poppins," "Catcher in the Rye," and five leading dictionaries including the American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language and Webster's Seventh New Collegiate Dictionary.

WHAT IS REALLY at stake, then, is the right to read and be exposed to controversial thoughts and language.

But, how do you define "controversial?" Is it something that may possibly tarnish the too pure, too protected perspective some parents present to their children, while only exposing them to minute doses of "bad" information as they see fit?

Or is it a sincere battle by parents and citizens concerned about the reading habits of today's children, fearful of rotting the educational core with too many impure social influences?

Either way, it depends on an individual's perspective.

Dozens of national advocacy groups have been created within the last few years. One of the most visual of these book censor advocates is the Rev. Jerry Falwell of the Moral Majority.

"We should be angry with our textbooks for deceiving our young people," he says. "And mad that it is our tax money underwriting the destruction of the morals of our nation, our church and the world in which our children will live."

But how do you explain the decreasing age which children are initially exposed to "indecencies" and the increasing number of pre-teen pregnancies, abortions and drug addictions? Could these trends be resulting because the books have "suddenly" become a provoker of lust, passion and other "unspeakables?" Or should other factors be taken into consideration?

INCIDENTS OF SELF-APPOINTED censors who will go to such lengths as to burn books in public bonfires in retaliation reminds me of a book of my high school years.

"Fahrenheit 451," a anti-utopian novel by Ray Bradbury, centers around Guy Montag, a fireman who has the job to burn instead of preserve books, therefore, discouraging the citizenry from thinking about anything except four-wall television.

"It was a pleasure to burn," begins Bradbury. "It was a special pleasure to see things eaten, to see things blackened and changed."

Burn books? An ironic twist from the present — or is it?

In my mind, I would like to be able to categorize book-banners into a science fiction mold — a creature with evil, glinting eyes slobbering over the next literary victim destined to fall prey to his sadistic destruction.

However, the individuals who organize this "hit list" of books are as varied as their approaches. The strongest leaders, mostly parents and other community residents of all backgrounds and political and religious persuasions, have one thing in common — they speak for themselves.

And the instances where book-banning campaigns fail in the courts often lead to more subtle cases of censorship, often more deadly and numerous in occurrence.

Fearing trouble, many teachers and librarians practice unreported self-censorship by simply not ordering or using books which involve 'risk.'

Who can guess what literary work will become the next victim of the censor's prey? This "domino effect" has chilling premonitions.

Book censorship — the trend is scary.

Unity needed by minority groups in order to receive student funds

Editor,

For the past 2½ years, I've seen our "representative" student government demonstrate reluctant behavior, particularly toward the funding of minority organizations at K-State. It is a shame to see educated people act as if minorities and their organizations are a bad influence.

One has to realize any minority (especially a Hispanic or Black) is unlikely to get elected to Student Senate. Thus, one of the major benefits these minority organizations provide is the framework for organizational and political sophistication necessary to provide different perspectives on complex issues. Because of such malicious and ill-founded rumors, these organizations are being drastically cut in their fundings.

It disturbs me such misinformed and narrow-minded people don't have sense enough to appreciate different cultural backgrounds. That is why I speak today to alert my fellow friends — speak up and fight for what is rightfully ours! Make use of our basic fundamental rights and don't let these people take them away. We contribute to this university as much as any other student organization, so why can't we benefit from it as well?

The minority organizations (e.g. MEChA, PRSO, BSU, etc.) at K-State have been providing such a rich diversity of cultural and educational programs and activities it bewilders me senate is unaware of these active groups' past accomplishments. Especially when less than a week ago we had our 3rd Annual Hispanic-American Festival; and before that, Black Awareness Month.

The weapon which we best can use for our defense is unity. The more of us who unite, the stronger we'll become, and the easier it wll be to educate and inform this predominantly white institution. I shall conclude by saying if any readers feel offended by my comments, there is a Spanish saying which goes: "Si asi te pica, es porque aji comes"; in other words, "If the shoe fits, wear it."

Attitude at Lafene 'very caring'

Editor,

Re: John Holiday's letter to the editor in Tuesday's Collegian, "Nurses 'rude.'"

I think it was unfortunate Holiday had a bad experience with Lafene Student Health Center. After spending 11 days there with an eye injury (due to racquetball), I feel I can comment on the health care provided at Lafene.

First, I don't believe the nurses are employees of the students. They are state employees who provide a good service to the students.

Second, these people are professionals who could be working at private hospitals which are probably better equipped, have nicer facilities and serve more appreciative patients. Instead, they chose to work at a university facility which helps students.

Third, Holiday complained about the service at Lafene. How much would the "in-depth physical" have cost you at a physician's office in a private hospital? I feel the doctors and nurses provide a very competent health care service for an unbeatable price to a very large number of students.

I found the attitude very caring, they were competent and showed great concern to my well-being.

I would like to thank the staff at Lafene for being there when I needed them and the care they showed.

If I would change anything at Lafene it would be to allow more than two visitors at a time.

Bookstore needs drafting supplies

Editor,

Though I know this letter will probably not change anything, I'm going to write it anyway. It concerns the incompetency of the Union Bookstore employees who seem to find it impossible to stock supplies essential to architecture and engineering students. (i.e. drawing lead, erasers, engineering paper.)

Perhaps the reason for their complacency lies in the fact they enjoy a virtual monopoly of the students' business owing to the Union Bookstore's proximity, and as a result just don't care to strive for customer satisfaction.

Maybe those in charge feel drafting supplies are secondary in importance to baby underwear with a purple wildcat stamped on the bottom. I don't know the answer, I only know that a problem does indeed exist. Furthermore, I think I speak for most, if not all, of the architecture students; evidence exists by the fervent agreement with my point of view expressed by everyone I talked to before writing this letter.

Reagan's claim of improvements in El Salvador disputed by group

WASHINGTON (AP) — Calling El Salvador "a disaster area," a private U.S. human rights group disputed on Wednesday the Reagan administration's claim that political repression has steadily declined in that country.

Americas Watch, a New York-based group, also reported serious abuses of Indian populations by the governments of Guatemala and Nicaragua, and widespread police brutality in Honduras.

The findings were contained in a 27-page report that Americas Watch Vice Chairman Aryeh Neier said was designed to provide background information with which to evaluate President Reagan's address to Congress Wednesday night on Central America. The report was based on first-hand accounts from the region and other sources.

At a news conference, Neier was asked about the State Department's finding that the monthly rate of politically motivated killings in El Salvador has declined from a high of 800 three years ago to 200 last year.

"It's simply nonsense to talk about improvement," he said. "It's approximately like saying that if a mass murderer killed 30 people last year and 20 people this year, he's improved. Nobody would take that seriously."

He also suggested that the State Department tabulation was faulty because of what he described as excessive reliance on Salvadoran newspaper accounts, which he said were incomplete.

The report called El Salvador "a human rights disaster area. There is no prospect of significant improvement. The Salvadoran security forces are confident that U.S. support will continue. Accordingly, they are not moved by U.S. strictures about human rights abuses."

The report said the most serious abuses by Nicaragua's leftist government have been directed against the Miskito Indian population, which resides in the Atlantic Coast area.

It said that up to 50 Miskitos allegedly were murdered in December 1981 and many others have been detained without charges or have lost their villages and their homes.

On Honduras, where a democratically elected government has been in office since early 1982, the study said police brutality appears to be common and that there have been a number of instances of arbitrary arrests and detention.

The report said Americas Watch takes no position on the geopolitical issues that Reagan was to address in his speech. It said the report was prompted by the group's view that "timely, accurate and politically unbiased reporting on human rights is essential."

Reagan

"It is the ultimate in hypocrisy for the unelected Nicaraguan government to charge that we seek their overthrow when they are doing everything the can to bring down the elected government of El Salvador,' said Reagan.

Disputing charges leveled in Congress and elsewhere, Reagan said the United States was not seeking the overthrow of the leftist government of Nicaragua. "Our only interest is to insure that it does not infect its neighbors through the export of subversion and violence," the president said.

In a warmup for the primetime speech, Reagan told a newspaper publishers' meeting in New York that Americans are not accustomed "to worrying about possibly a military threat in our own hemisphere. We've almost taken for granted the friendly, independent neighbors that we have."

But "We can no longer ignore that there's a fire started and burning in our front yard," he told the newspaper executives.

His speech in the House chamber marked the first time Reagan addressed lawmakers on a foreign policy issue. Usually presidents address Congress only to deliver the annual State of the Union report.

The speech came one day after the House Appropriations subcommittee chopped in half his request to shift military aid worth $60 million to El Salvador from amounts allocated for other countries. At that, the panel approved the lesser amount by just a one-vote margin.

Astronauts 'grow' in zero gravity, doctor says

By MICHELE SAUER
Collegian Reporter

The four astronauts who occupied the space shuttle Challenger each grew as much as 1¾ inches while in space, Dr. Waldo E. Shellinger, Manhattan chiropractor, said.

"While the astronauts were in space, the decrease in gravitational pull of earth resulted in an expansion of the spaces between the vertebrae," Shellinger said. This extra little space between each vertebrae adds up to make an almost 2-inch difference in the astronauts' heights.

"With the decrease in the downward pressure on the skeletal system of the astronauts, they simply loosened up as the distance between each vertebrae of the spinal column expanded slightly," Shellinger said. "You might say the astronauts were 'hanging loose' in space."

Once the space shuttle re-entered the gravitational pull of the earth, the astronauts would again experience the pressure and return to their normal preliftoff height, he said.

If a person hangs upside down, his spinal column loosens up, Shellinger said. The younger a person is, the looser his vertebrae are. Once someone is past 40, there is some arthritis and the spinal column is not as flexible.

SPECULATING the experience would be exhilarating and not painful, Shellinger said he wouldn't mind going to the moon and he also found the prospect of weightlessness exciting.

Shellinger's first encounter with the space shuttle occurred in 1978, when he prepared a television documentary promoting tourism in Alabama and included the Alabama Space and Rocket Center.

Shellinger became more interested in the program while living next door, in Huntsville, Ala., where the space center is located, to an engineer who was working on the space shuttle.

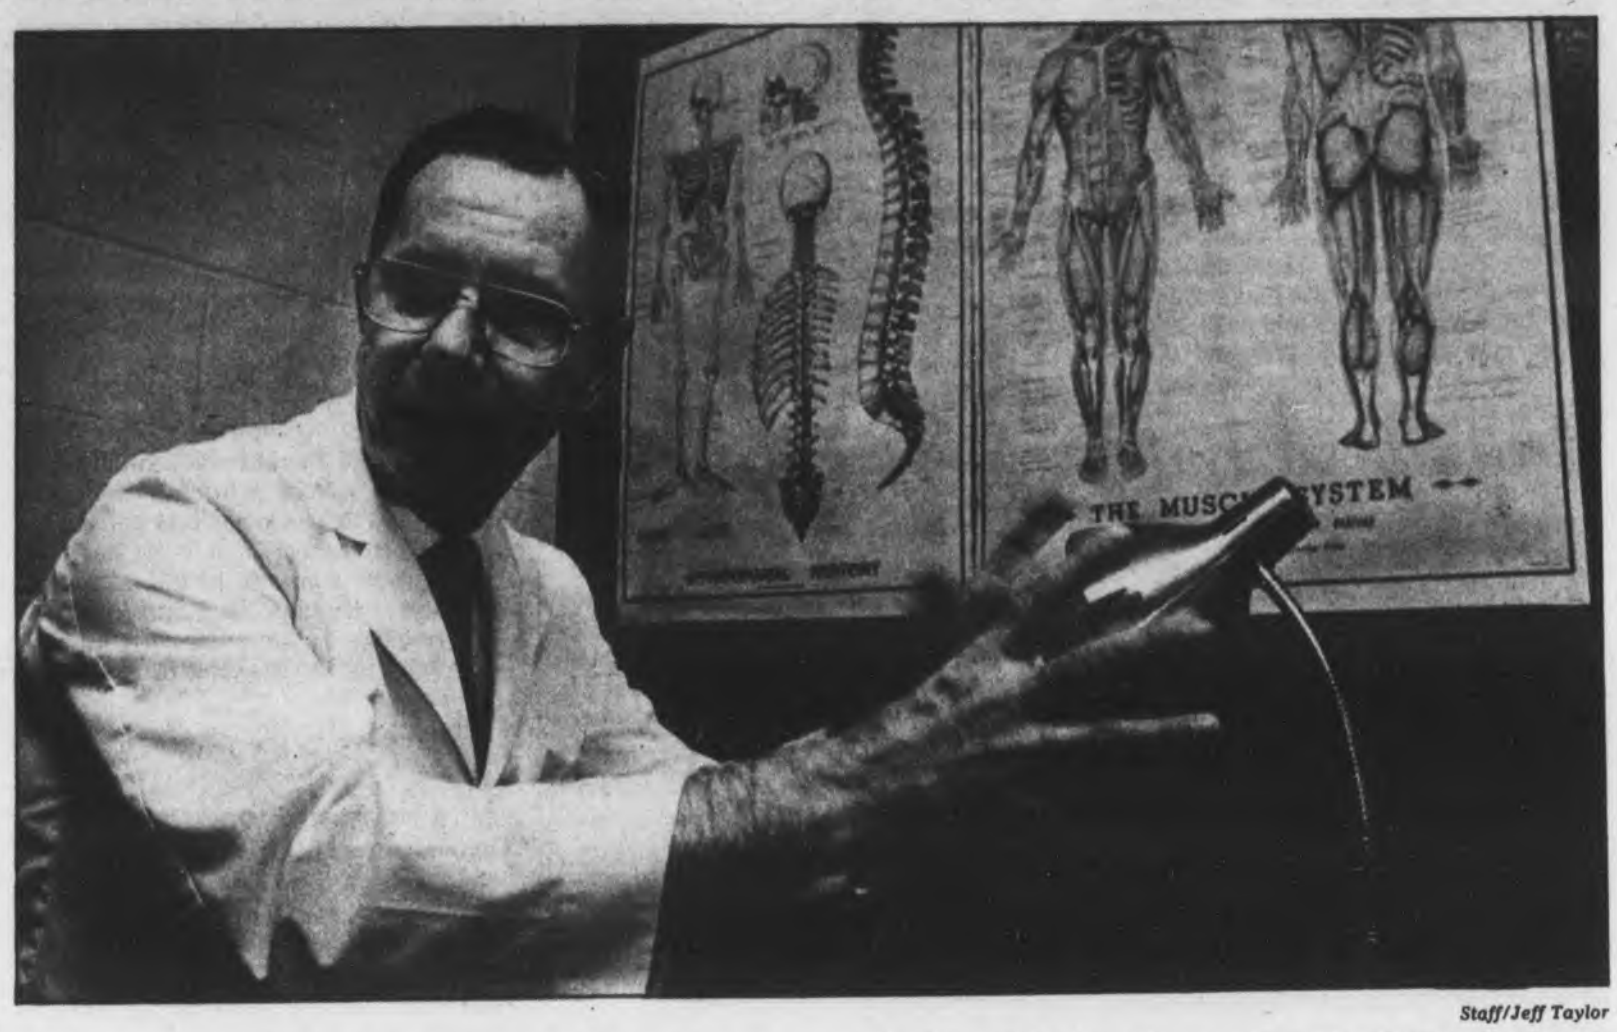
"The space center is something everyone should see," Shellinger said. "There is a space vehicle which was used on the moon, a simulated space shuttle trip and a weightlessness machine in which a person can experience zero gravity."

Shellinger's interest in the space program developed as a sideline.

"ALTHOUGH I HAVE talked with several engineers who have worked in rocketry and on the space shuttle itself, I have not talked with the astronauts," he said.

"Doctors of chiropractory as well as astronauts are concerned with the advantages and disadvantages of gravity."

Shellinger said the astronauts and those who build the spacecrafts are concerned with providing sufficient thrust to make launchings successful, but the thrust may be harmful to the spine.



"I am concerned with the force of gravity on malaligned spines. Actually, almost everyone has a malaligned spine. Less than 10 percent of all people have straight backs," Shellinger said.

People who are adversely affected by gravity are those with scoliosis (curvature of the spine), premature arthritis or a leg deficiency, he said, and would probably have an easier life in a zero gravity condition.

PREMATURE ARTHRITIS occurs when there is stress on the articular facets of the spinal column and the space between the vertebrae begins to solidify. Almost everyone has leg deficiency — when one leg is longer than the other.

"I'm not worried about a quarter of an inch, the body can compensate for that," he said. "When the deficiency is greater, it puts strain on the muscles on one side of the body and the spine moves to compensate for the deficiency."

Through deep heat, sound waves, calcium, muscle stimulation and exercise these problems can be helped.

Staff/Jeff Taylor

Medical explanation... Astronauts, such as those in the Space Shuttle Challenger, may grow as much as 1¾ inches while in outer space, according to Waldo E. Shellinger, Manhattan chiropractor.

Washington faces challenges as Chicago mayor

CHICAGO (AP) — After winning what he called Chicago's "most trying election," Harold Washington claims City Hall on Friday as the city's first black mayor. But for Washington, the trying times may just be starting.

Like most big-city mayors, Washington will grapple with powerful municipal unions demanding more pay, school bills piling up at an alarming rate and buses and trains that don't get enough from tokens to pay their way.

LIKE THE FIRST BLACK mayors of New Orleans, Detroit or Atlanta, Washington also will confront racial fears — aggravated by a bitter, dirty campaign and his own appeal to blacks that "It's our turn."

And, like the woman he succeeds, Jane M. Byrne, the two-term congressman who campaigned as an outsider will enter a sometimes hostile political environment. Unlike Mrs. Byrne, Washington has not embraced the Old Guard, saying instead that he will be a reformer.

"He does not have a rosy start," says Louis Masotti, an urban affairs professor at Northwestern University who headed Mrs. Byrne's transition team four years ago.

Washington, 61, won with the near-unanimous support of blacks — who make up 40 percent of the population. They will expect a greater voice in City Hall and more attention for their neighborhoods, parks and schools.

At the same time, whites will want reassurance. Less than one in five voted for Washington. Some fear he'll take their patronage jobs, others fear he'll put low-income housing in their neighborhoods.

"What you're going to see for the immediate future is some delicate tightrope walking as a black mayor tries to convince his constituents he's got to be realistic and convince whites he's not going to destroy their services," said Masotti. "He's got a tough job."

THE JOB IS TOUGH ENOUGH. Since 1970, Chicago has lost an average of 14,000 jobs, 200 factories and 500 shops each year. Employment fell by 20,000 during the first two years of the Byrne administration. Unemployment stood at 12.4 percent in Chicago in February; black unemployment has been estimated at 25 percent.

Mrs. Byrne says she is leaving the city in good shape. Bond rating agents, who determine the credit of cities and corporations, rate economically diversified Chicago favorably but not at the top.

AMONG IMMEDIATE CONCERNS are the city's perennial financial crises — an ailing public school system with a projected $202 million deficit and a regional transit agency with a potential deficit of more than $100 million.

Neither is in the city's $2 billion budget, but both have long been considered the mayor's domain.

Washington's advisers claim expenditures will exceed revenues by $120 million in the budget year ending Dec. 31. In addition, the federal government is demanding the city return $28 million in community development funds it says were misused by Mrs. Byrne to meet school deficits and finance temporary part-time jobs during her re-election campaign.

During the campaign, Washington did not propose any costly new programs — nor did he talk about the possibility of cutting budgets. Instead, he said the state should increase its aid to the city.

But last week, after visiting Springfield to urge a hike in the state income tax, he concluded that state finances are "much, much worse than I thought" and that little help could be expected there.

Gov. James R. Thompson has proposed a $1.9 billion increase, which would generate about $30 million for Chicago public schools and provide money to overcome the transit authority's deficit.

Washington also faces powerful city unions whose contracts expire soon, including public school teachers who supported his campaign. The teachers' contract, which expires late this summer, provided no pay raises this year.

The transit workers' contract also expires this year.

IN THIS CITY where the mayor is boss, Washington also has to guard against being run over by the City Council.

"His central political problem is organizing the City Council ... so it's not a runaway City Council," says Don Rose, a political strategist who ran Mrs. Byrne's 1979 campaign.

If Washington "wants to reform Chicago, his problems will be of a different order," Rose says. "He's immediately set out for himself a harder job."

Although nearly one-third of the 50 council members are newcomers, Washington will be greeted by veterans accustomed to the system of committeemen doling out patronage jobs.

WASHINGTON HAS VOWED to abolish patronage — the backbone of Chicago's powerful Democratic Party machine. He got a boost from a recent federal court order reinforcing a series of court decisions designed to prohibit political considerations in firing and hiring.

Despite his stern words, Washington has taken conciliatory steps, too. In recent weeks, he's met with aldermen at a get-acquainted breakfast and paid a condolence call to Alderman Roman Pucinski, whose wife died.

Pucinski was among the Democratic defectors supporting Republican Bernard Epton during the election. But after Washington's win, Pucinski said the new mayor may be Chicago's best ever.

Still, Rose says Washington will face a tougher test.

"Every black who assumes any power always has to perform at 150 percent rather than 100 percent," he says. "When you're dealing with collective prejudices ... your performance level is viewed much more stringently."

El Salvador aid request gets mixed reactions

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Nancy Kassebaum praised the tone of President Reagan's speech on El Salvador Wednesday night, saying it was less belligerent than past administration rhetoric.

But she said she still could not support the administration's request for an additional $60 million in military aid to the battle-torn Central American country because that would tilt the balance toward a military solution to its problems instead of a negotiated settlement.

Kassebaum is sponsoring an amendment with Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., that would trim the supplemental military aid to about $30 million. Dodd was chosen to present the Democratic response after Reagan's speech to a joint session of Congress.

"I don't think anyone would argue with the president in his call for democratiic, free nations in Central America," Kassebaum, a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said in an interview after the speech.

"And I agree that we need to provide aid. It's just trying to find the balance" that will keep military activities from becoming the focus of efforts there, she said.

Sen. Bob Dole said he would back the president's full aid request. "There's a lot at stake," he said, adding that Reagan has "more information than I have" on the issue.

"If we can't protect those who want freedom in our own hemisphere, three or four hours away by air, then how can we protect Israel and the NATO countries?"

Rep. Larry Winn, a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, said he believed Reagan would get nearly all of the $600 million he is seeking in economic and military aid for Central America.

Rep. Dan Glickman said he felt "torn" on the issue — on the one hand afraid to further push left-leaning nations into the arms of the Soviets, but also afraid to completely pull out of the region.

"I think Reagan is worried that we're going to lose all of Central America. I am, too," Glickman said.

Shultz repeats call for pullout from Lebanon

JERUSALEM (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz embarked on his first attempt at shuttle diplomacy Wednesday and heard Israel's explanation of why it is not ready to withdraw all its troops from Lebanon.

Prime Minister Menachem Begin told him Israel's security interests must be protected in any agreement on the withdrawal of foreign troops from southern Lebanon, Begin's spokesman Uri Porat told reporters.

Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir told Shultz the Lebanese army can't do the job, Israel wants no foreign peacekeeping troops on its borders, and that it demands some Israeli troops remain in southern Lebanon on joint patrol with Lebanese soldiers, a senior Israeli official said.

The official said Shamir also discussed Israel's insistence on putting security in southern Lebanon in the hands of Maj. Saad Haddad, who quit the Lebanese army and commands a militia in southern Lebanon that was armed and trained by Israel.

The deadlock facing Shultz was underlined in Beirut, where the Lebanese Parliament after a two-day secret debate voted unanimous support of President Amin Gemayel's rejection of any form of Israeli military presence in southern Lebanon. It also endorsed his refusal to take Haddad back into the Lebanese army.

On his arrival from Cairo, Shultz made it clear that he expects Israel's leaders to agree to withdraw all their troops from Lebanon and drop their demand for a military presence there.

"Our immediate task is bringing peace to Lebanon, restoring Lebanese sovereignty, and withdrawing all foreign forces and ensuring peace and security" on the Israeli—Lebanese border, he said on arriving at Ben-Gurion International Airport.

"The key here is the withdrawal of all foreign forces," he said. "Any arrangement that falls short of that is not going to be the basis for a Syrian troop withdrawal."

He conceded that "a number of difficult issues remain" but said, "so much has already been accomplished in this negotiation that none of us can allow it to fail."

Wood art featured in Union

Retired professor displays carvings

Since the age of six, John Stockard, retired professor in extension radio and television, has been interested in wood carving. Some of Stockard's work is on display in the Union Second Floor Showcase through May 6.

Stockard's interest in wood carving began when his father gave him a pocket knife when he was six. Many wood carvers have started the same way, he said.

In the showcase display, some of Stockard's recent pieces are presented, showing years of experience since the small pocket knife. Among the pieces are Americana-type statues of an Indian chief and our national symbol, the bald eagle. Stockard also opts for humorous pieces depicting old sea captains and playful dogs.

In a more modern sense are two wood figures and a sleek, black mobile. One of the figures is a highly polished torso of a woman, an excellent example of his handicraft.

As well as carving figures like those on display in the Union, Stockard also makes furniture. He began making it when he was married because he and his wife needed some furniture.

Stockard said when he is carving he thinks about getting the proportions right and feels good when he does. Carving gives him the feeling of having a good time, he added.

He mainly uses wood he can find available for his carving. Some of the wood he works with include basswood, white pine and willow. Although he has worked with a variety of woods, Stockard said he prefers working with light-colored woods because they show detail better than darker woods.

Stockard made a lot of the tools that he uses, particularly the smaller tools. He said it is almost easier to make the tools than to wait for ready-made tools to be delivered. When making his tools, Stockard uses high carbon steel in making the blades. It takes him about an hour from to make the tools.

In the next month or two Stockard will begin work on a wood-carving machine that will rough out the wood, which is needed before he can begin work on finer details. This machine will save him a lot of work and time, he said.

Stockard said he enjoys wood carving, yet, he has a hard time explaining the good feeling he gets while carving.

Stockard retired in January after 17 years of teaching at K-State. He received his master's degree from K-State in radio and television.

Meats lab to install cooling system; sales cease during summer repair

The K-State meats' laboratory will be closed this summer. The shutdown will allow the lab's current refrigeration system to be replaced by a new Freon cooling system.

The meats' laboratory, located in Weber Hall, processes meat from University livestock used for teaching and research.

The lab's cooling system will be turned off May 6 and all meat cutting operations will stop. Meat which has not already been sold will be stored in Pittman Building.

Meat processed by the laboratory is sold on Fridays to faculty, staff, students and Manhattan residents. Approximately $3,000 is received each week from meat sales.

Because the meats lab will not be in operation, there will be no Friday meats sales in the summer. The last weekly retail sale will be May 27.

"We hate to not be able to sell meat this summer," Bob Danler, meats lab manager, said. "We hope they can make it without us and would like to see all of them here next fall."

Completion date for the new refrigeration system is August 1983.

"We hope to have the meats lab operations back in full swing the early part of August," Danler said.

According to Danler, the current ammonia system is being replaced because it is worn out and no longer dependable.

"Equipment only lasts so long," Danler said. "It's on the verge of going out."

The ammonia cooling system was installed in 1957 when Weber was built. The system has failed periodically for the past several years.

The Freon system was chosen to replace the ammonia system because Freon is a non-poisonous gas which is more commonly used for refrigeration systems, Dell Allen, professor of animal sciences and industry, said.

Only existing freezing capabilities are being replaced, he said. The amount of cooler or freezer space in the meats lab will remain the same.

"We are replacing something that should have been taken care of 15 years ago," Allen said.

The cost for installing the Freon unit is estimated at slightly more than $80,000. Finances for the replacement unit will come from special funding provided by the offices of the dean of agriculture and the president.

According to Danler, the Freon refrigeration system will allow the meats faculty to work on their research projects at K-State. In the past, the unreliable refrigeration system has forced researchers to use other facilities to carry out their projects.

U.S. embassy survivors salvage wreckage; staff members relocate into own residences

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — U.S. Embassy staffers have turned their homes into offices and are busy stripping the bombed-out ruins of the embassy of all salvageable equipment.

Still shaken and grieving from last week's bombing, the American and Lebanese staff who survived the bombing are already at work in temporary quarters. The press of troop withdrawal negotiations and the visit of U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz have left little time for anything else.

"Nobody is pretending this is easy," said embassy press officer John Reid, who was injured in the blast that killed at least 17 Americans and an estimated 32 Lebanese staff. "Three of my employees were killed, some others were hurt. It's had a terrible effect on everybody else.

"People want to work, they feel the need to be together. When they are together, there are three empty places. Everybody's tired, everybody's grieving," said Reid, 43, from Staunton, Va.

Reid's administrative assistant, Beth Samuels of Corpus Christi, Texas, was working Wednesday despite a bruised and swollen face and a piece of glass still imbedded in her shoulder.

Asked when she would have it removed, she replied: "I haven't connected up with the doctor yet. Maybe tomorrow."

Marines and embassy workers were stripping the wrecked building of anything left usable — desks, chairs, filing cabinets and some machines. "But we lost a lot," Reid said.

Heavier items, such as safes, cannot be removed because parts of the bombed embassy — built as a hotel in 1953 — could collapse.

Marine 1st Lt. Peter Lloyd of Knoxville, Tenn., in charge of about 50 Marines still surrounding the wrecked building, said an engineer who checks the building hourly believes it is becoming more unsafe as as work proceeds to recover the bodies of seven missing Lebanese.

Most of the surviving staff have moved into embassy residences. Reid's spacious seafront apartment only a few dozen yards from the embassy has been stripped of household furniture and filled with desks and chairs. New telephone lines and powerlines have been strung, with a U.S. Marine field generator hooked up for added power.

Reid said all embassy functions that require contact with the public, such as his U.S. Information Office, the consulate and the Agency for International Development, are in his apartment building.

He declined, for security reasons, to say where other offices such as the CIA and Military Cooperation were located.

U.S. Ambassador Robert Dillon, his aide Robert Pugh and special envoys Morris Draper and Philip C. Habib are believed operating primarily from the ambassador's residence in suburban Yarze.

The embassy spokesman said the bomb has hurt embassy operations at a critical time, with Secretary of State Shultz due to arrive Thursday.

"I'd be less that candid if I said it's not difficult to support something like the Shultz visit. In my particular little part of organizing, the press area, the two people I would have normally depended on most are dead," he said.

Learning to be a leader

Jennifer Dalessandro

Rough, rugged and ready for action. Women of K-State's Army ROTC program are trained and conditioned just as the males are. But they find that a woman does not have to give up her femininity to be "one of the guys."

Undergoing the same training and classes, the female cadets are as prepared for service as their male counterparts. However, it is not only the unattractive girls who enter the program, as many believe.

"The typical female Army person is stereotyped as a short, fat, ugly person. I've seen some very feminine girls at summer camp," said Georgia McNeice, recruiting officer and senior in marketing and public information officer. "And you don't have to cut your hair off."

Although the ROTC program is male-dominated, more and more women are seeking the financial and employment opportunities of the progam. A four-year scholarship, including tuition, books and housing expenses, are provided for a commitment of four years of service upon graduation.

"It definitely stops the senior worries," McNeice said.

THE PROGRAM STARTS with freshmen who enroll in Military Science I (MS) and move up to MS II during their sophomore year. If they decide to continue, cadets sign a contract-obligation with the Army, and move into the MS III classes. After MS III, cadets attend a six-week summer camp, where they are graded on their leadership and training abilities.

After summer camp, staff positions are assigned to the highest-ranking cadets on the squad. Even though K-State's Army ROTC program is male-dominated, this year it has been under the female direction of the top cadet, Jennifer Dalessandro, senior in animal science.

Dalessandro's work in getting high academic grades, high performance scores from summer camp and gaining the respect of her cadre, earned Dalessandro the position of Battalion Commander for the squad. Throughout this school year, the squad has been solely under her direction.

At the beginning of the year, Dalessandro said she had some problems with a few of the cadets. One problem she faced was being a new recruit and not being with the squad as long as others had been.

"AS A FEMALE, you have to prove yourself," McNeice, also a staff officer, said. "There are a lot of guys with negative attitudes toward females. I enjoyed changing their attitudes."

It's harder to earn the respect of male cadets who are not used to taking orders from a female superior, Dalessandro said. But once the respect is gained, the males will support the female cadets.

"The guys in your squad really stick up for you since you work as a team," Kathy Steinbach, cadet and junior in computer science, said. "Sometimes males from other platoons will criticize, so sometimes females have to work harder just to be equal."

Because women may have to work harder to earn their respect, they may tend to be somewhat tougher on the platoons. The female instructors at summer camp sometimes tend to be rougher on the squads because they want the respect, Beth Miklos, senior in occupational therapy at the University of Kansas, said.

AS PART OF their training, women in the program are under strict weight limits and a physical fitness program. Dalessandro said cadets make up their own personal fitness program, but are tested twice a semester.

"When I first started this program, I'd never done any push-ups," Dalessandro said. "Now, 40 is nothing."

The program uses different methods to give recruits self-confidence. Part of the camp experience includes a "slide for life." After crawling up a 500-foot tower, cadets grab pulleys and race toward the water at a speed of 60 mph.

"It's an adventure. I know I did a lot of things I didn't think I could do. It's a physical and mental challenge," Dalessandro said.

"ROTC makes you feel really positive about yourself," Steinbach said. "Everybody gives you credit even if you are just trying. It makes you feel confident that what you're doing is really right. I can tell in other areas of my life, too. I like myself a lot better and other people have noticed I've changed."

PART OF CADET training included a Field Training Exercise weekend earlier this month. During this weekend, cadets are informed about and trained for situations they might encounter in their service careers. Spending the weekend at Fort Riley, cadets got a real taste of Army life.

Learning how to camouflage themselves and other squad members was one of the first exercises. Faces and hands were painted different shades of green and brown; battle hats were filled with grass from the field; and the cadets were ready for anything.

The low and high body crawl was another exercise. In the high crawl, cadets move on their knees and elbows as close to the ground as possible. Next, the low crawl is literally crawling on the ground, face in the grass and body next to the ground.

Another field exercise was training for walking through mine fields. Each squad was instructed on different types of land mines and how they could be tripped. One brave cadet "was volunteered" to cut a path through the mine fields with out tripping off any mines. Since the experiment was simulated, the mines were not actually set to explode.

THE FIELD Training Exercise weekend was used to give cadets actual training experience before attending summer camp since they will be tested over many of these exercises. While some of the exercises were strenuous and demanding, female cadets did not falter under the pressure.

"They're some of the most zealous ones out here," Ron Zerrer, cadet and junior in political science and history, said. "Females have a tendency to pay a little more attention to details. They're good planners."

Steinbach said the weekend was a good experience for her. She not only learned a lot, but she met many new people from other schools and had some fun.

Besides participating in the weekend, several female cadets served as squad leaders. Dalessandro was the Company Commander Adviser for the weekend and handled all the administrative duties.

HER SQUADS WERE next tested in reaction to simulated direct fire. Other female leaders from other schools, including Miklos from KU, helped train and evaluate the cadets' performance.

Training experiences are the same for males and females, and the females are expected to carry their weight. Miklos said there is not so much distinction between male and female because the females are considered "one of the guys" on their squads.

"We're doing our part. I think we still have to do our share," Steinbach said. "Even if you're not particularly gung-ho, you still learn. This is good practice for summer camp."

Experience gained from ROTC will always be helpful, no matter what type of job a cadet may eventually have, McNeice said. Upon graduation, both McNeice and Dalessandro will enter the Army as second lieutenants. After their four years of service, they will be able to decide whether to continue in the service.

Rick Berkfeldt, junior in electrical engineering, congratulates Kathy Steinbach, junior in computer science, after a training exercise.

Kathy Steinbach, left, watches over the squad before marching it back to the barracks.

Spring construction sites bloom around Manhattan

By LUCINDA ELLISON
Staff Writer

Caution: Men at Work.

Although there are no such warnings, a rash of construction has struck Manhattan. From the downtown area to Anderson Avenue, builders are constructing new buildings, and in some cases, tearing down old structures.

During the first three months of this year, the permit valuation increased from 2.5 million last year to 7.8 million this year, Dan Woellhof, building official of the code inspection office, said.

The total number of permits issued for the first three months last year was 65 compared to 75 during the first three months of 1983. Building permits for single family homes increased from 15 to 24 over last year, he said.

Construction of a new First National Bank facility is currently underway at the corner of Claflin Road and Denison Avenue. The building is part of a shopping center complex to be constructed where the D & O Shop Quik was located, Jim Wild, executive vice president of the bank, said. The bank will occupy the north corner of the construction area.

The shopping complex, once completed, will occupy 23,000 square feet, Richard Lashbrook, of H & L Investments, said. Lashbrook and partner Charles Hostetler are responsible for the project, which will be two levels and include about six to eight stores. A separate building will be constructed for the new D & O Shop Quik, Lashbrook said.

ALTHOUGH THE BANK was previously operating at the location in a temporary structure, the new facility will replace the old building, Wild said.

"The building that had been there for seven years was just a temporary, so this is a culmination of a long-range plan," he said.

According to Wild, the bank is currently offering customer service through a temporary unit located at the north end of the construction site. The unit is actually part of the old facility.

Drive-through services along with walk-in customer service now offered will continue to be offered at the new facility. The first drive-through automated teller service in Manhattan will also be included. Although automated teller units are currently in use all over the city, the new First National facility will be the first one specifically designed for customer use from a vehicle, Wild said.

THE BANK IS currently considering other possibilities in customer services, he said.

"There are several different possibilities we are considering. They would be services that would be designed to promote the University.

"For example if the University would need a ticket outlet for athletic events or for performing arts, we would have room to accommodate ticket outlets for those kind of services. We don't know that there's a need for those kind of services," he added.

"There will be quite a bit more floor space. It will be arranged better so the people there can serve customers better," Wild said.

Construction is expected to be completed by August or September, he said.

ANOTHER CONSTRUCTION site located on the corner of Claflin Road and Sunset Avenue will be occupied by the Pawnee Mental Health Services. The completed facility will be approximately 15,700 square feet and is planned to accommodate the staffs currently located at three separate locations in Manhattan.

"It's been a problem for three or four years having the staffs separated," Denny Clark, executive director, said.

"The new building is larger than the combined total of the other three facilities. We currently have people in hallways and converted closets. It's really bad," he added.

Plans for the construction call for completion of the project by September, but Clark said the building will probably be finished by August.

Although the problem with overcrowding and separation of staffs has existed for quite some time, approval of the project had to be made by the Riley County Commission, he said.

"They had to agree to issue the general obligation bonds to fund part of the program," Clark said.

APPROXIMATE COST of the construction is $400,000. According to Clark, the project is being funded by general obligation bonds issued by Riley County, a revenue sharing grant from the city and an economic development grant from the county.

An additional cost of approximately $100,000 for expenses, such as the moving of equipment and furnishings for the facility, are being funded by an industrial revenue bond.

Actually, Riley County will own the new facility, Clark said. Pawnee Mental Health Services will lease the building which will pay off construction costs in 10 years. At the end of the 10-year period, the center will continue to pay off the cost at $1 for the next three years.

With the consolidation of the three staffs, the new facility will continue to offer administration services for a 10-county area. Other services that will be offered include children's and adults' outpatient services, drug and alcohol services, consultation and education, public information, program

Rental law protects students

Tenants, landlord on 'equal footing'

By BECKY FOLKERTS
Collegian Reporter

Are students left without a leg to stand on when going up against landlords or iron-clad contracts?

"Sometimes," Dennis Keenan, a Great Bend attorney, said. "But students can protect themselves from losing out of money and in court if they knew how — before the fact."

During the last year, the apartment dwelling trend has been on the upswing. Along with this upswing, problems with rental and leasing agreements, landlords and roommates have increased.

Tina Glover, off-campus housing officer, said that calls concerning these affairs have doubled during the last year.

"WHEN STUDENTS HAVE problems with anything concerning off-campus housing, they call me with complaints or for information. I try to help them with information we have available at Pittman Hall or if the situation becomes too picky, refer them to the student lawyer.

"They can protect themselves, but usually we can only help before the problem arises," Glover said.

The new Kansas Landlord-Tenant Act completed by the Kansas Legislature in 1976 is commonly referred to by Glover when assisting students.

"The closer a contract comes to the Act the better," Glover said. "Many times if the contract conflicts with the Landlord-Tenant Act, the lease can be voided."

Keenan said several "provisions of the Landlord-Tenant Act offer protection for both parties."

IT EXPLICITLY OUTLINES the proper execution of a lease, the rights, duties and liabilities for both landlords and tenants, housing codes and security deposits.

"These revisions are designed to guide landlords when drawing up their contracts," Keenan said.

Good business practice demands the landlord and tenant to execute a carefully drafted lease that defines their perspective rights, he said.

If a provision of the landlord's contract differs from that of the Act, both parties should agree to that provision before signing a commitment, the Act states.

Other guidelines of the Act state rights and duties for both parties. For example, under common law, the tenant has the exclusive right to the possession and use of the premises during the term of the lease. If the landlord goes into the premises without the tenant's consent, the landlord is guilty of trespassing.

THE ACT ALSO states that the tenant is responsible for the care and upkeep of the property. The tenant has no duty to make major repairs except where he is negligent.

The landlord is entitled to the agreed rent for the term of the lease. The landlord also has the right to the return of the premises in as good as condition when leased.

Glover emphasized the fact each promise made by the landlord should be done in writing.

She said many times students are overenthusiastic in signing rental agreements and forget to properly read what they're signing.

"Students end up not receiving security deposits, repairs or proper care of the apartment. A contract is an important signed and agreed document which should be taken seriously. The tenant should have in writing what is expected from both himself and the landlord.

"IT WILL NOT only protect the property owner, but the tenant as well," she said.

For example, in order for a tenant to protect his deposit, the Act states an inventory should be taken by the tenant before moving in and after with the landlord present. At that time, the tenant can demand his deposit if no damage is reported.

The landlord has 14 days to send the deposit or a list of damages if no deposit is to be returned. These inventories should be in writing to ensure enforcement and security of the deposit. If a tenant neglects to do this, the deposit may be lost.

Glover recommended several ways in which a tenant can secure his protection.

Consumer information guidelines and rental agreement forms in Pittman can ensure tenants proper treatment.

"NOT ONLY ARE the tenants protected, but it can keep the courts clear of lengthy landlord-tenant disputes," she said.

A rental agreement form which complies with the Landlord-Tenant Act can be taken to the landlord for written agreement.

"It could help when problems begin cropping up between a tenant and a landlord," Glover said.

A basic guideline to help stop rental problems is also available for students who plan on renting. It reminds rentees to read the lease carefully, inspect the apartment (with the landlord), be familiar with Manhattan's housing codes, know the Landlord-Tenant Act and be aware that Kansas now puts landlords and tenants on an equal footing which gives tenants rights.

Glover said students, before entering a written agreement, should remember to practice defensive renting. Several tips and forms of information are available at Pittman that help students find suitable apartments.

"We are better able to help them if they see us before they enter a contract.

"It may take some time, but in the long run (we) could save a tenant many financial and legal problems," Glover said.

Roommate rental agreement provides legal protection

By SHERYALD BAUGHN
Collegian Reporter

Once again it is that time of the year when students must decide whether to live on or off campus for the next school term.

When a student decides to live off campus there are many decisions to make, including the choice of a roommate or roommates. Many students stay with previous roommates, others decide to room with friends and some even go the route of placing advertisements for a roommate.

No matter how roommates get together, the fact is that a sharing of bill-paying responsibilities will be part of the living arrangements.

This is one reason why the Roommate Rental Agreement contract is now available for students at Pittman Hall — to protect an individual from having the total responsibility of the bills, Tina Glover, head of off-campus housing, said.

"It is a written agreement between roommates which legally binds each roommate as a group and as an individual, Glover said. "The contract is usually used by those students who go through our roommate matching program."

Glover explained when a student goes through the matching program, he will be rooming with a stranger.

"The student doesn't know his new roommate's habits when it comes to paying bills or even if he'll stay in the apartment for the full leasing term," she said.

THE ROOMMATE CONTRACT legally binds all roommates who sign to an agreement with each other and the landlord.

Within the contract there are individual sections, Glover said, including understanding the contract, term or period, rent, security deposit, utilities and moving out.

The first section deals solely with the roommates agreement to accept the responsibilities to each other, the landlord and the utility companies, as an individual as well as a group.

Also in this section, the individual agrees each roommate has "equal rights as to the use of the space and facilities in the dwelling with the exception of the areas we have designated as each one's private space."

The second section, terms or period, simply confirms the agreement with the landlord — when rent begins, when it is to be paid, when the lease terminates — and that the individual fully understands and accepts the rules and responsibilities of that agreement.

THE SECTION ON rent binds the individual to pay his portion of the rent for the period of the lease.

When confronting the section on security deposit, there is more involved. When the individual agrees to sign, he not only agrees to pay for the damages caused by the actions of himself but also of his pets and friends.

"I accept responsibility for the damages, etc. which I, my pet, or a friend of mine causes, and I will reimburse my roommates for that part of their security deposit withheld for those damages...," the contract reads.

Chiefs predict no playoffs in immediate future

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The Kansas City Chiefs probably are heading into their 12th straight season of not making the playoffs, head coach John Mackovic indicated Wednesday.

Chiefs officials hinted strongly last January that a major factor in firing head coach Marv Levy was the failure to get what they considered a playoff-worthy team past the regular season. Owner Lamar Hunt and president Jack Steadman said they felt Chiefs' overall talent ranked among the NFL's top 10.

But Mackovic, one day after making Penn State quarterback Todd Blackledge his No. 1 draft choice, said the Chiefs would have trouble getting into the playoffs next season no matter who the quarterback is.

"I'm not sure any quarterback could get the Chiefs into the playoffs in 1983," said the first-year head coach. "There's still a lot of work to be done. When you lead the league in sacks (given up) two of the last three years, you have a lot of work to do."

A quarterback controversy hounded Levy almost his entire five years as Chiefs coach. The past three years, Steve Fuller, a 1978 first-round choice, and Bill Kenney battled to a frustrating draw for the starting position. One would hold the job a few games, then the other would take over for a while. However, quarterback had not been viewed as a critical area. And since quarterbacks are always a slow-to-develop commodity, Mackovic took some heat for using the first-round choice on Blackledge.

"WE HAVE MANY things to improve upon to make our team a better football team," Mackovic said. "Our defense has to play better. Our special teams have to improve, our punting in particular. Our offense has not been a consistent offense. You can't get into the playoffs like that."

Mackovic noted that the Chiefs face one of the toughest schedules in the league next year, including back-to-back road assignments with last year's Super Bowl participants, Miami and Washington.

"We'd have enough trouble of a battle if we had a championship-caliber team right now," he said.

Mackovic made it clear he does not expect the strong-armed but still-raw Blackledge to walk into the starter's job. He also shrugged off speculation that Fuller or Kenney could develop morale problems after deciding that neither is the Chiefs' quarterback of the future.

"I'M CONVINCED that between Steve and Bill, those two will have a very competitive battle this summer...that one of them will be the starting quarterback," he said. "It will be the responsibility of anyone else to grow in our system and challenge them when the time comes. When you reach this level of competition, the National Football League, you should never be concerned about competition. There will always be competition.

"Whoever is playing is going to have to play. He will meet the challenge. He will be a better player, and we'll be a better football team."

Colts blasted for draft pick; Elway still says 'no' to team

The phones rang repeatedly Wednesday at the headquarters of the Baltimore Colts — but none of the callers was offering to take John Elway off their hands.

Instead, the callers were, for the most part, Colts fans — some identified themselves as former fans — condemning or praising the team for making Elway, the Stanford quarterback, its No. 1 choice in Tuesday's National Football League draft.

Elway has the options of playing baseball in the New York Yankees' organization, waiting a year and re-entering the draft, perhaps waiting two years and becoming a free agent able to deal with any NFL team, or signing with the Oakland Invaders of the United States Football League.

The NFL negotiation rights to Elway remain Baltimore's until the 1984 draft, unless he signs with the USFL or a Canadian Football League team, in which case his rights would belong to the Colts for four years.

The one thing which seems increasingly certain is that he will not play for the Colts. He told them so in the weeks preceding the draft, and told them even more emphatically shortly after bein picked.

"THEY WERE being greedy," Elway said of the Colts' General Manager, Ernie Accorsi, and its head coach, Frank Kush.

Accorsi, Kush and other club officials spent much of Wednesday closeted in their offices, pondering their prospects of either inducing Elway to change his mind or of dealing him to a West Coast team or the Dallas Cowboys, Elway's preferences within the NFL.

They said they didn't plan to initiate any negotiations — and although a Colts spokesman said there had been some conversations with other teams, he added that there had been no trade offers.

One NFL executive, who asked not to be identified, intimated that the teams said to have been in the bidding for the Colts' top pick might have been wise to restrain themselves from mortgaging too much of their future for a shot at Elway.

"REMEMBER WHEN the (Philadelphia) Eagles thought they needed a quarterback so badly," the official said, "that they traded away all those high draft choices for Roman Gabriel? How long did it take them to recover from that?

"And what about what the (Seattle) Seahawks did?" he went on. "Tony Dorsett said he'd never play for them, so they traded their pick (No. 2 in the first round in 1977) to Dallas. What's happened since then?" What has happened is that Dorsett is a superstar and only one of the four players drafted by the Seahawks with the picks they got is still with them."

Among the teams considered the most likely candidates to obtain Elway — if the Colts can swing a deal — is the Los Angeles Raiders. According to a source close to the predraft discussions between the two clubs, the Raiders attempted in vain to acquire the Chicago Bears' No. 1 pick (sixth overall) to package with their own No. 1 (26th in the first round) and young reserve quarterback Marc Wilson.

The Raiders reportedly also offered their first-round pick in 1983 and the two succeeding drafts, along with Wilson, but the Colts were unwilling to go for it because of the likelihood the picks in 1984 and 1985 would be low in the round as well.

Women golfers finish seventh in Big Eight...

The K-State women's golf team finished just as the coaches predicted it would in the Women's Big Eight Tournament, as the Wildcats finished last in the field.

The title was taken by Nebraska, who was picked to take third, with a three round total of 958. The Huskers were followed by Oklahoma (962), Oklahoma State (967), Kansas and Missouri (1026) and Iowa State (1026). The Wildcats had a 54-hole total of 1160.

The top finisher for K-State was Anne Hegarty, shooting rounds of 94, 100 and 91 for a 285. Terri Alexander was next for K-State with scores of 89, 103 and 94 to finish with a 286. The other three Wildcats were Sharry Dercher (97, 99, 102 — 298), Christy Clanton (101, 97, 100 — 298), and Becky Stromgren (99, 104, 97 — 300).

The top finisher in the tournament was Janice Burba of Oklahoma State. The second place medalist of a year ago shot a 233 with rounds of 81, 75 and 77. Cathy Nelson of Nebraska was just behind her with a 234, shooting rounds of 77, 78 and 79. Shelly Godken finished third with 81, 78, 78 — 237.

After the second round of play on Tuesday, K-State coach Lila Levin said the weather played a large part in determining the Wildcats' scores.

"The wind is really a factor in our play. It sure makes putting a lot harder," she said.

She also noted that the scores were higher than normal for the Big Eight Tournament.

Despite the fact that K-State was in last after the second round, Levin said she was pleased with the improvements her team had made.

"I'm happy with how the women improved today over yesterday. We have a long way to go, but I see they're beginning to deal with the pressure a lot better."

...while women's tennis takes sixth

K-State's women's tennis team improved on last year's performance, finishing sixth at the Big Eight Tournament in Kansas City, Kan.

The top finisher for the Wildcats was the No. 1 doubles team of Christel Felder and Calye Madelen finished fourth, losing to Lori McNeil and Mary Boudreaux of Oklahoma State in the semifinals, 6-1, 6-1, and falling to Christie Parr and Stephanie Dicke of Kansas, 7-5, 6-3, in the consolation round.

The only victory of the day came to Lisa Creighton in the No. 6 singles competition. Creighton defeated Shelli Stang of Iowa State, 6-3, 6-4, to take fifth.

Madelen and Sue Peugh got sixth-place finishes in the singles division. Madelen, the No. 3 player, lost to Anne Swanson of Nebraska, 6-3, 6-4, while Peugh fell to Maureen Guilfiol of Kansas, 6-2, 6-1, in the No. 4 singles.

K-State's No. 2 and No. 3 doubles teams both finished seventh. The team of Sue and Tamie Peugh lost to Melissa Haughland and Karlin Ellefson of Colorado, 6-7, 6-3, 6-2, and the team of Laurie Rorabaugh and Beth Nemec was defeated by Leah Nero and Adriane Napp of Colorado, 6-3, 6-2.

Defending champion Oklahoma State clinched the team title before all matches had been played. With four matches set for Wednesday night, the Oklahoma State team had 112 points, while Oklahoma was second with 101 points.

Nebraska was third with 69 points, and Colorado was fourth with 60. They were followed by Kansas with 48 points, Kansas State with 29 and Iowa State with 18. Missouri disbanded its women's tennis team last year.

Men golfers to compete at Iowa meet

Coming off an impressive showing in the Heart of America Tournament in Warrensburg, Mo., last weekend, the K-State men's golf team will travel to Des Moines, Iowa, to compete in the Drake Relays, today and Friday.

The Wildcats have only competed in two tournaments so far this season, with one of them being a complete meet. The first meet at Park College in Kansas City ended after the first round, with a tie of fifth for the 'Cats.

The men's most recent tournament, the Heart of America tourney, proved K-State's golfers could still score well despite practice-hampering weather. With four of the five men turning in scores in the 70s, the 'Cats finished the 15-team tournament fourth and tied with Northeast Missouri State.

Sophomores Kevin Crow and Robert Sedorcek hold the squad's best average heading into the meet. Crow has been shooting a 77 average after three rounds, with Sedorcek close on his tracks at 78.7.

K-State teams sign more standouts

Softball squad obtains local player

Four-sport standout Joyce Hawley of Manhattan has signed a national letter-of-intent to play softball at K-State next year, Wildcat coach Ralph Currie has announced.

Hawley, a senior at Manhattan High School, has played with the Manhattan Optimists softball team the last three years, never hitting less than .500 as the starting center fielder. She teamed with her sister, pitcher Jenise Hawley, to take the team to fourth place in the state and regionals in 1980.

She also has lettered in volleyball, basketball and track as a prepster. Hawley helped Manhattan's volleyball team win the I-70 League championship the last two seasons, including a 33-3 record in 1982.

The basketball team was I-70 co-champion and was ranked first in the state. Hawley was a starting forward with a scoring average of eight points per game. She currently is participating with the track squad and has qualified for the state tournament the last three years in the discus. She placed third as a sophomore and seventh as a junior.

Hawley is projected as an outfielder at K-State and plans to major in business or accounting.

"I really love playing center field," Hawley said. "I have lived in Manhattan since I was 2 years old and always have followed K-State. I've thought about becoming a Wildcat and it's neat to finally become one."

"As long as I've coached at K-State I've had my eye on Joyce and I'm pleased to sign her," Coach Currie said. "I feel she was one of the two best players in the state last summer and she has great defensive skills."

Distance runners join track crews

K-State's men's and women's track programs received a boost with the signing of a trio of distance runners. The women have gained the services of Shawnee Mission East product Anne Stadler, while the men have added Brad Ogden, Kansas City Washington High School's distance ace, and Ron Stahl, from Lincolnway High in New Lenox, Ill.

Stadler received rave reviews after setting a Kansas Relays record in the mile run, clocking an impressive 4:57.22. Her season-best 4:55.32 is the third-fastest on the Kansas all-time prep honor roll. In addition to her mile-run gold, she anchored the record-setting two-mile relay squad to a 9:39.0 finish at KU.

Stadler's other prep accomplishment include a first place in the mile at last year's 6A meet and a runner-up finish in the state 6A cross country championships last fall.

"Without a doubt Anne is going to be one of the next great distance runners from our state. She's one of the most exciting runners I've seen in awhile," said Coach Steve Miller. "Anne is just real, real good, plus she's only been running since her sophomore year."

Brad Ogden becomes the second athlete from Washington High School to sign with the Wildcats. Earlier Mary Schaeffer decided to bring her distance talents to K-State.

Ogden currently owns a 9:37.3 time in the two mile, which is third fastest in the state. He was the state 6A cross country champion last fall. "We're looking at Brad for the 5,000- and 10,000-meter events. He should be very good in the longer distances and will be a tremendous addition to this area for us," Miller said.

Stahl owns the fourth-fastest indoor two-mile prep time with a 9:11.6 clocking earlier this year. His 1982 outdoor season was highlighted with a third place finish in the state championships.

Wildcat coach Steve Miller was pleased with his newest addition. "Ron is a phenomenal runner. He has the capabilities of becoming one of the top 10 distance runners in the nation. We're excited he chose K-State."

These three join distance runners Nancy Hoffman (Westmoreland) and Mary Schaeffer (Kansas City). The Wildcats' other signee is javelin ace Julie Waage (Portland, Ore.).

Men's tennis team sets goal of fourth place in Big Eight

After defeating the Iowa State Cyclones last Saturday, a sixth-place finish in the Big Eight Conference has been clinched for K-State's men netters. However, fourth place is not out of reach in the final men's standing, Coach Steve Snodgrass, said.

The Wildcats, 8-13 overall in dual competition and 2-4 in Big Eight action, will try to make that fourth-place finish a reality as they travel today to Woodside Racquet Club in Kansas City, Kan., to compete in the Big Eight Conference Championship.

"Going into the tournament we're ahead of Iowa State and only a few points behind Kansas and Colorado," Snodgrass said. "I think our goal of getting fourth place is very realistic if the guys can perform like they have been lately."

Freshman sensation Jeff Jackard, the Wildcats' No. 1 singles player, holds the team's best single mark with a 10-12 record and 3-3 Big Eight mark. Jackard will enter the tournament seeded fourth.

Teamed with senior Gary Hassenflu, Jackard will also play in doubles competition with the possibility of being seeded fourth. Although they have only paired up for the last three duals as the No. 1 doubles team, Jackard and Hassenflu hold a mark of 2-1 in conference play.

K-State enters the tournament in the best shape since 1978, when they placed sixth. Oklahoma State is the tourney's predicted winner, according to Big Eight coaches.

"We're going into this tournament with great hope and more confidence than ever," Snodgrass said.

Big Eight softball meet opens today

K-State's softball team will try to prove the coaches wrong at the Eighth Annual Big Eight Championships in Norman, Okla., this weekend.

The Wildcats have been picked for seventh place in a pre-tournament poll by conference coaches. K-State, however, has its eyes on improving on last year's fourth-place finish, the highest in the school's history.

Heading into round-robin action which is set for today through Saturday, the 'Cats are 11-11 overall. K-State will open tournament play today as they tangle the Oklahoma Sooners in an afternoon matchup and will end the day with a contest against championship favorite Oklahoma State.

Friday's slate calls for the Wildcats to play defending titlist Nebraska and Kansas, while Saturday's schedule pits the 'Cats against Iowa State and Missouri.

Senior Janel Anderson holds school career pitching records for victories, strikeouts and innings, and has led K-State once again this year. The Overbrook native is 11-11 with 18 completions, 51 strikeouts and a 1.45 ERA. She has worked all but nine innings this year.

The Wildcats' batting leaders are shortstop Kelly Scoles (.303) and outfielder Pam Hentzler (.237).

"We have played well lately with four straight wins. Janel has had an exceptional season pitching and we have hit the ball better than last year. We're certainly hoping to finish than last season."

Ryan fans 3,509th batter to set strikeout record

MONTREAL (AP) — Nolan Ryan of the Houston Astros erased one of baseball's most durable records Wednesday, striking out the 3,509th batter of his career to pass Walter Johnson as the game's all-time strikeout king.

The record, which had stood for 55 years, fell in the eighth inning when Ryan caught pinch-hitter Brad Mills of the Montreal Expos looking on a 1-2 curveball in the eighth inning of the Astros' 4-2 victory.

The 36-year-old Ryan, who pitched for the New York Mets and the California Angels before joining the Astros, eclipsed Johnson in only his 16th full season. Johnson, the consummate fastballer known as the "Big Train," finished his 21 seasons with the Washington Senators in 1927 with 3,508 strikeouts.

Ryan tied the record by getting Tim Blackwell swinging on a 3-2 fastball to start the eighth inning and then passed Johnson when he slipped a breaking pitch past the next batter, Mills hitting for Doug Flynn.

Ryan left the game for a pinch-hitter in the top of the ninth, finishing his historic day with a five-strikeout, five-hit, one-walk performance in eight innings for his second victory in three starts this season.

THE CROWD of 19,309 at Olympic Stadium, which had given little or no acknowledgement of Ryan's record pursuit for the first seven innings, gave him a polite standing ovation when he tied it by striking out Blackwell for the second time of the game and then cheered loudly when Mills wrote his name into baseball's trivia books.

Ryan, a 6-foot-2, 195-pound right-hander from Alvin, Texas, started slowly, allowing a run on one hit and a walk without a strikeout in the first inning, but then things warmed up, briefly. He fanned two batters, Tim Wallach and Blackwell, in the second inning, both swinging. Still, there was no reaction from the crowd, no recognition of history in the making.

Although he was pitching well, Ryan did not strike out another batter until he fanned Bryan Little with one out in the sixth. And he was one strikeout away from the record.

WHEN THE SEASON opened Ryan had 3,494 strikeouts, but an infection of his prostate gland pushed back the timetable for his assault on Johnson's mark. He was placed on the 21-day disabled list and did not make his first start until April 17, when he struck out seven batters in six innings in a 6-3 victory over the Expos.

In his second start, against Philadelphia last Friday night, he fanned only three in a 6-3 loss, bringing him into Wednesday's game with 3,504 strikeouts, four short of what had been considered one of baseball's unassailable records.

Babe Ruth's record of 714 career home runs stood for 40 years until broken by Hank Aaron, who extended it to 755. Ty Cobb's record of 892 career stolen bases stood for 50 years until shattered by Lou Brock with 938.

Johnson's strikeout record fell as much to another era, another type of ballplayer, as it did to Ryan.

WHEN JOHNSON'S career ended, second place on the all-time list belonged to Cy Young with 2,819. Johnson was 689 strikeouts ahead and looked invincible.

It wasn't until 1977 that Bob Gibson became the only other pitcher to break the 3,000 barrier. Now, with 3,117, Gibson stands sixth all-time, and two other pitchers can pass Johnson this year. Steve Carlton, 38, third all-time, has 3,480, and 44-year-old Gaylord Perry has 3,466. Tom Seaver, 38, stands fifth on the list with 3,157, and 39-year-old Ferguson Jenkins, with 3,107, is seventh.

In fact, Johnson is the only pitcher among the Top Ten who played before 1955 and, by the end of the 1984 season, he could drop to as low as sixth on the all-time scale, below even Seaver and Jenkins.

Ryan himself could be passed, and expects to be passed, by Carlton, who pitches every fourth day, compared to every fifth day for Ryan.

A POWER PITCHER whose fastball was clocked at nearly 101 mph in 1974, Ryan still is the fastest pitcher in the game. His fastball was clocked at 98 mph against the Expos in his first start, and several were in the 97-98 mph range against Philadelphia.

He admits, however, that when his legs start to go, so will his velocity. He doubts, even now, that he will pitch until he is 40 years old, but when that time comes, he surely still will be holding onto some impressive statistics.

He holds many marks that his current pursuers cannot touch. In a career that began in earnest in 1968 with the New York Mets, blossomed with the California Angels and took firm root in Houston, Ryan has established himself as baseball's most feared artisan of the fastball.

HE HAS USED his three-digit fastball and parabolic curve to set major league records by striking out 300 or more batters in five seasons, including three in a row from 1972-74. Johnson struck out 300 or more in only two seasons and Carlton just once, in 1972.

Ryan holds the major league record with five no-hitters, compared with one for Johnson and none for Carlton. He fanned 383 in 1973 for another major league mark. He has struck out 10 or more batters in 145 games, 15 or more in 21 games, and his nine-inning strikeout average of 9.42 is an all-time high. His league-leading ERA of 1.69 in 1981 was one of the lowest since World War II.

The one factor detracting from Ryan's career has been his low winning percentage. Ryan entered the season with a career won-lost mark of 205-186 for a percentage of .524. Johnson won 416 and lost 279, a .599 winning percentage. Ryan's career ERA is 3.11; Johnson's was 2.17.

Ryan has won 20 games just twice, and even those were not particularly impressive seasons percentage-wise. He was 21-16 in 1973 and 22-16 the following season with the California Angels. His major league record includes six losing seasons, although none since 1978. He was 16-12 last year.

UNIVERSITY CONVOCATION
"Women and the Quest for Justice"
Sonia Johnson, Co-founder, Mormons for ERA
A fifth generation Mormon and mother of four, Sonia Johnson co-founded Mormons for ERA in January of 1979. Because her outspoken support of the equality of women under the law came in conflict with her church's widespread opposition to the amendment, she was ex-communicated on December 5, 1979. Johnson continues to travel and speak out in support of an equal rights amendment and has appeared on many of the major radio and television talk shows throughout the country. She received her doctorate from Rutgers and has taught English at American and foreign universities.

Construction

evaluation, partial hospitalization, medical services, volunteer services and accounting, clerical and administrative services.

AFTER UNDERGOING extensive remodeling and the addition of space, The Chef has recently reopened. Construction, which took one month, increased the kitchen size by about one-third along with doubling the restaurant's size and increasing the seating area by more than one-half. To cover the increased area, the number of employees also doubled.

"The existing cafe was totally gutted and remodeled," Larry Limbocker, co-owner, said.

Limbocker, who is in partnership with his brother, Bob, said the possibility of an addition has been considered for quite some time, dating back to their father's ownership of the restaurant.

"It was time things were changing. The time was right.

"Even our dad considered it for years and years," he added.

In addition to remodeling and the addition, improvements to the outside were made.

"Anybody that remodels has to keep in certain guidelines as far as facades (as set up by the city).

"The awnings were our idea. We're (the downtown area) getting away from the metallic facades, the aluminum overhangs. They were popular when they first came out, but they're very cold.

"It's been real successful. People were going out of downtown to eat. Now we can keep them here and offer them something different and new," Limbocker said.

THE ORTHOPAEDIC and Sports Medicine Center which recently opened on Anderson, occupied by Dr. Richard Baker Jr., will offer more than orthopaedic services. Soon to be joined by Dr. William Jones, the two orthopaedic surgeons plan to offer services in sports medicine.

Previously, a part of the medical center located on College Avenue, Baker plans to take a "multi-disciplinary approach to sports medicine," Jim Rudd, coordinator of sports medicine, said. Rudd, head trainer for K-State athletics, works part-time at the center.

According to Rudd, the two physicians' approach concerns more prevention in athletic-related injuries, plus improved treatment and rehabilitation of these injuries and education in sports medicine.

Unable to incorporate these practices in the medical center, the new facility will have treatment and examination rooms, a training room and an X-ray room. A top level will include an orthopaedic library and private offices, Rudd said.

"We're working on hiring a physical therapist," he added.

Roommate

Along with this the individual agrees to pay his percent of the deposit as well as receive his portion of the return.

The utilities are agreed to be paid somewhat like rent — each having a certain portion to pay. The telephone bill however is the exception. This bill is to be paid with each individual paying the monthly charge plus his own long distance calls.

THE MOST COMPLEX area in this contract is the moving out section. There are times when an individual will decide, for one reason or another, to leave his roommates.

This leaves his fellow roommates with the responsibility of paying all of the rent and other bills.

To prevent the individual from totally abandoning his responsibilities and placing them upon others, the contract provides security for the remaining individuals.

The contract reads if, for any reason, an individual decides to move out, he must look for an acceptable replacement for his roommates. If a replacement cannot be found, then the individual shall still be responsible for paying his share of the rent and utilities.

However, the contract also states each individual can be held responsible to the landlord and the utility companies "for up to the entire rent and/or utility bills" if any of the individuals fail to fulfill their part of the agreement.

If an individual breaks this contract then it is the responsibility of the remaining roommate to take action not the landlord or utility companies, Glover said.

According to Glover, the agreement is not used much.

"Most students know their roommates and believe it would be insulting to ask their roommates to sign such an agreement," she said.

Roommates hesitate to sign such an agreement since doing so may hurt their relationship. But Glover said she believes it is important for rentees to know about the form in case a problem does arise.

Glover also believes that not many students know about the contract.

The Roommate Rental Agreement is provided by the Department of Housing at K-State for the mutual benefit to roommates, she said. However, the University assumes no responsibility.

Education

18-member commission declared in its unanimous report.

The panel addressed its report as "an open letter to the American people."

David Pierpont Gardner, the panel's chairman and president of the University of Utah, said the report documented "a fundemental deterioration in the preparedness of people both for work and for higher education.

The document drew immediate praise from virtually every quarter of the $215 billion-a-year American educational enterprise. But many leaders questioned where the money would come from to carry out suggested reforms.

Tax

Joining Carlin at the elaborate bill signing ceremony were three Kansas residents there to represent the average state citizen the tax will benefit.

Included in the group was Megan Laing, a 10-year-old Topeka elementary school student and daughter of Tom and Lynnea Laing. Also joining Carlin were Darrel Fries, a Topeka rubber worker, and Darlene Patrick, a teacher in the Shawnee Mission school district.

CARLIN WAS FLANKED by former House Speaker Wendell Lady and Senate Minority Leader Jack Steineger, whose "diligent efforts" ensured the bill's success.

Lady, an Overland Park Republican, was an early advocate of the tax and worked closely with Carlin to win passage in the Kansas House in both 1981 and 1982. However, Republican leaders in the Senate blocked movement of the bill both years during intense battles over the tax.

Lady, who was appointed by Carlin to the Kansas Board of Regents in January, called the signing a "historic event" but downplayed the importance of his involvement in the passage, and said he was reluctant to attend the ceremony.

"Of course I'm very pleased," Lady said. "But it is really of little consequence whatever role I played in it.

"What is important is that after all these years we finally have a severance tax on the books and all the people of Kansas will benefit from our natural resources. Justice has been done."

STEINEGER, D-KANSAS CITY, battled Senate President Ross Doyen, R-Concordia, and other vehement severance tax opponents in the upper chamber — including several members of his own party — to help win passage of the tax.

Although the House passed a severance tax the first year Carlin introduced it, it was almost two years before members of the Senate were allowed to vote on the tax. Finally, the Senate overwhelmingly passed a watered-down tax this year, which was introduced by Doyen.

The severance tax was a centerpiece of a package of tax increases enacted by the Kansas Legislature in 1983 aimed at shoring up a sagging state treasury. Lawmakers sent Carlin four tax increases, along with the severance tax, totalling $198.8 million.

City to assume campus fire services

By MARK HOBBS
Collegian Reporter

As of July 1, K-State will no longer have its own fire department. Frank Duncan, chief of the K-State Fire Department, said fire department employees have received written notice their jobs will be terminated on that date.

Gene Cross, vice president of University Facilities, said the University is arranging for Manhattan to provide fire protection for the University in a one-year interim contract. With the wording still being ironed out, the contract will be signed "on or before the end of June," he said.

"We will continue to negotiate for the new fire station. Hopefully, we will be able to consummate a longer term agreement," Cross said.

In trying to reach a long-term contract, Cross said, University land at Kimball and Denison would be donated for the city to locate a new fire station.

"Without seeing the contract, it's impossible for me to say if it's a good thing or not. I regret that it's an interim contract. I would have liked to have seen a long-term contract, as a one-year contract leaves room for a lot of reservations," Duncan said.

According to Manhattan Fire Chief Bill Smith, there will be advantages to both the community and the University if the city provides fire protection for the University.

"ONCE THE contract is established, the University will get the full protection of this fire department. It will give us a better grip on things there. Also we will be able to get into an extensive program of pre-planning for the University, the same way we have already pre-planned our response for our industrial parks and other large commercial areas.

"I have always been an advocate of having one fire department to provide service to the entire community. I think it was long overdue. Nobody can argue with the fact that the University is an important part of the community, and I think we should be providing protection for it," Smith said.

Not having enough fire equipment shouldn't be a problem, he said, because the Manhattan department has been upgrading its equipment over the past five years. However, there could be a manpower problem.

"WE ONLY HAVE 19 people on duty during eight hours of the day, and only 14 of those stay on duty for the other 16 hours. With the new station that is proposed, we may start a new program. We might be hiring some part-time help, possibly even some from the University," Smith said.

The new station would be located at the intersection of Kimball and Denison. Donating the land to the city is expected to be part of the University's payment for the service of the Manhattan Fire Department. The new station would provide better response time to the campus as well as to the rest of the community in the surrounding areas, Smith said.

The Manhattan Fire Department will face the same type of fires on campus as they deal with in the rest of community. But there will be some new problems, Duncan said.

"ONE OF THESE problems will be the inadequate water supplies on campus," Duncan said, referring to the campus' low water pressure which is not great enough for the fire department's needs.

"Building access will be another problem,

Committee expects to ban aid to Nicaragua

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Intelligence Committee will vote to ban covert military operations in Nicaragua despite President Reagan's appeal for Congress to rally behind his Central American policies, the panel's chairman said Thursday.

But the committee, meeting less than 24 hours after the president's plea to a joint session of the House and Senate, put off its decision until next Tuesday on a proposal to terminate funds for such covert activity in 45 days. The measure would substitute a program to openly help friendly nations in the region to halt leftist gunrunning.

Reagan, meanwhile, named former Sen. Richard Stone, D-Fla., to be his special envoy to Central America. Appointment of a special ambassador had been sought by congressmen critical of Reagan's policies, but opposition to Stone has been reported in the Senate.

First Senate reaction to the president's announcement, however, was low-key.

Sen. Paul Tsongas, D-Mass., an outspoken opponent of Reagan's Central American policies, called Stone "an acceptable nominee."

Sen. Charles McC. Mathias, R-Md., said, "If he has any disabilities, the process of careful examination by the Foreign Relations Committee will disclose those disabilities, and the fact he is a former member of the Senate will not protect him from that."

Alan Safran, a committee spokesman, said confirmation hearings would be given a "high priority" as soon as the nomination is received.

The president, announcing the nomination in the White House briefing room, told reporters he was not troubled by Stone's prior contacts with Guatemala, a major source of criticism against him. "It just adds to the experience he's had down there," Reagan said.

The House Intelligence Committee chairman, Rep. Edward Boland, D-Mass., made his prediction about the vote on a ban on covert military operations before Reagan's statement. He said there were sufficient votes in favor of the proposal to assure its approval.

Boland said Republican members asked for the delay "to take a closer look at the bill as a result of the president's speech last night." Democrats agreed to that request.

"This needs to be considered not swiftly but wisely," House Democratic Leader Jim Wright of Texas said after the meeting.

Canadian skies cleared for test of cruise missile

WASHINGTON (AP) — Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau endorsed President Reagan's strategic arms proposals on Thursday as proof the administration is "determined to seek ways to find lasting peace." That apparently cleared the way for the United States to test its cruise missile over Canadian skies.

Trudeau, who earlier complained that the proposed test flights of the cruise over Western Canada posed "a serious and deeply troubling issue" for his government, met for two hours with Reagan at the White House.

According to U.S. officials, the cruise test issue did not directly arise. But it was clear the two leaders discussed strategic policy, particularly Reagan's March 30 offer to cut back on the deployment of the cruise and Pershing II missiles in Europe later this year if the Soviet Union will trim its intermediate-range arsenal.

Trudeau had indicated the decision on whether to allow the American test flights would hinge on assurances from the U.S. government that it is serious about pursuing cutbacks in nuclear arsenals. On Wednesday, he pointedly informed Vice President George Bush that 80,000 demonstrators had marched against the prospect of the cruise flights in Canada.

But after the meeting with Reagan, Trudeau said he was convinced that "We are determined to seek ways to find lasting peace."

Jury indicts analyst of selling U.S. secrets

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal grand jury charged a former Defense Department intelligence analyst Thursday with selling, for $32,000, secret U.S. reports about the Middle East to Libya and ex-CIA Agent Edwin P. Wilson.

Waldo H. Dubberstein, 75, who retired as a Middle East specialist for the Defense Intelligence Agency in March, 1982, was named in a seven count indictment returned in U.S. District Court in suburban Alexandria, Va.

He was charged with bribery, conspiracy to defraud the government, disclosing secret and top-secret information and concealing his alleged Libyan contacts from Pentagon security officers.

Dubberstein is the first person charged in the Wilson affair for actions taken while he was employed by the U.S. government.

The grand jury said Dubberstein traveled secretly to Tripoli, Libya, under an assumed name in the spring of 1978, where he allegedly met four or five times with Libyan intelligence officers to discuss the deployment of military forces in the Middle East.

At the time, Dubberstein was responsible for DIA reports on Libya and Egypt, among other countries, and was cleared to see top-secret material and Sensitive Compartmented Information, which is primarily ultra-secret material gathered by U.S. electronic spying.

Also in this period, Wilson was hiding out from U.S. authorities in Libya. Last summer, Wilson was lured back by U.S. prosecutors and has twice been convicted in the federal courts of smuggling arms and explosives to Libya. He faces another trial here on charges of helping to set up an alleged Libyan terrorist training school, and yet an additional trial in New York on charges of plotting, after he was apprehended, to murder two U.S. prosecutors and several government witnesses.

MEChA was the only organization to receive reconsideration in the allocation process. Senate voted to increase its earlier allocation from $90 to $199.50 for state car travel for the group.

Eddie Rodriguez, sophomore in pre-law and theater, said the group needed more travel funds to attend a number of conferences where the group meets speakers, makes political contacts, and gets ideas and information to bring back to students.

Proposals to reconsider allocations to the Union and the Student Government Association were also heard, but were denied.

In other action, senate approved the selection of six new student members of the Union Governing Board. New two-year voting members are Clark Atkinson, freshman in mechanical engineering; Brian Dellett, sophomore in mechanical engineering; Dave Severson, freshman in pre-law; Barry Shotts, freshman in nuclear engineering; and Craig Wallace, sophomore in architectural engineering. Jerry Marr, senior in agricultural engineering was selected for a one-year non-voting position.

Senate also heard first readings of proposed revisions to the University Activities Board's constitution and by-laws. Senate is scheduled to vote on the revisions at its May 3 meeting, which is the last scheduled session for this school year.

Wall collapses as purchase option is signed

HARRISONVILLE, Mo. — Plans to restore the historic Hotel Harrisonville suffered a setback Wednesday when part of a fire-ravaged wall collapsed while an investment group was signing an option to buy the 100-year-old building.

The investment firm, Symon Group Ltd. of Kansas City, reaffirmed that it wanted the 30-day option on the building despite the collapse, but officials said they had no idea what the collapse would mean to restoration plans.

"We're not even sure if it's feasible. We're pulling a contractor in to look at it," said Scott Emmons, a spokesman for the investment group.

Part of the east wall of the old hotel on the north side of the city square collapsed during a severe thunderstorm that swept through the city Wednesday afternoon. There were no injuries.

The hotel was heavily damaged March 13 in a fire that broke out in a restaurant on the ground floor and destroyed the third floor and roof of the building.

Stanford accepts homosexual-sponsored grant

STANFORD, Calif. — A homosexual-sponsored scholarship has been accepted by Stanford University officials, who had rejected an earlier grant that would have required recipients to announce their sexual orientation.

The Stanford Gay and Lesbian Alliance is offering the $2,400 scholarship, asking that preference be given to a medical student who has "shown a commitment to serving the gay community."

Stanford officials had rejected a $500 gift from a Florida psychiatrist which would have required the recipient to be an avowed homosexual.

To qualify for the new scholarship, "the student wouldn't have to make any kind of declaration. It's an achievement-based scholarship, more like the other kinds of scholarships the university awards," said Ralph Samuelson, a member of the alliance steering committee.

Sleep in garbage container costs man his legs

MOBILE, Ala. — A man who apparently fell asleep in a garbage container was in serious condition after he was crushed in a truck that hauls away waste.

Truck driver J.C. Wells said he had picked up the garbage at a fast-food restaurant about 4 a.m. Thursday and noticed a leg dangling from the hydraulic compactor.

The man, identified as Michael Burrell, 53, of Panama City, Fla., suffered multiple injuries and his legs were severed. He was taken to the University of South Alabama Medical Center for treatment.

Want your name on a fountain? It will cost

LONG BEACH, Calif. — What price glory? Ask the Long Beach City Council.

In an effort to help local arts groups raise money, the council has approved a shopping list for wealthy arts patrons willing to contribute large sums in exchange for recognition. The list sets prices that will get part of the local convention and entertainment center named in your honor.

A chair costs a bargain-basement $1,000 — there are 3,000 up for grabs. A meeting room goes for $25,000, and $750,000 will get you a plaza or fountains.

The smaller Center Theater is also going for $750,000. For $2.25 million more you can buy the name of the larger Terrace Theater, but there's a catch — a legal technicality requires that "terrace" remain part of the name.

And if you're really out to blow a bundle, a cool $5 million will get the entire center named after you.

Any takers? "There are current prospects," said Bill Barnes, a member of the Arts Task Force, which helped put together the naming price list. But he declined to name any possible donors.

Police 'improperly dismiss' crime reports

CHICAGO — City police detectives, displaying "insensitivity to the victim's plight," improperly dismissed 40 percent of major crime reports drawn from a 10-month period of 1982, according to an internal audit.

The audit, released Wednesday by the Chicago Police Department's internal audit and control division, was highly critical of the detective division and recommended improved procedures for investigating and reporting crime.

Inspectors studied a sample of 2,386 crimes that had been dismissed as "unfounded" between Jan. 4, 1982 and Nov. 10, 1982. The inspectors found that 40.7 percent of the cases were improperly dismissed, 18.1 percent were properly dismissed and 41.2 percent could not be determined as proper or improper dismissals.

The police audit was ordered after a local television report last year said that detectives have underreported crime for years to deflate crime statistics.

Weather

Thunder-kaboomies are in the forecast — a 30 percent chance today and 40 percent chance Saturday, which probably means umbrellas will be handy. Today will be cloudy, with the high in the low- to mid-60s and low 45 to 50.

Opinions

America's future lies in education

"I are a colege studant at K-sTate."

Don't laugh — the satiric T-shirt slogan has implications not too far from the truth.

The quality of education has dropped America down into the dungeons of stupidity. Children are going to school without learning even the basics of how to spell or read, add or subtract. They graduate from high school ignorant of fundamental biology, America's political system and its great authors.

Who's to blame? Directly, the country's teachers; but indirectly, blame it on a society too blind to make education a top priority.

America needs it as a top priority. The country needs to be improving its quality. The country needs more competent teachers — then it will have smarter students.

It is said that money is the root of all evil, but it is also the root of a better education. It's time to spend money for teachers — to the point of making salaries comparable to what a person would make using his skills in the non-education world.

Where's the money to come from?

A report by the National Commission on Excellence in Education verified that America's schools are producing students who are unprepared for work and higher education.

The report was worded in a way to find an answer. It said America has committed "an act of unthinking, unilateral education disarmanent." It also said, "If an unfriendly foreign power had attempted to impose on America the mediocre educational performance that exists today, we might well have viewed it as an act of war."

Reagan needs to realize America can't outsmart the Communists if its citizens are too dumb to design his precious missiles.

Developing communication

As technology improves, the world is shrinking into what some are now calling the "Global Village." These changes are raising a host of communications issues. And many people, especially in the West, are unaware of what's going on.

These issues include the Third World's accusations of imbalanced coverage by international news agencies. Other conflicts center around freedom of the press and the press' role in covering development issues.

Third World, or developing countries, accuse the news media of ignoring them. The four major international news agencies — Associated Press, United Press International, Reuters in Britain and Agence-France Press — are the chief targets of such criticism. An article in the Oct. 21, 1978, issue of the New Republic accuses the Western media of treating the Third World "like the freak show at a country fair." These countries are usually represented only as sites of "famine, earthquakes and military coups."

WESTERN JOURNALISTS "roam the world applying their standards and criteria freely to societies to which they have no commitment," Anthony Smith, author of "The Geopolitics of Information," said. This "visiting fireman" approach to news coverage ignores the nation's accomplishments. Thus, the Third World is demanding changes, such as a New World Information Order (NWIO).

The NWIO has been an issue in the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) for about three years now. Its basic aim is to eliminate imbalances and inequalities in world communication.

One reason for neglected Third World news coverage is "audience apathy," according to William Steif, a Washington correspondent for Knight-Ridder newspapers. Media consumers in the United States are more interested in the familiar, not what's happening in a remote corner of the world.

YET THE MEDIA debate may affect us more than we realize. Currently, one out of 20 jobs in North America is connected with exports to developing countries, according to McPhail.

The issue of freedom of the press plays a role in the conflict. In the United States, a free press is considered an essential part of making democracy work. But many Third World countries believe the press is a tool to be used in national development.

As we face the future, great responsibility falls on journalists in developed countries to report accurately on the Third World. But often, limited newspaper space and air time push such news aside.

Yet, how can journalists give proper attention to foreign affairs when few of us have any first-hand knowledge? I once heard that the only staff member on one of the Houston newspapers who had lived abroad was a Hungarian photographer. The Third World's accusations against Western journalists are harsh, but I think they contain the truth.

So how do issues like these affect you, the media consumer? Here in Kansas, it's often difficult to keep up with the Legislature's antics in Topeka, much less what's going on in Upper Volta (in Africa). To me, it seems this media debate could very well result in less international news in the future. If news is restricted, we will be strangers to our neighbors in the "Global Village." Whether as journalists or media consumers, we cannot afford to ignore these issues.

Senate should reconsider MEChA's funding

Editor,

Student Senate decided to cut MEChA's budget based on misinformation. MEChA and other Hispanic organizations on campus have done a great deal of work in order to collect funds and provide the Hispanic community and the rest of the student population with creative and varied cultural programs which express the beauty of our cultures. Just recently, we enjoyed the Hispanic week, which is a product of energetic work. It seems as though senate made the decision to cut more of MEChA's budget than the finance committee had proposed without looking at MEChA's presentation.

MEChA has done a fine job as a minority organization and the senate action does not leave us very happy. We need Hispanic organizations on this campus and need to be able to continue to work at full capacity.

The Coqui, which is a newsletter of the Puerto Rican Student Organization, also suffered by the actions of senate. There is no question the Coqui is of extreme importance for the Hispanic student population.

Senate has to become more aware of the needs of the minority organizations on campus. They should reconsider the measures taken upon MEChA and PRSO — this time with the facts on one hand and a different attitude on the other.

Education reforms incite rebellion, protest by French college students

PARIS (AP) — Thousands of students demonstrated in cities throughout France on Thursday as spreading university unrest threatened the nation with its worst student rebellion since the devastating riots of May 1968.

It was the second consecutive day of major student demonstrations in France. A third round of street protests was scheduled for Friday.

There were no immediate reports of clashes between students and riot police in demonstrations Thursday in Paris, Marseille, Caen, Angers and Dijon.

On Wednesday, riot police fired tear gas grenades and battled with stone-throwing students in a crowd of about 1,000 demonstrators outside the National Assembly.

The unrest is over two separate but similar reform programs that increase the government's control over the classroom. One, which already has become law, affects the nation's 46 medical schools. The other, which is scheduled to be debated in the National Assembly next month, affects virtually every other sector in the university system.

The reforms have become a major test for President Francois Mitterrand, whose Socialist administration also is grappling with agricultural rioting, a doctors' strike, a weakening currency and discontent over an austere economic program that includes higher taxes and restricted foreign travel.

The largest of Thursday's demonstrations was in Paris and an estimated 10,000 striking medical students marched through the southern half of the capital and then staged a peaceful sit-in in front of Napoleon's Tomb at the Esplanade des Invalides.

Several thousand non-medical students marched to the National Assembly on Thursday and about 300 dental students demonstrated on the Champs-Elysees Avenue.

Under the current educational system in France, any student who passes the "baccalaureat" — a competitive examination taken at age 18 — can enter the university and be almost assured of graduating.

The government's university reform program would still allow university admittance to anyone passing the baccalaureat. But it would institute a selective process after the second year of studies that would prevent the lowest ranking students from continuing. The program does not stipulate what percentage of students could be flunked out.

Shultz defines Israeli issues in Beirut talks

JERUSALEM (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz returned to Israel Thursday night after five hours of talks in Beirut, where he said there were many "difficult issues" in his search for a breakthrough in troop withdrawal talks.

He meets Friday morning with Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

Shultz told reporters before leaving the presidential palace in Beirut that he had a "very full review of all the issues" with Lebanese President Amin Gemayel, Foreign Minister Elie Salem and others.

"I can see that there are quite a number of difficult issues (and) that at least I think we can now have some sense of definition of them," he said.

During the flight back to Jerusalem, Shultz told reporters he would start to deal with the issues in greater detail in his meeting with Begin. He said he expected to return to Beirut Saturday and meet Gemayel again.

Shultz said, as he has before, that the United States would consider contributing more troops to the multinational peacekeeping force as part of a withdrawal agreement.

Shultz inspected the U.S. Embassy building in Beirut, demolished by a terrorist bomb on April 18, killing at least 49 people including 17 Americans. Seven bodies still remain buried in the rubble.

In remarks to reporters after surveying the damage, and with the tangled wreckage of smashed automobiles a few yards away, Shultz said the blast was the work of "enemies of peace."

He pledged to "continue our efforts to find peace and stability ... in the Middle East. That is the president's determination and my determination, and we will do everything possible we can to achieve that result."

But Shultz told reporters an agreement on an Israeli troop withdrawal was "not going to happen overnight" and said he expected to be "in the area for a while."

Reporters were told by a senior Israeli official that the question of a future command role for former Lebanee Maj. Saad Haddad, Israel's ally in southern Lebanon, remains the key issue preventing a withdrawal agreement.

The official, who insisted on anonymity, said Israel would consider keeping a token number of soldiers, possibly as few as 40, in southern Lebanon for security purposes.

A senior Lebanese official, who also requested anonmyity, agreed that Haddad remained a key issue, but said joint patrols with Israel also remained a problem because they would infringe on Lebanese sovereignty.

He also said Israel was demanding a trade relationship which Lebanon could not enter into. He said any agreement signed with Israel must be acceptable to Lebanon's Arab neighbors.

He said Lebanon needs to trade with these neighbors for its survival, and also receives substantial financial aid from them.

Report reveals inspector fraud dating to 1976

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Some building inspectors were falsifying work records and padding expenses six years before a newspaper investigation found widespread abuse among inspectors, according to a 1976 city auditor's report.

Five of 20 inspectors checked at random in the report engaged in some abuses similar to those reported by The Kansas City Times and The Kansas City Star in January.

Twenty-four inspectors were fired or suspended, two officials were fired and the public works director was suspended as a result of the newspapers' investigation.

The Kansas City Times reported Thursday that the 1976 report surfaced last week during an appeal hearing for Glen A. Fry, one of the fired inspectors. Fry was among the five inspectors cited in the report.

The city auditor's report was turned over to the mayor and the city council.

Although many officials serving the city at the time said they did not remember the auditor's report, former Councilman Victor F. Swyden said: "We knew we had a problem. Everybody was aware of it. Everybody talked about it, and nobody did anything about it."

Mayor Richard L. Berkley, a councilman when the report came out, said he didn't remember it, but "it was certainly a warning light. In hindsight it gives some direction to things that happened later."

The mayor at the time of the report, Charles B. Wheeler, said there were problems with inspectors during his terms as mayor, but said he believed the problems were handled at the city manager's level and had been corrected.

Friendship enhances learning

Tutors help break language barrier

By CATHY KARLIN
Staff Writer

How do you explain to a foreigner the meaning of "okey-dokey"? A "finger in every pie"? Or, "Are you pulling my leg?"

Understanding American slang is just one of the many topics discussed by Sue Peugh, sophomore in elementary education, and Kuey-Chien Lin, native of Korea, as participants in the Conversational English Program.

Peugh and Lin meet at least once a week working for a better understanding of the English language and sharing knowledge about each other's cultures.

"Slang is the hardest to learn. Sometimes I watch the television and people think it's really funny, but I can't understand why. You don't know all the background," Lin said.

"I THINK IF YOU want to learn a second language, you have to have a lot of practice, talk a lot with a person. When you speak a lot with a person then it just comes naturally," she said.

Unlike foreign students who attend K-State — who must pass an English comprehension test before coming to America — most of their spouses face considerable language barriers, according to Donna Davis, assistant foreign student adviser and coordinator of the program.

"Jardine Terrace, which is where most of them live, is not close to anything and there's no transportation, so they're very isolated and lonely. I know we have spouses who probably never see much more than Jardine Terrace all the time they're here.

"IT'S A REAL PROBLEM that goes far beyond English, but if you can break down the English barrier, at least that helps make it a little easier for them to interact within the community," Davis said.

At the beginning of each semester, Davis meets with volunteer tutors to explain the program and give them ideas.

> 'We stress friendship. If that happens, conversation will follow.'
> – Davis

Tutors, who can be students or community members, are assigned an international person of the same sex who wants to participate in the program. Tutors and persons who receive tutoring are required to meet a minimum of one and a half hours per week.

For the foreign students, the program is more than a means of learning English.

"It's a way to get some social interaction. I don't stress grammar and written English. We do mainly listening and speaking. It's a sharing situation. I tell the tutors, don't expect the international student to do all the sharing," Davis said.

ELIZABETH KLUGH, sophomore in elementary education, said that although she decided to be a tutor to fulfill the requirements of a class, she would like to volunteer again on her own next fall if she has the time. This semester she tutors Hui Mei, a woman from Taiwan.

"You have to be very responsible if you tutor. They (foreign students) are counting on you to help them. I didn't know what to expect — no one tells you what you can do. You have to plan it. What you put into it is what you get out.

"Sometimes I feel I'm not ready (for the weekly sessions), but (Mei) contributes enough so I don't have to be 100 percent ready," Klugh said.

Klugh said she tries to incorporate a little bit of fun with each lesson.

"A lot of times I'll teach her a new card game at the end (Of the lesson) that she can play by herself when her husband is working. I write flash cards on words she needs help on — she needs help on l and m. I've taken a tape recorder and a little kid's alphabet book and gone through the book saying the words so she can have it and hear it when I'm not around," Klugh said.

MEI, WHO HAS BEEN in America nearly four years, attends a conversation class taught by Davis in addition to her work with Klugh.

"Sometimes I write a story and they correct it. In Donna's class, we go to the Manhattan or K-State libraries, or City Hall sometimes has some special program. In the springtime, we'll go look for flowers. Sometimes we have a cooking class, and make cookies or cake or pie," Mei said.

She also learns from watching TV programs such as "Donahue," the news and "Little House on the Prairie," in addition to listening to the radio and reading newspapers.

"Conversation with American friends, I like the best. The tutor is like a best friend," Mei said.

To publicize the program and recruit volunteers, Davis said she speaks at educational psychology classes, the Graduate Student Club, housemother meetings and puts notices on cable TV.

THIS SPRING, ONLY 35 people volunteered to be tutors, compared to most years when about 100 people volunteered, Davis said. As a rule, the program runs through the academic year.

Participants may decide to continue the sessions during the summer, but tutoring assignments are generally not made in the summer, she said.

Although most of the tutors are American, there are some tutors who are international students. Ethiopian Seble Afework, graduate student in food science, tutors Mary Jordan of Bolivia in English. In return, Jordan helps Afework learn Spanish.

"I tutor Spanish to her three days a week and she teaches me English three days a week. Sometimes we take a lunch together and talk about the meal. It depends on what you try to learn and tell them to teach you," Jordan said.

"Most of the time we just talk and discuss our countries, and the differences you have over here. Just during conversation there are some difficult things to explain, like the way we use sentence structure," Afework said.

Davis said the program has encountered few problems since its beginning in 1979.

"We stress friendship. If that happens, conversation will follow. We're in a pretty isolated spot here in Kansas, so we tell the Americans to take advantage and learn as much as they can," Davis said.

Sparks' latest album features refined pop music

By JIM MELIZA
Collegian Reviewer

"You have to be weird to like Sparks!"

That was the cry surrounding the Southern California band 10 years ago. The indictment was leveled by both detractors and fans because of the undeniably unique music and image Sparks offered.

Try to envision a chorus of mice singing

Review

Handel's "Messiah," or some eunuch chanting the Tibetan "Book of the Dead" after a rousing kiss with a nitrous oxide mask, and you can get a general idea of why these people were raving.

Ten years later, the band still struggles along by producing its eclectic style of music. The past decade has given the group's kingpins, Ron and Russell Mael, a chance to refine their sounds. This down-to-earth approach is best summed up by their newest release, "Sparks in Outer Space."

Ron Mael no longer tortures his brother's vocal chords by writing high-register melodies. Instead of having Russell lock himself in a helium-filled room, the siblings have utilized the products of the electronic age to fill the void. The effect is much more palatable.

That doesn't mean America is ready to open its arms in acceptance. However, it might suggest the brothers Mael won't have to stand at the perimeter of rock much longer.

Despite the refining, Sparks has decided to retain the feature that has given them an off-beat charm. Their lyrics exude the silliness their melody structures suggest. That giddiness seems shallow at first, but upon closer inspection it reveals sort of a stoned Skinner sensibility.

If rock musicians are insecure individuals, then Sparks toys with that impression. Such topics as image are projected into the situation of "I Wished I Looked a Little Better." The misfit of a protagonist has the unfortunate luck of looking worse than the "Elephant Man." He laments, "I went to high school and majored in looking real bad/I got an ugly mom and a real ugly dad."

"All You Ever Think About Is Sex" imagines the dream date of a nymphomaniac and a sartyr. Their encounters take them from a Dodgers-Mets game to the underside of a mastadon at the museum. No matter where they "state their positions," they always seem to get caught. This culminates in the "I'm still not recovered from Saturday night's faux pas/When your father came home, saw us and dropped dead."

In the Maels' case, their residence in the outer limits has been relatively influential. By combining their unusual outlook on life with traditional forms of pop, and adding dabs of technological know-how here and there, they predated the main thrusts of new wave and techno-pop.

It is time to reassess their contributions, and "Sparks in Outer Space" offers a glimpse at those contributions. They are intelligent without relying on heavy-handed pretensions; silly without being stupid; but most of all, just plain and simple fun.

Few students tape demos

Studios produce songs, offer advice

Those wanting to try the life of a rock'n'roll star needn't hop out to Hollywood for that first demo, because — though few in number — there are recording studios in the area.

Closest studios to Manhattan are the Manhattan-based Making Tracks Production, Topeka-based Exceptions Studios and Lawrence-based Audio House. However, student business isn't their mainstay.

Randy Wills, manager and owner of Exceptions Studio, said student business amounts to about 15 percent of its business.

Of that 15 percent, it's mostly students making audition tapes, recording with bands and recording tapes for greek competitions, Wills said.

"We mostly do professional bands," he said. Only about five percent of the company's recording is done on location.

"Our most typical customer would be a school group," Liddel said. The company has made recordings for university groups and secondary and elementary school groups, but professionals record at the studio, he said.

Liddel said Audio House recorded K-State's Concert Choir when it performed at the 1981 Kansas Music Educators All-State Convention.

Few K-State students use the Making Tracks Production's studio in proportion to the number of others who record there, said Arnie Christensen, co-owner of Making Tracks Production, but he added many students ask the production company for technical advice about equipment.

"We have kind of developed a reputation as the audio doctors," Christensen said. But it is usually professional musicians who contact the company about recording music, he said.

CHRISTENSEN, DAN KIRKPATRICK and Mitch Rosenow formed the studio in December after recording "Independence Bound," a song about the University's football team. The company records two or three days a week.

"We don't just do bands. We do everything from commercial spots to live recording, including someone who wants to come in and play the acoustic guitar and hear himself on tape," he said.

Usually $25 to $35 is the charge for using Making Tracks' studio for an hour, Kirkpatrick said. For a longer period of time rates are changed. The fee covers the charge for renting the building and equipment and producing the tape. Cost for technical advice varies.

Currently, the cost for an hour of studio time at Exceptions Studios is $35, Wills said. The charge includes renting the building and equipment and having personnel to help with the recording.

PRICE FOR AN hour of studio time at Audio House varies between $20 and $80, Liddel said, depending upon the time of day, number of channels used and whether the company has to overdub. The cost includes renting the building and equipment and having personnel do the taping. However, rarely do people spend more than $30 an hour in the studio, he said.

Rosenow said he believes a local recording studio provides a needed function for the community, especially for those trying to break into the music business.

"In a town the size of Manhattan, there are few places that entertainment people can go where they can get the tools, knowledge and direction they need to cultivate their music. That is what we are — the bridge between the amateur and the professional," Rosenow said.

"It used to be you could record on a handheld cassette, but now they (record companies) won't even listen to it," he said.

CHRISTENSEN EXPLAINED, "That way (if companies receive a good demo tape) they don't have to pay to make you sound good."

Florence Schwab, instructor in music, recorded a tape of several harp solos at Making Tracks Production.

Schwab made the recording so the tape could be used for a radio advertisment for a restaurant, she said.

Schwab added, "I also wanted to have a tape made to send to my children and I wanted to have a tape in case I would need to give a demonstration in order to get a job.

"It (the recording studio) was convenient to get to and for the time I was willing to spend on the tape it was good. Now, if I were to go back I'd probably spend more time and not expect to record so many pieces."

RECENTLY, THE COMPANY was hired by a reggae band called Roots to record an extended-play album. The band, from Fort Collins, Colo., hasn't signed to a major label yet but probably will be once it returns from a tour of Europe, Christensen said.

During the fall, the trio hopes to use the studio to provide an educational function. They plan to conduct a workshop to teach persons interested in how to record a song, Rosenow said. Only two or three persons could be taught in one workshop and the number of workshops offered depends on how many people are interested.

"Getting a job (recording a band) is based on reputation and that's what it is all about — reputation," Rosenow said.

Professors air Soviet history, myths during forum on nuclear arms race

By JULIE STROUTS
Collegian Reporter

Americans have some myths about arms control and reduction of nuclear weapons, a professor of political science said Thursday on the topic "What About the Russians?"

T. Alden Williams, professor of political science, who cited the myths, and Jacob Kipp, associate professor of history, were speakers in Union 208. Their talks marked the last day of a two-day series as part of "Firebreaks," a war/peace game sponsored by the Other Manhattan Project.

Arms control and nuclear weapons reduction were the professors' topics.

Williams discussed what the United States has done in terms of arms control and nuclear weapon reducton, as well as some myths Americans have about the strength in having nuclear weapons.

Williams gave a history of treaties and talks, such as SALT, that have led to arms control in both the U.S. and Soviet Union and in placing ceilings on the number of nuclear weapons built in both countries.

"There is no defense against offensive missiles. Arms control and security rests not on strength but in what might be a crucial weakness, a vulnerability in the U.S.," Williams said.

One of the myths Americans believe, he said, is that if other areas of the Soviet Union become stable, such as its political or socio-econmic system, arms control will become of vital interest to the Soviets and they will be more interested in negotiations with the U.S.

Williams said arms control cannot be isolated from other areas of the Soviet Union as a vital area of interest.

"A cap can't be put on brain power in the Soviet Union," he said.

"You can't put a lid on the laboratories — it's a futile hope. You can't stop human thought from devising nuclear weapons, although you can divert it into other areas," he said.

Another myth Williams pointed out is that arms control must always proceed on the basis of numbers.

"There has been a trend toward basing a stable relationship that rests on more of a balance. We are thinking in terms of what can we do rather than what can we do it with," he said.

Williams also said many Americans think only intellectuals are concerned about the nuclear arms race and arms control, but "by the large number of people gathered here tonight I think it's easy to see that isn't true."

He said the intellectuals don't have any kind of perception about arms control that can't be seen by others or not made available to others.

Jacob Kipp spoke of the Russians and their development of nuclear power in comparison to its development in the U.S.

Kipp stressed that the Russians were not interested in gaining any kind of superiority over the U.S. at the beginning of the nuclear age, but were concerned in protecting themselves in case of a nuclear attack.

The Russians did not become interested in nuclear power until after Joseph Stalin's death, he said.

"After his death, they began thinking about what the implications of these new weapons were. It brought about an entire revolution in thought."

Russia became concerned with the threat of nuclear war and worked "to strengthen the forces of peace and to strengthen their own nuclear forces should that peace fail," Kipp said.

Currently, Kipp said, the position of the Soviet Union has been that of trying to prevent a nuclear war and if there is even danger of a nuclear war, to consult with the U.S. before any such measure was taken to begin war.

The U.S. has also had to do some rethinking about nuclear war and its own vulnerabilities in case of a war, Kipp said.

Although the Soviet Union is for preventing any nuclear war, it is continuing to prepare in the event of nuclear war, he said.

PIK could create 'severe' impact on small farm-related businesses

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Small Business Administration official predicted Thursday that farm-related companies will lose up to $7 billion this year because of the federal payment-in-kind crop reduction program.

"A successful federal program such as PIK may confer major benefits on one group in our economy, while inadvertently having an adverse effect on another group," said Frank Swain, counsel for the Small Business Administration.

"With the possibility of diverting as much as 50 percent of the crop base in selected commodities from cultivation in a given county, the impact on several small business industries may be quite severe."

He told a House Small Business subcommittee that with an anticipated acreage reduction of 36 percent, or 82 million acres, farmers will spend from $6 billion to $7 billion less than if they were planting normal crops.

The Agriculture Department has estimated that fertilizer sales will drop by 12 percent to 14 percent, farm machinery will be off by 2 to 3 percent, pesticide use will drop 12 to 15 percent and seed sales will decline 12 to 15 percent.

But Harvey Strothmann, a vice president of the Columbia, Mo.-based cooperative MFA Incorporated, said the decline due to PIK comes on top of two years of depressed sales due to low farms prices, and the net effect on the industry will be a sales drop of as much as one-third.

Lenient sentence creates tension among Hispanics

NEW BRAUNFELS, Texas (AP) — This quiet town has been torn by racial tension since a soldier who got "stumbling drunk" received probation for running over and killing a Mexican-American family of four.

Demonstrators carry picket signs, three jail inmates have launched a hunger strike and this week a largely Hispanic group led a march — all to protest what they consider excessively lenient treatment by authorities.

Comal County District Attorney William Schroeder, prosecuted Pfc. William Dale Savage only for the death of the father. The Hispanic community in this town, which was settled by German immigrants, demands that he be tried for the other three deaths.

"If this had been a Mexican-American man running over a German family of four, there's no doubt they would have tried all four cases," Hispanic leader Mack Martinez said.

Savage, 23, assigned to the Army's Fort Sam Houston in San Antonio, had downed several beers the night of Oct. 30 at New Braunfels' Wurstfest, an annual celebration of its German heritage.

Ruben Sauceda, his pregnant wife, Hortencia, and their two young children were crossing a highway just outside town when Savage's yellow Volkswagen plowed into them.

Bexar County Medical Examiner Vincent DiMiao testified that Savage was "stumbling drunk" and registered almost double the legal limit of intoxication.

But Schroeder has refused to prosecute Savage further and now, because of the protests, he enters the courthouse by the back door.

"There's such a thing in this country as cruel and unusual punishment," Schroeder said. "What's the point of putting that man through four trials? A jury has spoken. A man has been convicted of involuntary manslaughter. If justice is not that jury's verdict, then what is justice?"

The jury, which included one Hispanic, recommended a probated sentence, and the judge accepted that recommendation on April 15.

Hispanic leaders bitterly contend there is no justice in New Braunfels for Mexican-Americans, who make up about 30 percent of this picturesque Hill Country town's population of 22,400.

"There's a long tradition of racism against Mexican-Americans in New Braunfels," said Martinez, an Austin lawyer representing a group called the Committee for Justice for All.

Several years ago, U.S. Rep. Henry Gonzalez of nearby San Antonio, a Hispanic, was denied entrance to a city park.

Justice for All has asked State District Judge Robert Pfeuffer, who presided over Savage's trial, to call in a special prosecutor from the Texas attorney general's office, insisting that Savage be held accountable for all four deaths.

Pickets tote signs at the courthouse every day, and most placards include references to a fifth death — Sauceda's unborn child.

Savage, who had no previous record, also was fined $5,000. He since has returned to the Army base and has had no comment on the case.

Drug 'matriarchs' gain power smuggling cocaine

MIAMI (AP) — U.S. drug agents speak soberly of Veronica Rivera de Vargas, Martha Libia Cardona de Gaviria, and Marta Ospina — three Colombian crime queens, matriarchs of rival Latin American gangs they say have smuggled billions of dollars of narcotics into the United States.

"They are the black widows. And like the spiders, the female of the species can be especially deadly," says one Drug Enforcement Administration intelligence agent sent to Columbia to survey illegal drug rings.

Rivera de Vargas, 39, toured the streets of Bogota in her BMW, sandwiched between two Mercedes packed with bodyguards. She owned an ice cream parlor and crystal shop in a fashionable capital mall and garlanded her wrists with emeralds and gold.

At the same time, she was masterminding the importation of cocaine, worth as much as $3 billion, past Customs inspectors at airports in the United States, federal agents say, and running drug factories on a network of fincas, or farms, where cocaine paste from Peru was transformed into exportable white gold.

"She was true royalty," said the DEA intelligence agent, who spoke only on condition her name not be used. "Not that she's high class. She survives because she has jungle agility. And because she is ruthless to her enemies."

THE DEA SUSPECTS Rivera de Vargas' eight brothers and sisters of complicity in narcotics smuggling, along with 88 other members of her extended crime family. She is so coldblooded, the Bolivian daily El Tiempo said, she gave a death squad orders to liquidate the leader of a rival cocaine clan, then to kill his parents-in-law.

Rivera de Vargas now resides in a Bogota jail. She was arrested Feb. 11 on charges of cocaine smuggling at her finca 200 miles south of Bogota with 14 associates, including two members of the Colombian national police, said DEA spokesman Brent Eaton.

Agents seized six weapons, including two machine guns, and 290 pounds of cocaine valued at $6.6 million. It was destined for Miami. Rivera de Vargas waved a Florida driver's license, and told police they had nabbed the wrong woman — to no avail.

"SHE SEEMED TO HAVE a lot of influence in the past," said Eaton. "But she became so big and violent, I think the Colombian government could no longer tolerate her."

Earlier this year, U.S. agents thought they had snared Martha Libia Cardona de Gaviria, 36, the nation's No. 1 female drug fugitive and suspected 100-kilo-a-month cocaine merchant.

Tipped by an informant, they surrounded an expensive Miami restaurant and broke in on a baby shower to haul away one of the participants.

Police were elated over the arrest of the woman they called the "cocaine matriarch." But a day later in federal court, fingerprints proved the women jailed was not Cardona, but Lilia Reyes, another alien wanted on cocaine conspiracy charges.

Cardona had been arrested on drug and weapons charges in Miami in in 1980, then skipped town and forfeited $1 million bond.

SHE WAS LAST SEEN by U.S. informants in a Mexico City restaurant. She now lives openly in Colombia despite being wanted on drug and weapons charges there, federal agents say, and fears kidnapping or rivals' assassination plots more than police.

Already, two of her sisters have been shot to death, and a longtime lover, Luis Carlos Gaviria, was gunned down in a New York hotel in 1977 during what police say was a drug deal that went sour.

"Her operation's even bigger now. We believe she's splitting her loads between Miami and Los Angeles," said Metro-Dade Organized Crime Sgt. William Rider. "She's survived because she's stuck with mostly family members. Her brothers and sisters are her lieutenants."

K-State Singers:

Ambassadors of musical talent

Kim Albright, sophomore in psychology, sings with Jeff Ronen, junior in finance, during one of the K-State Singers' numbers in their performance last night in McCain Auditorium.

By the standards of today's popular performers, the group which performed Thursday night in McCain Auditorium should not have been successful.

There was no beer, nobody tore up guitars or swung chains, none of the males wore safety pins in their ears and none of the females wore blue lipstick.

The songs sung all had understandable lyrics. Some of the numbers were more familiar to the parents of the students in the audience, songs the old folks sang, danced and fell in love to years and years ago.

Maybe it was magic; it surely was entertainment.

The group of non-music majors is composed of 12 vocalists, a percussionist, bass guitarist, rhythm guitarist, pianist and sound technician who sing, dance and perform as part of a long tradition of quality entertainment. Known as K-State's "Singing Ambassadors," the group has been entertaining audiences throughout the world since 1954.

According to Gerald Polich, director of K-State Singers for the past 17 years, the group has been practicing from two to eight hours a day since August and has given more than 50 performances throughout the Midwest. On May 16, the Singers are scheduled to leave for a 13-day tour through the Southwest. They will perform at places such as Sea World in San Diego, Calif., on deck of the recently restored battleship U.S.S. New Jersey, and at Long Beach Naval Base.

Songs performed by the group vary from the 1940s tune "All of Me" to Broadway melodies from the musical "A Chorus Line." Special favorites of Thursday's audience were "Dig a Little Deeper in the Well," a song made popular by the Oak Ridge Boys; and a fast-paced, humorous medley entitled "Commercials: Messages from Our Sponsors."

Their acappella version of Manhattan Transfer's "A Nightingale Sang in Berkeley Square" was a showcase for a velvety blending of soprano and bass, alto and tenor into a richly romantic melody. The rendition of "Dancing With George M. Cohan" got much of its vibrancy from the choreography, which is created for the group by Sharron Washington, founder of the Washington School of Dance in Manhattan.

Practicing and performing together has formed strong ties of friendship between members, according to singer Cindy Shaft, senior in elementary education. This is her third year in the group.

"It's fun all practicing together, but what really makes it all worthwhile is starting to go out on the shows. Every show something new happens, some little thing that people add so it gets different all the time and never gets monotonous," Shaft said.

Currie Myers, sophomore in radio and television, said being a part of the group has had a positive effect on his life.

"There's really nothing in my major that is like this as far as onstage performances. The guys and the girls in this group, they're my best friends. You have to be, if you're going to live together for a whole year.

"In every aspect of my life, I think Singers has made a change. I used to speak in front of people okay, but I used to be scared. Now I can just talk in front of anybody. And in meeting people — we do a lot of alumni shows and after our shows we usually mingle with the alumni and talk with them," Myers said.

Gerald Polich, director of the K-State Singers, directs the group for Manhattan Transfer's "A Nightingale Sang in Berkeley Square."

At least two former K-State Singers who were in the audience last night had a hard time sitting still during the performance.

"It's hard to just sit here. I keep finding myself tapping my foot," said Cindy Bailey Frasier of Limon, Colo. Frasier was in Singers from 1976 until she graduated in 1979.

Her best memories are of traveling and developing close friendships within the group.

"It really builds a bond that doesn't go away. And you get to meet a lot of people; it kind of broadens your outlook. It helps you meet people and be more outgoing.

"I really admire the director. He's a great performer himself and a super director. He made you want to do a good job, to do your best for him," Frasier said of Polich.

Another Singer alumnus, Damon Roberts, who was in the group from 1977 to 1979, said he likes to come to Singers' performances "because they're so good. I like the vibrancy that they give."

"It makes me long to sing and to be back because there's so much excitement and energy," Roberts said.

Chinese books depict American life as negative

PEKING (AP) — For youth dazzled by the West, the Chinese government has its version of the American dream:

Jane became a shopping bag lady rummaging pitifully in the garbage cans of New York City after her only son — a heroin addict — robbed her to support his habit.

Sally, a 40-year-old waitress, broke her leg because she was forced to roller skate, serve soup and fend off drunks at the Red Rose Cafe. Then she was fired.

This version of American life is being told because officials are worried that young people see the West as a paradise and socialist China as irredeemably backward.

Authorities are alarmed at the crisis of confidence among Chinese youth, afraid that the country's new open door policy and economic reforms have raised expectations too high and whetted youthful appetites for the good life.

China has stepped up its campaign against bourgeois liberalism and raised the banner of socialist ethics with new muckraking paperbacks about the United States.

"Some people believe that the Western world is man's paradise. Is capitalist society worth longing for?" asks "Tales from the West." And the new paperback answers, "Absolutely not. Facts have proved that real life is not so nice there."

The picture of America is one of horror: society is moribund, corrupt and cruel. Young people are committing suicide, taking drugs and indulging in sex. Murder, rape and arson abound. Divorce is epidemic. A man wills his estate to pregnant cats and robots replace human beings.

The West may be materially well off and technologically superior, it said, but it is spiritually bankrupt, a place of waste and poverty.

"Tales of the West" is an illustrated paperback published by the Shanghai Children's Publishing House. It is recommended for young pioneers — the Communist Party members of tomorrow. About 100,000 copies of the 142-page book have been printed.

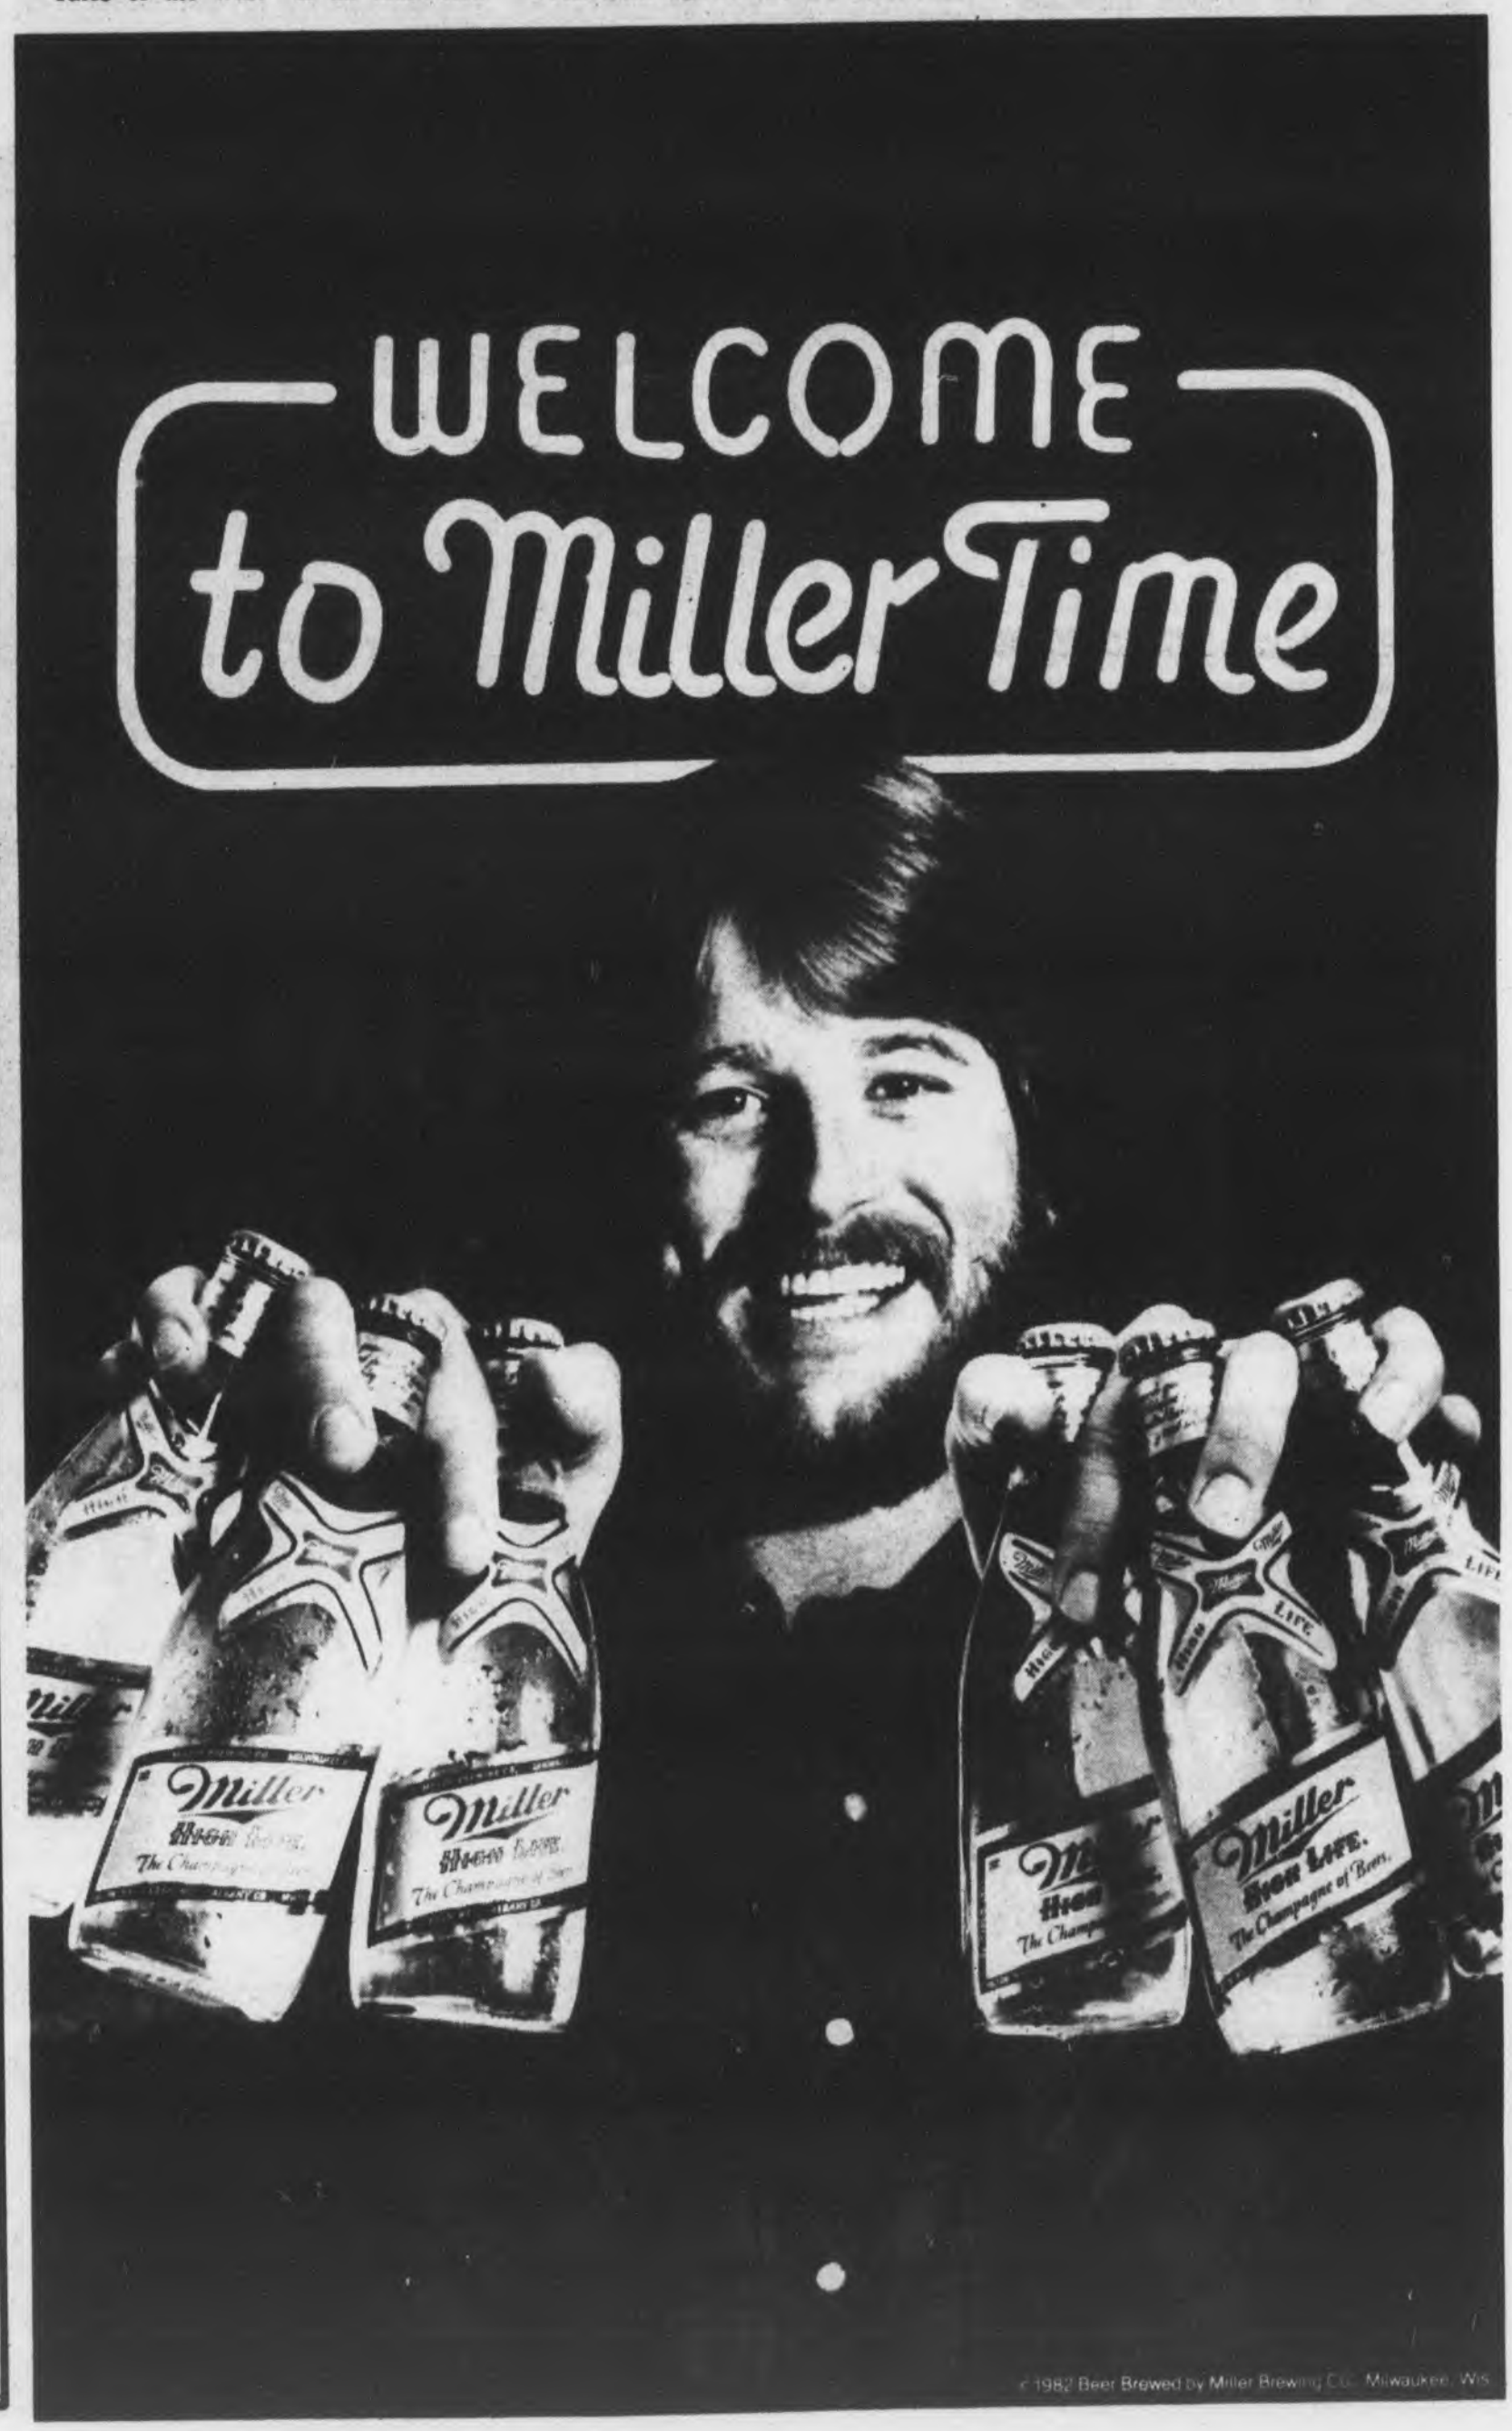
A spokesman for the publishing house refused comment when asked by telephone if the book was negative and onesided. He said it was against policy to answer telephone inquiries from foreigners.

In one vignette, a construction worker named Foster falls into the foundation of a bridge just before concrete is to be poured. "The boss refused to save his life, fearing it would affect the quality of the work," it said, "and he pressed the button to let the cement fall and bury Foster alive."

In case Chinese young people think it's great to have a car — private cars are scarce in China — they can read about the unfortunate Mr. Tom.

Fresh from high school, he bought a used car for $1,500 to commute to work. It was a lemon, cost him $90 a month in road tolls and finally gave out. He couldn't afford to fix it, and no one would buy it, so he tried to abandon it. But the police found it and fined him for breaking the law.

Then he bought a new car on time and faced monthly payments, soaring gas prices, insurance, parking and toll fees. "Mr. Tom was burdened by his gorgeous new car, it was suffocating him."



Forty-year-old Sally of the Red Rose Cafe was forced to wear roller skates because her boss wanted to speed up service and efficiency. She spun out of control when a drunk made a pass at her.

"The purpose of the Red Rose restaurant was to reap more profits in disregard of workers' sufferings," the book intones. "This is the essence of high efficiency of capitalist society."

Racquetball club to open season against Topeka

The recently formed K-State Racquetball Club will host the Topeka YMCA's Hinder Club for its first racquetball match Saturday.

Glen Caby, senior in electrical engineering; Bob Merrill, senior in electrical engineering; Connie Mall, senior in mechanical engineering; Josie Taylor, freshman in journalism and mass communications; and Michelle Hightower, graduate in business administration, traveled to tournaments last year and decided K-State needed a racquetball club.

"We all got together one night and started organizing a club by filling out the paperwork required," Caby said.

In order to meet K-State's requirements for forming a club, the group had to find a faculty adviser. Steve Martini, assistant director of recreational services, agreed to be the club's adviser, and told the students what they had to do to become a club, which they fulfilled at the end of March.

Caby said 25 or 30 people showed up at the first meeting of the club.

"What's unique about our club is that anyone who wants to play can play — it doesn't matter how good they are," Caby said.

The club is open to anyone — students and non-students — of any age. "It's written in our constitution that way. The only catch would be with a school tournament — only student members could play," Caby said.

The club set their semester goal at having one match. Thirty members of the 50-member club are scheduled to participate in the Saturday match, with each person playing one match.

K-State will have five playing in the men's open, five in the men's B class, five in the men's C class, eight in the women's A/B class and seven in the women's C class, Caby said.

Caby said the club's goals for next year are: to set up a series of home and away matches with organizations like the Topeka and Salina YMCA's who already have established clubs, to challenge the Big Eight schools and to hold a Wildcat Open for anyone desiring to play.

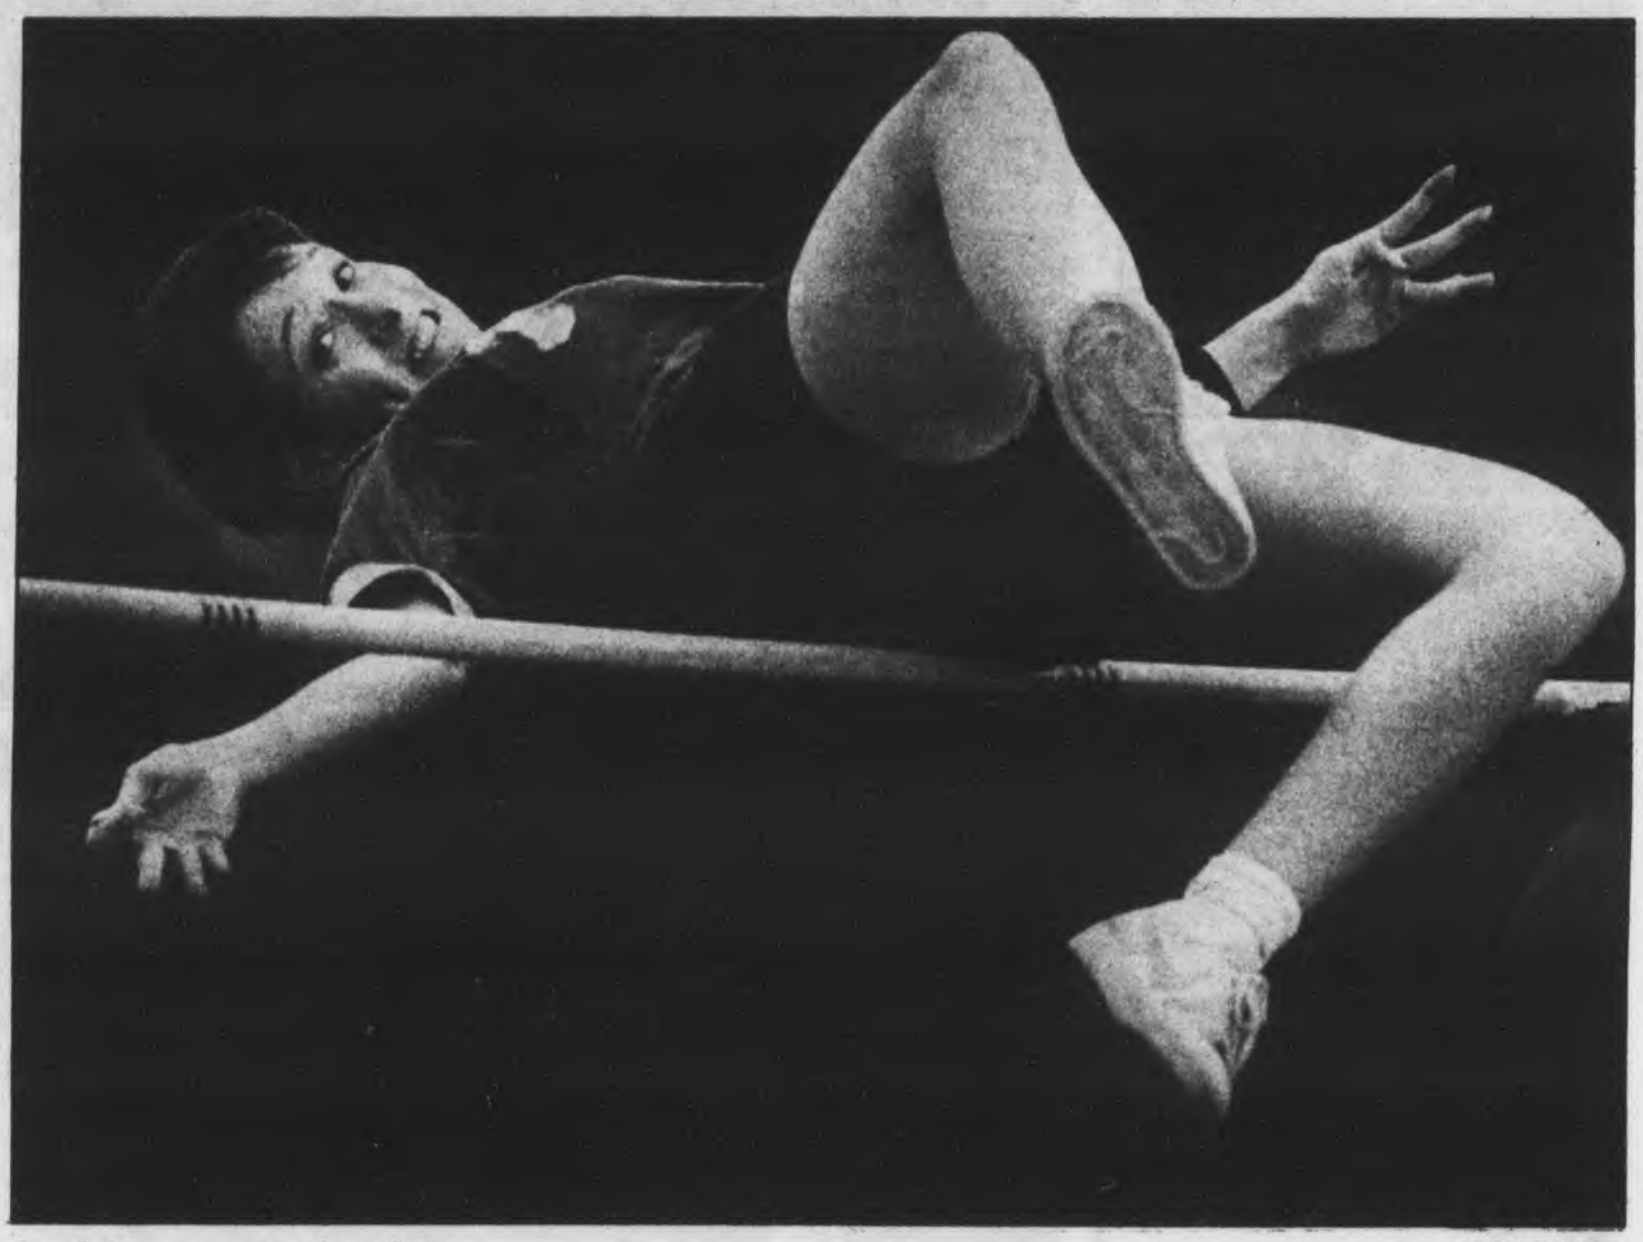
"We also plan to have club practices next year with courts set aside for us. The practices will be teaching-oriented, with free instruction," Caby said.

The match Saturday will be played at the Washburn Recreational Complex racquetball courts from noon to 6 p.m. Racquetball club members will serve as referees.

Scheduling conflicts at Drake Relays cause Wildcats to split competition

After a fine performance by both the men's and women's track squads last weekend at the Kansas Relays in Lawrence, the Wildcat teams will attempt repeat performances this weekend in two different meets.

Half the track team is scheduled to participate today and Saturday in the Drake Relays at Des Moines, Iowa, while the other half travels to Norman, Okla., today for the Oklahoma Invitational.



Steve Miller, head track coach, said the reason some athletes are going to Oklahoma is because "not all the K-State track members were accepted for the Drake Relays and the schedule didn't enhance the athletes' best possible performances."

As the schedule stands, some athletes will perform in events which are run closely together. Miller cited an example of Mike Bradley having to run the 400-meter run and then turning around to anchor the mile-relay team. Miller said he believed this schedule wasn't in the best interest of the athletes.

"We feel we need to go somewhere and run a track meet, not a relay meet," Miller said of the "alternative" meet in Oklahoma. Teams from 10 schools will compete in this non-scoring meet, with K-State represented in a variety of events.

The Drake Relays, part of the "Triple Crown" relay circuit that has become important to many athletes, will have several hundred schools participating. The other two meets in the circuit are the Texas Relays and the Kansas Relays.

Main goals of the track team this weekend again include looking for good weather, having national qualifiers and getting prepared for the Big Eight meet May 13-14 at Stillwater, Okla.

Colbert fills many roles for baseball team

By KEVIN DALE
Collegian Reporter

Play to win.

Whether Cary Colbert is fielding ground balls at first base, catching behind the plate or digging in the batter's box, he hates to lose. Colbert is the power of the K-State baseball team. He is a competitor.

Colbert is the top returning hitter for the Wildcats this season. Last year he led the team with a .363 average and was the leading home run hitter with 11. This year he is following right in suit. A senior in marketing, Colbert is batting .508 and leads the team in home runs and runs scored.

"I always want to improve," Colbert said. "I want to do whatever it takes to help the team win."

Colbert attributes his hitting to experience.

"I am not really doing anything differently. I just have seen it all before," he said. "I'm a senior and I have been through it."

Wildcat head coach Dave Baker calls Colbert a tremendous competitor.

"He has given his life to baseball and he is a good player," Baker said. "He works harder than most and is always trying to improve. Great baseball players are never satisfied with their play and Cary falls into that category."

Even with a batting average of above .500, Colbert believes he is in a slump.

"I started off well down south during our spring break trip, but I am hitting in a slump right now. I hope to break out of it very soon," he said.

Baker said he believes that not being able to play because of rain has hampered the team, and Colbert is no exception.

"We need to play to keep our skills sharp," Baker said. "I think Cary could have broken some school records if we could have played all our games."

Colbert, who switches from first base to catcher, is as adept in the field as he is at the plate. He has committed only one error all season and holds a fielding percentage of .993.

"I like to play both (first and catcher). It doesn't get so monotonous," he said. "It's good for me to switch. I like to play first base one game and then maybe come back and catch in the second. This way I don't get all mad and down at one position."

Baker said Colbert does not get down on himself just as a result of poor play.

"Sometimes he does get down, but I just tell him to give it his best shot and it's going to happen. I have also seen him get disappointed when he was playing well, but that's just because he thinks he can always do better."

As one of the team's tri-captains, Colbert is also a teacher.

"So much goes on out on the field that fans don't realize. You have to be around the game to learn the science and strategy. I have learned so much and I just want to be there to help someone else if I can," he said.

The strategy that a lot of the opposing teams have used is to pitch around Colbert. He leads the team in walks with 17.

"Some pitchers want to challenge me. They want to see if I can hit like my average, but I have gotten a lot of walks," he said.

Baker said he believes pitchers think a lot about Colbert's average.

"Every time he comes to the plate, the opposing pitcher wants to be careful. But if there is no one on base and the guy behind him in the lineup is not hitting well, then why pitch to him? I would pitch around him, too," Baker said.

"We try to keep him in a spot in the batting order where pitchers don't have the opportunity to pitch around him. The guy behind him has to be a good hitter and Scott Pick has done a good job. Scott hit behind Cary last year and he is again this year."

"Cary is a money player," Baker said. "He has come through more times in the clutch than anyone else in the last two years. Many times when he has been at the plate in the bottom of the seventh with two outs and men on base, he has just stepped up and hit the ball out of the park and won the game."

Colbert always plays to win.

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — The K-State men's tennis team began the Big Eight Tournament in the same way the women ended, as the Wildcats were in sixth place at the end of the first day of competition at the Woodside Racquet Club here Thursday.

The Wildcats salvaged only two wins in the first round, as Jeff Jackard defeated Brian Pung of Iowa State, 6-4, 6-4, in the No. 1 singles. The other win came in the No. 2 doubles when the team of Curt Thompson and Kris James beat Jakob Victorin and Dan Curry of Colorado, 7-5, 6-3.

Thompson, competing in the No. 2 singles, lost to Bob Bateman of Colorado, 6-4, 7-5. Gary Hassenflu was defeated by Colorado's Curry in the No. 3 singles, 6-1, 3-6, 6-3; James fell to Steve Dawson of Oklahoma, 6-1, 6-1; Mark Hassenflu lost to Mark Cissel of Oklahoma State, 6-0, 6-4; and Brady

Sprinters to be in spotlight at relays

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Alabama speedsters Calvin Smith and Emmit King and Nebraska's Merlene Ottey headline a strong sprint corps that will take aim at several records in the 74th Drake Relays, which open today.

Relays Director Bob Ehrhart said 24 meet records are threatened by the field of 4,000 athletes in the two-day meet, including several in the sprints and short relay races.

However, the weather forecast calls for possible showers and thunderstorms today and Saturday, which could hamper the quest for records.

Smith, ranked second in the world at 100 and 200 meters, and King, No. 8 in the 100, will lead Alabama's defense of its Drake titles in the 400- and 1,600-meter relays. The Crimson Tide also ranks among the favorites in the 800-meter relay.

Georgia, which has nine first-place finishes at Drake in the past five years, and newcomer Washington will challenge Alabama in the 400 and 800, along with Texas Christian and Southern University. Southern Methodist brings the best time in the 1,600.

Both Washington and Alabama have beaten the Drake record of 39.31 seconds in the 400 relay this year, with Washington running a 39.20 that is the second best in the country this year. SMU has run the 1,600 in 3:03.57, which is half-a-second better than the Drake record.

TCU leads the qualifiers in the 800 relay with a time of 1:22.06. Southern has run 1:22.40 and Alabama's best is 1:22.50.

Georgia no longer has Herschel Walker, who is playing in the United States Football League, but Coach Lewis Gainey has an excellent group of young runners, headed by freshman Stanley Blalock.

Blalock has run a wind-aided 10.09 in the 100 meters and finished second to Smith in the Southeastern Conference indoor 300.

Smith and King finished 1-2 in the 100 at Drake last year, but may not run in that event this weekend if they decide to concentrate on the relays.

Both have been under the Drake record of 10.24 seconds, with King running a 10.05 earlier this year. Also entered is Vince Courville of Rice, who was third at Drake last year and won the 100 at the Texas Relays earlier this month. Blalock is another challenger, along with Drake sophomore Mike Ockerman.

Washington freshman Darrell Robinson, who is not eligible for collegiate competition this season, will duel defending champion LeRoy Dixon of Wisconsin in the invitational 400 meters on Saturday.

Robinson set a national high school record of 44.69 seconds and Dixon was clocked at 44.6 on a relay leg this year. The Drake record is 45.31.

Ottey, named the outstanding woman performer at Drake the past two years, will try to break her own record of 52.64 seconds in the 400. She has run a 51.55 this year, which is the best in the country.

An Olympic bronze medalist for Jamaica in 1980, Ottey also anchors Nebraska's 400 relay team, which set a Drake record of 44.86 in 1982. The Cornhuskers beat that time in winning the event at the Texas and Kansas Relays this year.

Mancini calls off fight after being injured

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The World Boxing Association lightweight championship fight between Ray "Boom-Boom" Mancini and Ken Bogner next month was called off today after Mancini suffered a broken collarbone in a sparring session.

The injury throws into disarray the scheduled May 27 twin-title, boxing-entertainment package that was to be hosted by singer Frank Sinatra at the Sun City resort in Bophuthatswana.

Billed by the local media as the "Croon and Crunch" and the "Song and Slug," the event was to be watched by 400 million television viewers around the world.

Kerzner, who owns the glittery Sun City gambling-and-golf resort, said he needed time to renegotiate the Moore-Duran fight or he might postpone the entire event until October. But he said he was unsure he could do either.

A spokesman for Top Rank, Inc., which is co-promoting the fight, said a definite decision on the status of the event will be announced Friday in New York. The Mancini-Bogner fight has not been rescheduled.

Dave Wolf, Mancini's manager, said the champion broke his collarbone during a sparring session Wednesday night with boxer Ted Hatfield of Tennessee. Wolf said the fight had not been rescheduled.

Wolf told The Associated Press that Mancini just "turned and moaned" after being hit. The fighters had been training late at night to prepare themselves to box in the early morning hours May 28 so the bout could be televised live in the United States.

"We thought it was just a bruise," Wolf said. But a doctor later examined Mancini and found the broken bone.

Wolf said Mancini was "terribly depressed," and that the injury was very painful. He also said Mancini would be flying home Friday.

"We were anticipating the best fight of his career," Wolf said.

A dejected, visibly pained Mancini told reporters, "I apologize for not being able to go on. I felt it when I was throwing a punch. It felt like something snapped. I knew it was bad.

"This injury is an act of God. I have to rest and let it heal," the Youngstown, Ohio, champion said. "I've never been hurt this bad in any sport, but I'll be back strong as ever."

Lakers take upper hand in pro basketball playoffs

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The defending champion Los Angeles Lakers hope their two home wins over the Trail Blazers in the National Basketball Association playoffs can defuse their most formidable rival — the rabid Trail Blazer fans — when the series goes to Portland tonight.

"We don't want to let 'Blazermania' get started," forward Jamaal Wilkes said following the Lakers' 112-106 win over Portland Wednesday night. That victory gave Los Angeles a 2-0 edge in the NBA's Western Conference semifinals.

The Lakers have had a lot of trouble in Portland the past few years. They have won three of six there the last two seasons, but before that, had taken only five of 22 in Portland.

This time, though, Portland can't even afford one loss.

"The pressure is off us," said Laker center Kareem Abdul Jabbar, who scored 69 points in the two games in Los Angeles. "If they lose one in Portland it's going to be very tough for them to win the series."

In other playoff games tonight, the Milwaukee Bucks will be at Boston, where the Celtics must win to avoid going to Milwaukee two games down, and the Denver Nuggets, down 2-0 in their series with San Antonio, play host to the Spurs.

Saturday afternoon, the New York Knicks, who blew a 20-point lead to the Philadelphia 76ers Wednesday night to go down 2-0 in their series, play the Sixers in Madison Square Garden.

In Boston, Milwaukee will be hoping for another "abnormal game," from Bob Lanier, the 34-year-old center who scored 21 points on 10 of 12 shooting and pulled down 21 rebounds in Wednesday night's 116-95 win over the Celtics that took away Boston's home court advantage.

"Even at 34 you can have an abnormal game," said Lanier, who as president of the NBA players union spent much of the season involved in labor negotiations with the league.

The Celtics, meanwhile, figure to come out steaming. "This game was very embarrassing," said Larry Bird, who scored only 17 points after dislocating a finger on his right hand. "It's bad when the Celtics get beaten because they were out-hustled."

Coach Bill Fitch was shaken by the loss.

"We had about four or five minutes out there where we just plain quit," he said. "It's hard to get that to roll off my tongue. I guess once, for four or five minutes, in all my time here is all right, but it still is tough to swallow."

Denver, the league's highest scoring team during the regular season, goes home looking for a way to stop San Antonio, which has scored 152 and 126 points in the first two games of the series. The Spurs' Johnny Moore had an NBA playoff record 20 assists in the second game, a 126-109 romp.

Moreover, two key Nuggets — league scoring leader Alex English and center Dan Issel — are injured and their status for tonight is uncertain. English, who has a sprained ankle, didn't play at all Wednesday night and Issel left the bench with 8:47 remaining in the third quarter after straining a tendon.

Tennis

Tinker was defeated by Ridge Smidt of Nebraska, 6-1, 6-0.

In doubles, the No. 1 team of Jackard and Gary Hassenflu lost to Nebraska's Jim Carson and Craig Johnson, 6-2, 3-6, 6-3. The No. 3 team of Tinker and Kent Smith fell to Jim Syrett and Brett Blair of Kansas, 6-4, 7-6.

In the second round, Jackard was beaten in the singles by Scott Nichol of Oklahoma State, 6-3, 6-2. Nichol is the top-seeded player in the tournament. Despite the loss, Jackard can still place third in the tourney.

Gary Hassenflu, Thompson and Mark Hassenflu all drew byes for the second round and will play for fifth place in their respective classes. Of the K-Staters who saw second-round action, Tinker finished in seventh place, losing to Tom Black of Kansas, 6-4, 7-6, and James lost to Tom Grotwald of Colorado, 2-6, 6-3, 6-2.

Oklahoma State was first in the team standings with 92 points. Defending champion Oklahoma trailed with 81 and was followed by Nebraska, 71; Colorado, 47; Kansas, 38; Kansas State, 30; and Iowa State, 22. Missouri canceled its tennis program last year.

The standings are the same as the final standings of the women's Big Eight Tournament. K-State coach Steve Snodgrass attributed this to the school's funding, saying it was "all a matter of budget."

The results were less than Snodgrass would have liked, but the coach said he was pleased with some aspects of the day.

"We lost a couple of real disappointing matches in the first round," he said. "We can't be too unhappy, though, with Jeff's win and the win by Thompson and James."

PERSONAL

YOU BIG baby! (My main squeeze, the aggressive one). This not seeing as much of each other was the best idea you ever had! Everyone needs a _____ like you. You're so easy to be with, so much fun, and so cute! This past year has been wonderful—do you think you can make it through another 50 years of nooners, going out to eat, Friday afternoons, bike rides, and chewing your nails? Why not—surely it's God's will! ILY—Can't wait for the honeymoon. "Special Category." (148)

BEAU—SORRY this is late, hope your b-day was great because as a dad and uncle you sure do rate. Love, your dot and niece. (148)

WERE YOU at Tuttle Beach area on Sunday, April 24th? I was and lost a gold bead necklace which means a lot to me. If you found it, please contact Stacy at 532-3218. Reward offered. (147-149)

TO WHOMEVER last saw a Fun Mercedes 450SL: Last seen Sunday afternoon, while spectating a Royals game, driving down I-70 heading toward a Barmitvah—Please contact Martha Wagon! Reward: A Clay Center CC golf cap. P.S. Does this even the score??! (148)

P.E.O. NEW initiate, and distinguished P.E.O. founder: Congrats to you both. Come by Friday at 12:00 and let's toast! The Laramie Boys. (148)

FROM ONE cousin to another—Thanks for the goodies and wishes. Same to you! Keep up the hard work, you're just about there! Julie. (148)

DAD—CAMPING out for 8-ball tickets, 7:00 a.m. set-ups, the function I never went to, tickle matches, our many "daughters," long talks and much more—what can I say? You know how special you are, and how much I'll miss ya' this summer. I plan on celebrating our anniversary in grand style tonight at the formal—beware! ILY. Mom. (148)

DAVE—IS there a number I can reach you at this summer? Connie. (148)

DI AND Rae—¡Adios pavos! Figure that one out Rach! Let's try to get together this summer, for a minute or two anyway. Happy Birthday! (both of you!)—Constance. (148)

HEY MOSQUITO Breath! I love you more! Keep your tongue in your mouth this summer! Thanks for the extra trip to K.C., and all the rides for that matter. You are a great friend and very special to me. I can't wait until next year! Keep in touch this summer! Banjo Butt. (148)

KATHY—8455 or 5844? Who cares! Seriously, you're the best friend I've ever had, and I'll miss you when I go. Maybe we'll run into each other down south. Surely we'll write! Conoce Ud. una buena dieta para adelgazar? Good night!—Connie. (148)

Q.F. PRODUCTION Partiers—Objective: After observing this, you animals will remember to attend the picnic at the zoo at one o'clock. Also bring your toothpicks to test for doneness of the BBQ muffins. —Banquet Crew. (148)

DENNIS AND Kevin—'Kay, Hacca-Dacca-Baby-Gumbi. Need some Bernie and Bessie food? How bout those dollar signs? Mellow out you devils you! Spring 1983, that's tough. Friends and memories are forever with more to come. We love you! Trace, Mel, Kara, Carol and Ang. (148)

KARA—MAN, Happy 20th. Get psyched for a crazy birthday party Saturday night. Man, this year has been kick, man you're soooo cool. Bertrand will never survive Saturday night. Man, how about those late night munch outs after talking to Bernie all night. Do you need some peer pressure?. Man, you're the 'hit' of the group. We all love you. Here's to next year. Mel, Trace, Ang, Carol, Dennis, Kevin and Sean. (148)

TONY AND Sam—You two are quite unique to say the least! Tony, the parties after school are the best, try and remember them. Maybe we'll run into each other in a gutter somewhere with a bottle stuck to our lips. Sam—I'll see you next year buddy! I heard you and Bill do great push-ups! Connie. (148)

BROOK AND Glenn—I'm looking forward to a wonderful evening! I John 4:7-8. Love, Anna. (148)

STUBBS: HEY old man, Happy 24th Birthday!! I can't wait to celebrate in K.C. this weekend! Love you lots, your little Munchkin. (148)

M. BEE—Let's go buzzing out on the first six bug trip this weekend to the honey town on the hill. Then we can bug back and buzz in on a party without crashing. Let's be sticky for many more sixes. Love, Willie Bee. (148)

ATTENTION PARTIERS—Stan G. pencils in his moustache, wears false eyelashes, and shaves between his toes!! Let's party!! The Maid. (148)

KAPPA'S—Get crazy for the best ever Luau at the "Blue Lagoon" on Saturday with the fun-loving Farmers! Go Hawaiian! Farm House. (148)

MAYNARD—WHATCHA thinking? Just what I thought! I just wanted to tell you that this past week has been great—I hope to see more of you in the future—yeah, I'm grinning!—Love, MLLS (148)

M'LISS LOUISE Bullock: Have a special 20th cake and ice cream day! The Ornery Ones? (148)

AGR and Sig Ep Water Fighters—Your fraternity houses we'll not drive 'round, especially with our MG convertible top down, cuz as we found out we might just drown. Hoses, buckets, pails and glasses were used, and with ice cold water, we were abused. "Shower" was the idea we thought was quite lame, Pat got to go first when the time came! I tell you, it was an excellent shower, all that was lacking was the flour. (Maybe next time) Some day soon—we can't wait—we'll be back to retaliate! AXO Pat, Kim and Stacy. (148)

G PHI Lisa: Thanx for such a great time Tuesday night at the Date Dash Party. Good luck on finals and have a super summer. Roger. (148)

BOYD FLOOZIES: Betsy, Virginia, Kelli, Peggy, Lori, Amy, Kathy: Today is the day of the Boyd Hall Formal, none of the floozies will be normal. From Burgundy's for supper, to Flanny's we'll go, the intake of Seagram's, Asti, and Amaretto won't be slow. Then on to J.C. for the dance, which for the floozies is their last chance. To all be together and do their thing, because it's the Boyd Hall Floozies' last big fling. So let's live it up with our dates, and see who can beat the record for staying out late!! Robin and Julie. (148)

AD Pi LeAnne F.—Thanks for being such a special friend and always being there. Warn Ulysses I'm coming! Have a super weekend. Love 'ya lots, Joan. (148) due to lack of roads in some parts of the campus. This will continue to become a bigger problem as the campus becomes more pedestrian oriented.

"The number of high-rise buildings on campus will be a big problem. The campus has three times the number of high-rise buildings as the rest of the city has," he said.

Duncan explained high-rise buildings present a problem because fire fighting in them takes so much water and equipment. As an example, Duncan said a building the size of Ahearn Field House would need to have 5,000 gallons of water per-minute pumped on it to put a fire out and the water would have to come from at least two sides of the building.

By comparison, a private home would need only about 500 gallons of water per-minute pumped onto it from one side.

The non-fire fighting duties of the University fire department will also have to be assumed by the city's fire department, Duncan added.

"Maybe once the Manhattan Fire Department takes over the fire fighting responsibilities for the campus, the University will realize what a valuable asset they had in the student fire department," Duncan said.

Canada

The administration wants to test the low-flying, sub-sonic missile over Western Canada because the terrain resembles the region around Moscow. One U.S. official, who spoke only on condition that he not be named, said after the Reagan-Trudeau session that the United States now is "generally, positively optimistic that when our request is submitted, it will be considered favorably."

Reagan said he found Trudeau "supportive" in their talks about ways to trim the nuclear threat facing Europe. The Soviet Union has so far rejected Reagan's latest offer, but formal talks are set to resume in Geneva on May 17.

Trudeau also stressed the importance of the upcoming economic summit in Williamsburg, Va., late next month. The Canadian Prime Minister told Reagan that he believes Western economies are turning around, and the summit offers the opportunity to make that recovery "lasting and deep, and not just another hope in people's minds."

Reagan agreed, predicting a "a free and open exchange" at Williamsburg.

Central

The bill is sponsored by Boland and Rep. Clement Zablocki, D-Wis., chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

It provides for $30 million in this fiscal year and $50 million in the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1 to finance the overt program to interdict arms shipments to guerrillas.

Boland said that after the committee vote the panel will ask for a closed session of the House to examine CIA activities in Central America and "explain the recommendation which we will make." Earlier this week, the Senate locked its doors for a discussion of the administration's covert actions.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said Reagan "felt very good" about reaction to his speech, in which he pressed for congressional OK of an emergency $110 million in military aid to El Salvador.

In El Salvador, the government is fighting a leftist revolution. In Nicaragua, on the other hand, leftists are in power. Congressional opponents charge that the administration is illegally assisting anti-government guerrillas there.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee, taking up the administration's foreign aid requests Thursday, deferred action until next Thursday on funds for El Salvador.

"I believe we should give the opportunity ... for all committee members to reflect on and consult with their constituents on the president's speech," said Sen. Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., the committee's chairman.

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., a member of the Senate Intelligence Committee who has visited Central America twice in the past year, said in a Senate speech he sees "a deep moral question" in more aid to the insurgents in Nicaragua even if the Republican-controlled Senate concludes that U.S. law is not being violated.

In the House, 36 members took the floor to comment on the president's address. In one of the strongest attacks on the speech, Rep. David Bonior, D-Mich., said, "It was disgusting, and I hope the American people send a message to the president that we will not engage in that kind of activity."

Book Buy-Back

Question: How does the Union Bookstore determine how much your books are worth when you sell them back?

Answer: If the Bookstore has notification from the instructor that the books are to be re-adopted for use the next semester, and if the Bookstore does not already have a sufficient stock on hand, then you will be offered 60% of the publisher's current list price.

For example: if a book sells for $10 new and it meets the requirements noted above, the book would be bought from you for $6.

If the Bookstore has not received notice that the book will be used again, or if it already has a sufficient stock on hand, the book would be worth the current wholesale price as indicated by one of the nation's largest jobbers of used textbooks.

If you have any questions about the price being paid for a textbook, the buyer will be happy to answer any questions which you may have regarding the price paid.

Answer: Definitely not. Most stores in the United States pay only 50% for books being used again. The Union Bookstore is one of the few stores which pays 60%. And remember, we pay cash. You don't have to take your money out in trade.

Question: What about paperbacks? Does the 60% policy apply to them too?

Answer: Yes. The Union Bookstore does not penalize you on paperbacks. If they are being used again, and if the bookstore needs them, you will receive 60% of the publisher's list price.

Question: If the publisher's price has gone up since I bought my books, will I receive the benefit of that price increase?

Answer: Yes. For instance, if you bought your book for $9 and the publisher's list price is now $10, you will get $6, not $5.40.

Anatomy of Aggieville

Once upon a time there was an unusual and distinctive shopping center — located conveniently for its customers and perhaps the happiest blend of books, booze, clothing, food, entertainment and assorted goods ever assembled within a few blocks.

Luckily for K-State students that time is now, and has been for most this century. And if plans are carried out, Aggieville's future could be even brighter.

Aggieville is more than a collection of business buildings. It's a community — not unique but special to those who frequent its premises. This issue of Dimensions seeks to tell Aggieville's past, to examine its present, and to look into its future.

It Beats to a Nocturnal Drummer

By LORI BERGEN

In white ruffles and tight denim, a tall blonde two-steps across the darkened floor to the wailing beat of country, her waist encircled by the arm of a cowboy whose name is tooled in leather on the back of his belt. A three-inch circle has worn through his left rear pocket like a brand.

A few doors away, the bodies gyrate to the beat of a different drum. Sparks of white light reflect off a twisting mirrored ball, speckling randomly the bodies of the dancers like a shower of meteors. Cigarette smoke settles in a haze above a layer of battling odors — Polo, sweat, beer, Lauren — and conversation surrenders to the din of Michael Jackson's decibels.

When the cultural anthropologist attempts to understand the fabric of a society, it is done by observing the various groups found within that society — their relationship to other groups, the rituals which set them off from the others, the characteristics which identify an individual as a member of a particular group.

Consider, then, the social structure of Aggieville.

It is a nocturnal culture certainly, as evidenced by the abundance of drinking establishments. In the space of but four or five city blocks there are at least a dozen taverns and private clubs. Each provides a unique setting for the gathering and social interaction of the distinct varietal groups which frequent Aggieville — dormies, greeks, aggies, punks, aging hippies, intellectuals and locals — if you will, all for lack of a better term, choosing Aggieville as the place to spend their time and money.

While Aggieville is not a microcosm of American society (for where are the ethnic groups? the elderly? the very young? the poor?), neither is it really a microcosm of the university community or the Manhattan area. It is the general consensus that most who frequent Aggieville are students — and consequently it is to the student that tavern and club owners cater.

There are of course exceptions to the predominantly student population. "Doggies," the term by which Fort Riley soldiers are irreverently referred, are harder to spot in these days of shorter haircuts but certainly no more welcome. One bartender contends that rowdy students will cool it if you ask, but soldiers "have a tendency to break things." Private club memberships are often denied to enlisted men, although officers have a somewhat better chance of getting in. Student identification card discounts on cover charges serve as a quasi-legitimate means to discriminate against soldiers.

In Aggieville, as in any distinct culture, looking like you belong to a certain crowd counts for half of actual membership. Acting like the rest of your group and doing it in the right place are the others.

A visit to Aggieville's only true country and western bar, the Rockin' K, is a case in point.

The atmosphere there, as corny as it sounds, is down-right friendly. And apparently that's why most of the patrons are there. The place feels like what city folks imagine an old barn raising to be and nearly everyone wears jeans faded to just that authentic shade of heather blue.

Of any group ritual performed in Aggieville, the most impressive by far must be the swing dance. Partners seem to respond to each other through some silent communication mechanism, spinning and twirling each other with arms and bodies intertwined like pretzel dough. That life and limb are spared through these highly stylized manipulations, not unlike the sailor's knot, is amazing. The swing dancers execute their moves with the precision of a prima ballerina and then saunter back to a rickety table to down another round of beer.

One dancer readily admits she was "raised on country music." Understanding lyrics which reflect real, everyday situations keep her coming back for more. But patrons of the Rockin' K are quick to point out that they're not all ag science majors either. Country music and the friendly atmosphere even appeal to art majors.

Two other Aggieville cultural groups, perhaps less easily defined than the C & W crowd, can be rather loosely referred to as greeks and dormies. For the most part, these two groups are nearly indistinguishable by their appearances and much overlap occurs in the establishments which they frequent. Both appear in full regalia, consisting of a somewhat unisex approach to apparel: the polo-style knit shirt, the button-down collar oxford shirt, the shetland pull-over sweater (wool in winter, cotton in spring), khaki pants or the obligatory Levis or designer-label jeans. Higher levels of polyester content in the clothing seem to indicate a lower standing on the social ladder.

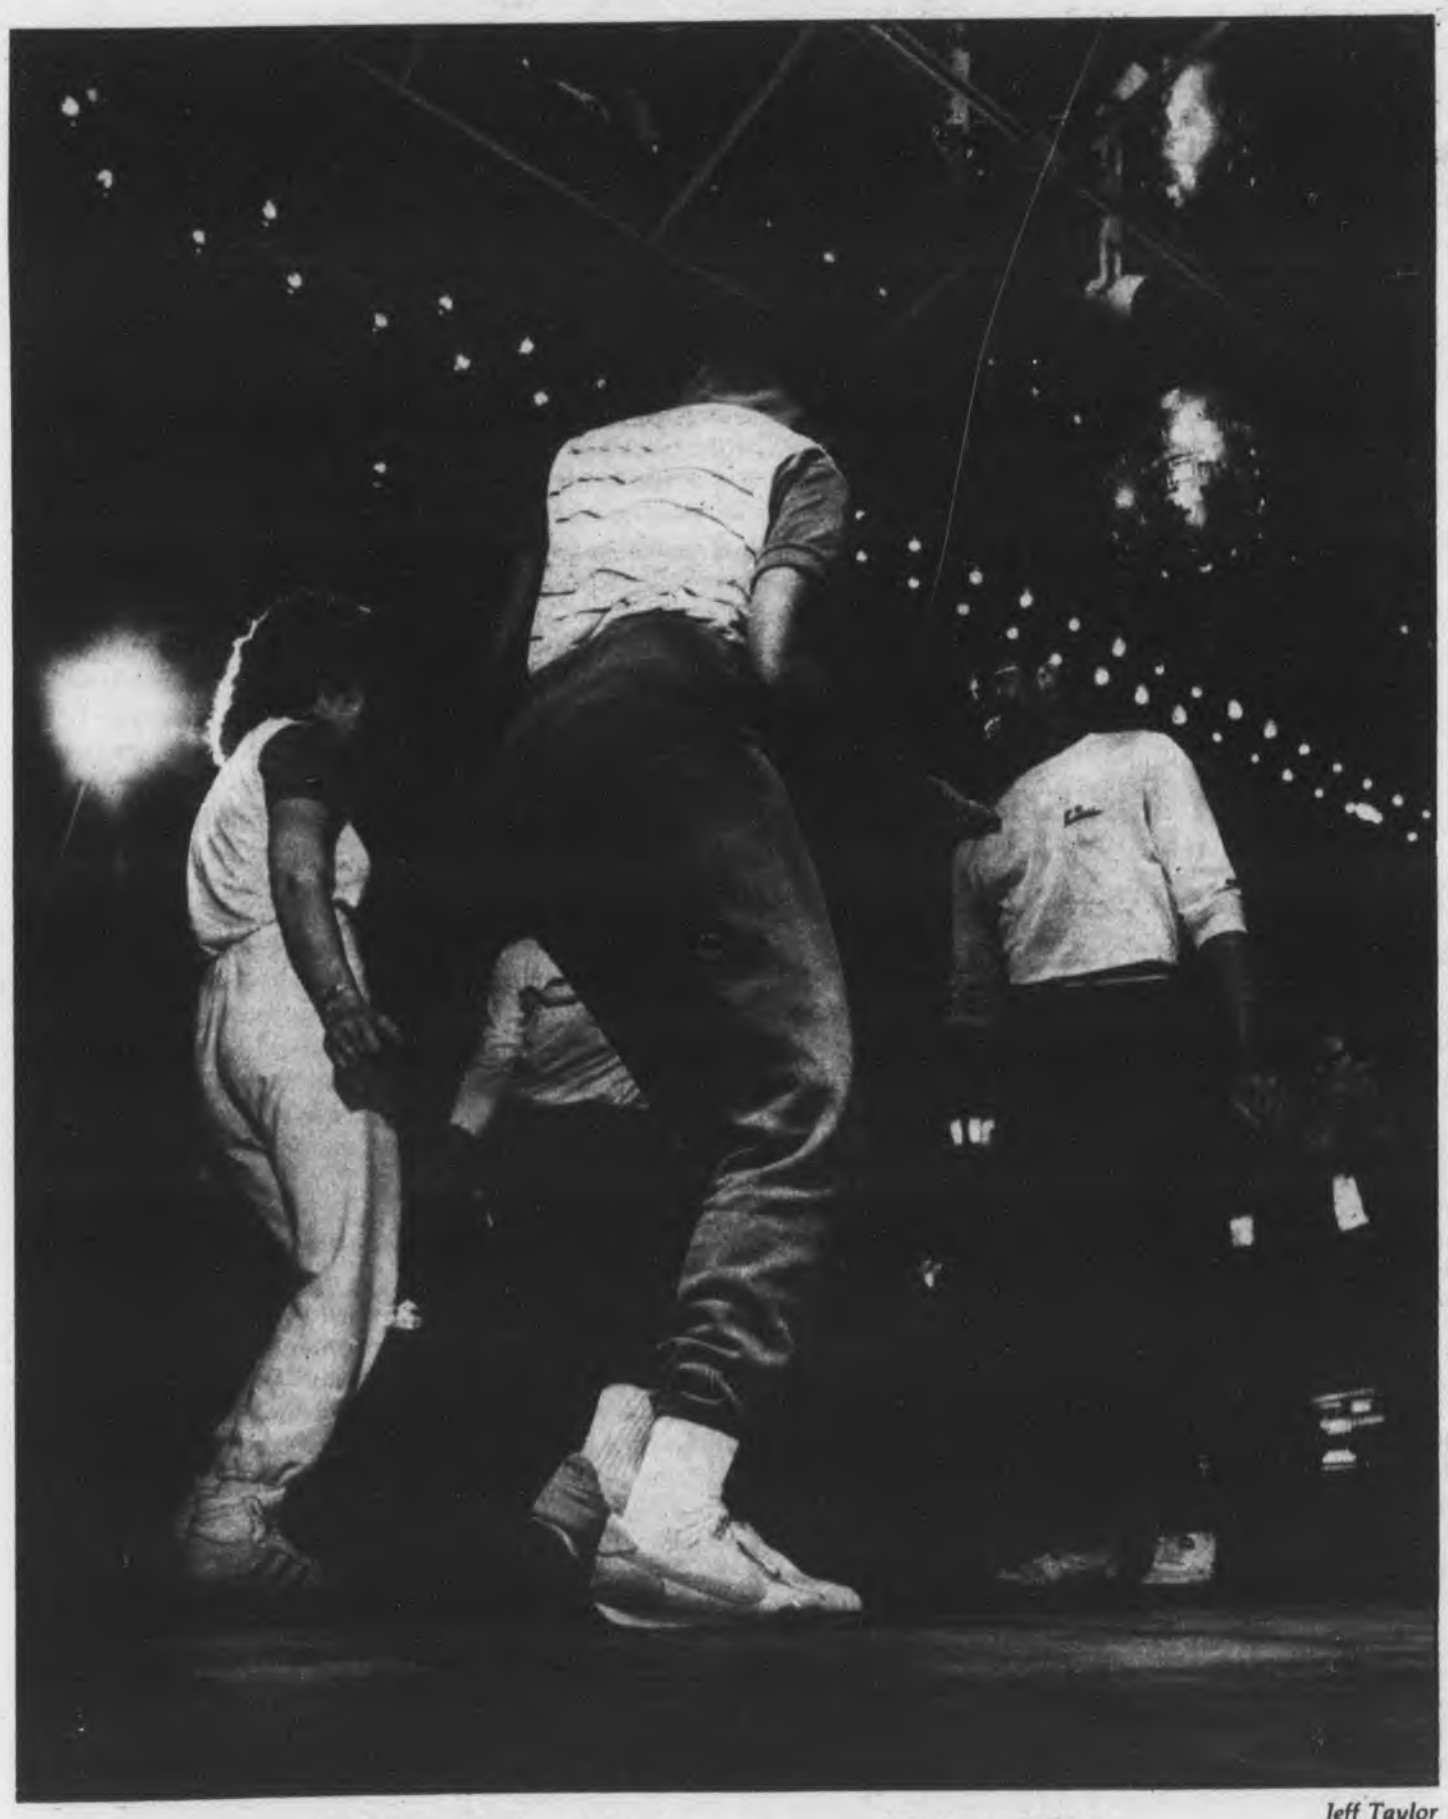
The atmosphere at Kite's suggests its patrons all have parents who are K-State alumni. A "we-belong-here-by-birthright" attitude prevails, and the crowd is respectfully aware of the bar's long-standing tradition. Patrons are all heading for upper-level management careers with IBM and Southwestern Bell.

Mr. K's attracts a similar portion of these two groups although a greater percentage of dormies and younger members are found here. Sources which for obvious reasons prefer to remain nameless indicate that one goes to Mr. K's if one "wants to cut butt," which loosely translated means to "pick up girls." Patrons make use of the dance floor at Mr. K's to both perform and check out that night's prospects. Spinning lights and the relentless beat of the music practically limit any conversation, but perhaps the most telling is that no one on the dance floor seems to smile.

The private clubs in Aggieville attract an older portion of the culture — one bartender observed astutely that only a quarter of the undergraduate-student population at any given time is even old enough to legally enter a private club. The nine-to-five local crowd and much of the K-State faculty/staff group who choose to frequent Aggieville at all are more likely to be found in the area's private clubs.

The Avalon, one of the newer Aggieville establishments, attracts a varying group depending greatly on the kind of music played by that night's band. Reggae, jazz and rock music are routinely featured.

Across the street at "the station," as Aggie Station is fondly known, are the people who left Kite's at 11:30 p.m. and aren't yet ready to call it a night. More flashing lights and a disco dance floor, coupled with dining privileges and a separate restaurant area make "the station" the obvious place to spend sorority dad's weekend. The crowd is typically rounded out with people who have already spent the best four years of their life in college and now must work for a living.



The neighborhood bar atmoshpere at Auntie Mae's is refreshing. The crowd consists primarily of locals and older students and everybody seems to know everybody else. Probably the smallest club in Aggieville, the ritual here is that most time-honored one — darts.

Aggieville's aging hippies and intellectuals seem to gravitate toward the Last Chance. Perhaps drawn by the only outdoor seating on Aggieville's main drag, these unlikely souls gather to discuss the merits of existentialism in a Reaganomic America, to argue the virtues of imported over domestic beer, or to lament that Emily Dickinson never realized a world beyond her garden. Wrinkled tweeds and yard sale chic remind a casual observer that even activists of the '60s have grown older.

While the various and sundry watering holes attract distinguishably different groups, the social structure of Aggieville is held together by several common factors. The sacred significance of Friday night is universal and behavior is predictable regardless of the group.

Bartenders know that dark liquors — scotch and bourbon — sell best in winter. They restock their vodka, gin and lime supplies at the first hint of spring. The population of Aggieville declines each summer when the annual student migration occurs. But each fall they return, just as they return every night of the week to Aggieville's taverns and clubs. Their behavior patterns are as regular as clockwork, as predictable as lemmings. D

Looking Back: 'When I was younger'

By BILL BIDWELL

Then he smiled, and there was Aggieville

In the beginning, God created the Heaven and the Earth. Then he smiled, and there was Aggieville.

Or so it seemed in my first days as an undergraduate at K-State.

The Russians had launched Sputnik, the world's first space satellite, and America — electrified over the Soviet achievement — was astir with talk that its schools were doing a poor job of teaching science and mathematics.

Dick Clark's face on "American Bandstand" was a staple on the TV set (black and white, of course) as I gulped pork tenderloins at an Aggieville lunch counter.

Tuttle Creek Reservoir was not a reality, and the anti-dam people cried "Big Dam Foolishness."

"He's Got the Whole World in His Hands" and Paul Anka's "Diana" blared from Aggieville juke boxes and rock'n'roll radiated from new independent AM stations that had said so-long to the networks. Elvis Presley would soon shock his fans with the announcement he was entering the Army.

Tuition had jumped from $90 to $104 a semester and my room — which was all but filled with a bunk bed and desk — cost $15 a month, but I had spent the summer working to pay my way.

There was talk of changing the name of Kansas State College to Kansas State University. But it was only talk.

It was 25 years ago in this valley of the Blue and Kaw rivers.

On the brisk nights of fall, in the crisp cold of winter and in the fresh breezes of spring, Aggieville was a home away from home — in its unique way — just a few square blocks, but a parallelogram of plenty. Neon signs glowed at night, crowds of 'Staters patronized Kite's and other taverns and poured into the movie houses for a welcome break from the books.

During that school year and two later summers, Aggieville became a part of K-State for me.

What, then, is Aggieville revisited? It is a curious mixture of change and familiarity. There are more taverns, new businesses offering a greater variety and physical changes — but traditions that have never dimmed.

Kite's, for example. It's still at 619 N. 12th, but in the late '50s, Campus Pastries was "up front" in the building. Kite Thomas, former K-State athlete, must have known what he was doing when he bought the old Shamrock Tavern in 1954 and established Kite's — because he started what already had become an institution by the time I first set foot in Manhattan.

In the years that have passed, pizza has joined beer to form a favorite combination for students. In fact, when many people think of college students, they think of pizza and beer.

Pizza then? It was coming and the Pizza Hut was about to emerge, its origin in Kansas and its market to become worldwide. It was natural for Manhattan's first Pizza Hut — the fourth in the world — to make its home in Aggieville. Now there are also Domino's and Pizza Transit Authority, among others, that deliver pizza to the door.

Where did students eat other than in the Union State Room, which was small compared with today's State Room? Aggieville sported lunch counters and drive-ins. Among them were Brownie's, Mar's Cafe and the Penguin, and there were Dolly's K-Lunch and the Canteen on Anderson Avenue at Aggieville's west edge, just to name a few. Hamburgers were popular. I had heard of a place that sold hot dogs soaked in beer, but I don't remember much about it.

Gas stations have been converted to liquor stores — minus the pumps, of course. One example stands at Moro Street and Manhattan Avenue. There are others.

There were no waterbed stores — and probably no waterbeds — during my first stint at K-State. At least, there were no waterbed stores in Aggieville. Now there are two. Doing some shopping, I learned that if I want to replace my bunk, I can buy a basic waterbed kit, a student economy model, for about $89.

The space age, which started with Sputnik, has taken over — even in the bars. The old 5-cent pinball machine is gone and sophisticated electronic games beep and blink in their place.

If anything, Aggieville is more fun and even more relaxed today. I had forgotten that women rarely went into a tavern unescorted or without a group. It just wasn't the custom. And no one ran around on the streets in gym shorts or cutoffs and novelty T-shirts bearing various logos. Plain white sweat shirts were popular.

Lifestyles have changed.

In Varney's University Book Store, I could easily recall fighting the rush to buy college books when it was the College Book Store. I could never remember it having a basement, but that's where the books are now. The Union had no bookstore.

Across Anderson Avenue north of the bookstore, the "triangle park" bears evidence of a major street change. In the late '50s and early '60s, Anderson's intersection with Manhattan Avenue — the bookstore corner — was the main route into Aggieville from the West. The angled link between Anderson and Bluemont did not exist, but it should have.

The northeast edge of the campus came to a point at that square-cornered Anderson-Manhattan intersection before the street change. The fence was reconstructed parallel to the new street. The little park area, which remains state property, is marked with a path where grass is scarce. Students on foot still take the shortest route to Aggieville.

Among other Aggieville business firms that remain are Blaker's Studio Royal and Woody's Men's Shop. Duckwalls variety store is among the missing. Characteristic of the fast-food era is Hardees, one of the "newcomers" in Aggieville — at least for me.

My impressions of a place — Aggieville — would have to include a "things have changed" observation. Lamentably, there's no such thing as a 15- or 20-cent beer anymore, but I was pleased to discover I could still order a "red beer" — and the bartender knew exactly what it was.

I also have found I can meet plenty of good friends in Aggieville and there aren't many strange faces.

A friend yelled at me from across Moro Street. She introduced me to a rugby player who was taking rugby programs to merchants who had bought advertising space in them. Explaining that I don't know much about rugby, I asked if I could see one of the programs.

"You can have one — you have a good attitude," my friend's friend — the rugby player — said.

Aggieville is friendly. It's still a home away from home.

To be sure, some things have changed — except for the unique fabric that Aggieville has woven into a University community. D

Bill Bidwell takes timeout at Kite's: some R and R: 5,000 summer school students, plenty room and booze

Aggieville — a mecca for K-State students who are a bonanza for most of the 107 businesses and professional firms located there.

The University's impact is elementary. But what happens in the summer when more than two-thirds of the University's 19,000 students vanish for a while?

Beer flows in much smaller quantities and eateries are not as busy, but Aggieville by no means rolls up its sidewalks because there are only 5,000 or so students on campus.

By BILL BIDWELL

Summer makes a dent in the beer trade adjacent to a university which has been called one of the top 10 beer-drinking campuses in the country and it's not usually a bustling time for food establishments. Yet, these businesses weather that brief period and others seem to flourish as customers represent more of a cross section of people. The clientele includes more townspeople and military personnel.

Beer and food consumption may decline anywhere from 33 percent to 50 percent, according to some estimates. Summer does take its toll on such trade.

"It has a profound effect," said Michael J. Kuhn, partner with Terry Ray in Ray Enterprises, which owns five Aggieville taverns.

"It's safe to say it (tavern patronage) drops at least 50 percent," Kuhn said. But he said the taverns pick up townspeople as well as summer students who help keep the taps turning.

Generally, Aggieville crowds are greatest on Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights. A few businesses are open on Sunday.

One of those with Sunday hours is University Bookstore Inc. (Varney's), 623 N. Manhattan Ave., where manager Jon Levin said summer does not bring the sharp decline in business that it once did. "We notice a drop in business in the summer, but not like we used to," Levin said.

Peace: Life above Kite's Bar and Grill

The trend started changing for the better in the 1960s, Levin said, attributing the upswing to a larger student population, a greater number of married students and more businesses in Aggieville. Levin, a 1957 K-State graduate in business administration, who started with the firm as textbook manager, remembers when few students stayed around in the summer.

"Now we have so many married students that this (Manhattan) turns out to be home. No matter what's going on, there's a lot of students in town," Levin said.

He also attributed a better summer business climate to a greater number of retailers in Aggieville. "Everybody draws for everybody...and we have a good blend of daytime and nighttime businesses in Aggieville."

The book business declines between the end of summer school and the start of fall semester, Levin said, pointing out that the opening of school is the "heaviest time." Christmas is also one of the store's busiest seasons. Not only does gift shopping add impetus, Levin said, but "we're getting ready for book buy-back and for second semester."

Levin said the store, which was "built as a bookstore in 1916," opened its basement level in 1963.

Summer is not a slow time for the sporting goods business at Ballard's until the end of summer school, according to proprietor Ross "Sonny" Ballard. "Of course, there are not as many students around, but May, June and half way through July are good months," he said, explaining that softball and other summer sports keep things humming.

"After summer school is out, it's a pretty slow time," he said. But Ballard said the greatest decline in business at his store is in early January when students are still away for Christmas vacation.

Ballard, a 1960 K-State graduate and former Wildcat basketball player, moved his store recently from 1222 Moro to 1218 Moro, a more spacious building which he purchased. It gives the store 4,000 square feet instead of the former 1,500 square feet for his expanding lines.

Ballard is president of the Aggieville Business Association which organizes various promotions for the merchants in Aggieville. The promotions include Oktoberfest, "which is a big one," back-to-school and Christmas sales events.

Also on the calendar are winter and summer "Dog Days," staged in conjunction with Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, and the St. Patrick's Day promotion by Kansas State Bank, a project with which the association helps.

"We try to promote Aggieville," Ballard said of the association. "We picked up half the tab on the Aggieville redevelopment project and the city picked up the other half."

For Dean Taylor, owner of The Palace, a necessities and gift store which opened in 1929 as a drug store, fluctuations in the student population are not much of a concern.

"Actually, some of our days in summer are more bustling," Smith said. "As soon as the students go, we have a whole new influx of customers."

Taylor said the upswing in non-student clientele is noticeable even during spring break. "Somebody commented that you wouldn't know it's spring break at The Palace," Taylor said about the most recent week off for students. He noted that customers come not only from Manhattan, but from Topeka, Salina and Abilene because of the store's variety of goods.

And The Palace's self-service soda fountain, maintained to help preserve the store's old-fashioned look, is a meeting place for many people.

Peak seasons for Taylor's store are the gift-giving seasons, of which Christmas is the largest. Easter, Mother's Day and Father's Day also spur business at The Palace.

"Now is another peak, after people get their tax refunds. A lot of people spend that money on luxuries," Taylor said.

Frank Simonetti, who opened Today's Fashions, 1207 Laramie, in May 1982, said he was surprised to discover business is not bad when the regular school term ends. The store sells jeans and T-shirts and Simonetti estimated 90 percent of his business comes from students.

"There isn't anywhere as much difference as people told me," Simonetti said. Although school is out for most people in the summer, he noted, "at the same time you have that 4,000 to 5,000 students who pick jobs that are available — and they have more money."

September, October and November are traditionally better months for his business, Simonetti said. "I can't honestly say that my business is down more than 10 percent in the summer. It's the weaker season anyhow, because all summer long people wear cutoffs, T-shirts and gym shorts," he said.

But people have to buy clothes, Simonetti noted.

He recalled that different people had told him when he came to Manhattan that business increases five to seven-fold when regular-term students are on campus. "I think they referred to total Aggieville business," he said.

The summer exit of students brings other customers to Aggieville, Simonetti said. "People feel freer to drive through Aggieville and browse during the day."

Simonetti uses a parking lot across the street from his store as an indicator of busy hours during the school year, and said he doesn't believe the area is plagued with parking problems. "You can have your pick of parking spaces until after 4 p.m. Thursday, Friday and Saturday," he observed. "Game days? Well, you can't get a parking place for half a mile around K-State."

Depending on the business, Aggieville has a favorable business climate all year long. Take waterbeds, for example.

The demand for waterbeds doesn't fluctuate much, according to Adrian Eakin who is a partner with Robert Knapp in Park Avenue Waterbeds, 1217 Moro. The store attracts a diverse clientele, Eakin said, admitting that the less-expensive, economy models of waterbeds are more popular with students.

The store, which has been an Aggieville business 11 years, has operated in its present location for two years.

From beer to waterbeds, Aggieville offers a variety — something for everyone — that gives the long-time shopping center its unique appeal and explains its longevity. D

Reaching Toward The Future

By GAIL GAREY

Aggieville, like a fine wine, has improved with age.

Just as a wine's place of birth is fundamental to its taste, individuality and character, Aggieville has its own unmistakable personality.

It is this personality The Aggieville Improvement Committee is striving to improve.

Individual businesses have done considerable work on the facades and interiors of their businesses. But The Aggieville Improvement Plan is a planned concept designed by the committee to improve the public areas of Aggieville.

"We want to enhance the atmosphere of Aggieville for both students and non-students," said Jon Levin, chairman of the committee, manager and part owner of Varney's Book Store.

THE PURPOSE of the plan is to unify and improve the public aspects of Aggieville — to set it off as a defined area, but not to make it look like a village or any particular architectural style, Levin said.

The plan also outlines optional guidelines for merchants to follow when improving their businesses. The emphasis is placed on improving the area's aestethic value, and to do goals and objectives need to be set up, Sonny Ballard, president of The Aggieville Business Association, said,

In 1980, The Aggieville Business Association appointed The Aggieville Improvement Committee to explore the concept of "beautifying" the Aggieville shopping district.

The Committee was granted $10,000 from the City of Manhattan and $10,000 from the Aggieville merchants. The Committee then appointed The Design Group to devise a plan.

The Aggieville Improvement Plan is just that — a plan. It embodies a number of design concepts and recommendations geared toward improving Aggieville's physical environment, Ken Ebert, member of the committee and managing partner of The Design Group, said.

THE ESTIMATED COST to implement the plan is from $1 million to $1.7 million. The plan, which outlines the project goals, is divided into the public and private areas, Ebert said.

They are:

— To create and maintain a quality environment and convey the image of a unique shopping, personal service, and entertainment district.

— To maintain and support existing established business activity.

— To satisfy the customer needs for existing and potential markets to expand and increase business activity.

The goals and objectives along with the recommendations for the area were derived from information obtained in a survey conducted by The Design Group. Ebert said the questionnaire filled out by Aggieville merchants and patrons focused on Aggieville's strong and weak points.

After the information was compiled, the merchants' attitudes toward the issues were compared to the patrons' and the findings aided in setting a basis for the recommendations, Ebert said.

The recommendations are geared toward maintaining the current services and facilities there now, as well as expanding upon them to capture and serve other markets, Ebert said.

THE RECOMMENDATIONS include pedestrian and vehicular routes, signs, lighting, street furniture and landscaping.

According to The Design Group's plan, the complete reconstruction and expansion of Aggieville's sidewalk network will be necessary in visually unifying the streetscape.

It will be consistently and uniformly developed, Ebert said, so the pedestrian will know he is on the pedestrian network.

"The pedestrian is the number one asset of Aggieville," he said, "so we want to give them the priority."

To distinguish the pedestrian paths, materials, colors and textures such as brick and patterned concrete will be used.

The plan also recognizes that alleys are used as pedestrian walkways, Levin said, so alleyways and mid-block crosswalks will also be promoted in the network.

The plan does not call for the elimination of vehicular circulation, but it does make parking more accessible.

All parking improvements are centered around the recommendation to construct a multi-level parking garage at the intersection of Laramie Street and North Manhattan Avenue. The garage will hold approximately 350 automobiles.

Improvement of existing surface parking lots, on-street parking and private off-street parking are also recommended in the plan.

ALONG WITH THE pedestrian and vehicular routes, lights will be used to outline the boundary of Aggieville and to differentiate the area from other commercial districts.

The proposal is to lower the lights and to space the same kind of lighting more frequently. This will help identify, unify and portray an image, he said.

The plan also recommends developing a sign system which would eliminate unnecessary signs and combine related signs.

The proposal also calls for improvements and additions to the existing street furniture. This includes benches, trash receptacles, planters and parking meters. All the things will tie together, unify Aggieville and hopefully uplift its image, Ebert said.

To complement the pedestrian system and to screen, buffer or strengthen other physical conditions, the plan suggests landscaping the area.

It also distinguishes the potential focal point of Aggieville as the Triangular Park on the southwest corner at Manhattan and Bluemont avenues.

Also included in the plan is a section which outlines guidelines for storefront improvements.

The guidelines are set up to give the business owner guidance to what he can do to improve the image of his business yet maintain the overall theme of Aggieville, Alan Rogers, coordinator of the Manhattan Design Project, said.

THE GUIDELINES aren't to limit anything, he said, but to try and create an identity for Aggieville and to give the owner an overall direction to follow in his improvements.

According to Rogers, the guidelines are aimed toward bringing out exisiting intrinsic qualities of the building.

An added incentive for the store owner to comply with the guidelines is that if he does he is eligible for a lower loan rate through the Manhattan Commerical Rehabilitation Loan Program.

According to Rick Mann, past president of The Aggieville Business Association and vice president of Kansas State Bank, the loan program was set up to encourage rehabilitation of older structures in Manhattan.

At the time the 15 percent fixed rate for a commercial loan was a good deal, Mann said, but since the program was implemented, interest rates have declined.

To participate in the program, the improvement proposals for the store front must comply with the design guidelines and be approved by a review board.

The Aggieville Improvement Plan has been reviewed, adopted and recommended to the city commission by The Aggieville Business Association.

The plan is currently being considered by the Urban Area Planning Board. According to Gary Stith, community development director, the proposal is too detailed and must be "boiled down" before it can be adopted as part of the Land Use Plan.

Although the city commission receives the plan, before it can be added to the Land Use Plan it must be adopted by the planning board. D

Creating a design which will represent the image of Aggieville is not an easy task.

Everyone has a different impression of Aggieville and to identify what the Aggieville image is these impressions must be tapped into.

They must also be taken into consideration to successfully design a symbol which portrays the popular image of the area.

This is the task in front of the architectural design studio four at K-State and the second-year design class at the University of Kansas.

The two classes are to create a design for Triangular Park at the southwest corner of Bluemont and Manhattan avenues, outlined by the Aggieville Improvement Plan as the potential focal point of Aggieville.

That assumes that there is an image, Ronn Phillips, architecture instructor at K-State, said, more particularly that there is one image.

It can be an easy project, he said. That is if the person does it as he perceives it. But the difficulty arises when the assignment is to try and portray something as nebulous as the image of Aggieville.

The purpose of the project is to familiarize the students with the two universities and to allow them to compare and exchange ideas.

It is a five day sketch problem which began last Friday and will be reviewed in Lawrence today.

The project includes defining the problem which is to identify the nature or identity of Aggieville and to express it so everyone will know what it is.

There will be more successful designs than others, he said. But there won't be an overall winner because "when you declare a winnner, you simultaneously declare a loser."

"The real problem is not what the solution is but how you got it."

"Whatever they do is right," Phillips said, but in the end if the student looks at his project and realizes what he could have done different to improve it, then he has learned something.

According to Phillips, his students have an advantage over the students from KU. KU students were able to visit Aggieville last Friday morning, but they don't have that feeling of belonging.

"The feel of Aggieville can't be obtained in a couple of days. Their impression of Aggieville is them being in Aggieville," he said.

They can only see the obvious, he said. They won't be able to see the subtleties or acquire the sensitivity to the area which gives the K-State students the advantage.

"They are a bunch of outsiders with an initial impression," Kent Specklemeyer, instructor of the KU design class, said, and they may learn that their initial impression may not be the appropriate one.

But this fits into the learning process, Phillips said. In order to be able to design, the architect must know what it is he is designing, or be able to learn what it is, and successfully portray its popular image.

It is also important for the architecture student to learn how to communicate his idea to people.

The student has spent five years learning architectural skills, Phillips said, but if he can't communicate his ideas his design is useless.

"Architects all share a common language," he said. The best thing for an architecture student to do, he said, is to remember who he was before he was an architect — because it is those people he will be communicating with. D

Dear Customers,

I would like to take this opportunity to announce my new position as owner of Happy Tan. As previous manager, I have had experience working with you and feel I know where your interests lie.

Due to inadequate facilities and increasing interest, we will be relocating. The new tanning salon will be located in the new building at the corner of Claflin and Denison. Happy Tan will remain at its present location until construction of the new building is completed. Estimated date of completion is October 1983.

The new salon, "Southern Sun," will feature new and improved equipment including ten large tanning beds, personal selection of music with a relaxing atmosphere. These are just a few of the many improvements I have planned to make in the new salon, "Southern Sun."

Your past patronage has been appreciated and I am looking forward to serving you in the future.

Suggestions and new ideas are welcome.

Sincerely,
Aaron Molitor, owner

Aggieville Past

By GLADYS JACKSON

Aggieville: an evolution from a sparsely settled countryside on what was the west side of Manhattan to the first shopping center in Kansas and the most active business district in the city.

In 1889 and as late as 1904, Aggieville was nonexistent. But 1889 is credited as the year when the first business emerged.

Dr. J.W. Evans of Manhattan wrote in February 1950 that his father, G.W. Evans, and a partner named Hanson united in 1889 or 1890 to start the first business in the area where Aggieville now thrives. Evans owned lot 390, ward 4, south of the first alley north of Moro Street on Manhattan Avenue.

Hanson was a student who collected college students' laundry and delivered it as a means of making money for college. Evans approached Hanson with the proposition that if he would help him build a small frame building by the next summer, he could continue his laundry services and Evans would stock pens, pencils and second-hand books.

Together they built the 16-by-24 frame building. A partition divided it into two rooms. Hanson found a student who had experience as a barber, bought a barber's chair and started a barbershop as well.

However, the 1929 Jubilee edition of the Manhattan Daily Nationalist reported that the first business was John Harrison's grocery store in about 1904 in a building that had been used as a residence.

BY 1908 the only business establishment that existed was The Co-operative Bookstore. The brains behind this corporation was a group of students who attended the K-State Agricultural College and didn't like the idea of paying a "middleman profit" for textbooks and other materials required for classes.

Success of the bookstore was due to the "remarkable low prices," which attracted the majority of the college business. It was described in the 1913 industrial edition of The Daily Mercury as the "god-send to the students who are forced to go through college with a limited amount of capital." By 1913, it had prospered to become one of the leading stores among the 15 establishments in the "little city located at the corner of Manhattan Avenue and Moro Street," where Woody's Mens Shop now stands.

NEXT TO the bookstore, S.A. Baldwin constructed a building in 1908, which in 1913 housed a steam laundry, the Aggieville Laundry known as A.V. Laundry.

After 1908, more businesses began to sprout in Aggieville almost every year. In 1912, J.L. Johns opened a candy store in his especially-made building — and in 1929 the Tribune printing company occupied it.

Conflicting stories surround the origin of the name of Aggieville. One version indicates the district was coined "Aggieville" by a traveling salesman who called upon the merchants in the early 1900s. As a result, he sent a letter, addressed "Aggieville, Manhattan, Kansas," to a merchant friend, who displayed it in his store window. The name caught on with the customers and quickly gained its fame.

A more logical version is that the name evolved when the K-State Wildcats were known as the Kansas Aggies.

By 1913 Aggieville was coming into its own. It was described as the "thriving college suburb" that was "located at the very entrance of the college gate." The present gate that surrounds K-State used to extend to Varney's Book Store.

At the time, the suburban village was comprised of four grocery stores, two bookstores, two restaurants, a candy kitchen, ice cream parlor, drugstore, clothing store, racket store, furniture store, two barbershops, A.V. Laundry, an electrical supply house, The Aggieville Bakery, two tailor shops and last, but not least, a shoe shop.

The Nationalist heralded the merchants as "competent men who are town builders," adding that they were "proud of their city and will go to any extreme to herald the advantages of Aggieville to the world."

G.E. ROBINSON was the mastermind behind the A.V. Laundry. He deemed it necessary to build and equip an up-to-date plant in order to meet the demand for better laundry services. The growth of Aggieville and an increase in the number of students attending the college were also important factors in his decision. He equipped it with the latest patented machinery, took every possible measure for fire protection and hired experienced laundry workers.

For their time, all of the businsses had the distinction of being up-to-date. L.C. Shafer was credited with "conducting the most up-to-date, prosperous grocery and meat market in Aggieville" on 12th Street and Moro.

The Bungalow Dry Goods and Notion Store carried the description of being the nearest store and the handy store for college girls. It offered the dry goods and notions required for the sewing and cooking classes. It was literally the nearest because of its location at the entrance of the college gate, where Varney's now stands.

THE MAN at the helm of the electrical supply house was Jasper Fink. The Fink Electric Co. was known as the "heart of the student section of the city" because it provided the electricity for lighting the way for college students' nighttime studying.

The baker played a leading role in the creation of Aggieville as well. L.E. Starkey was the baker and the The Aggieville Bakery was his domain. Starkey's breads were rated among the best in the city. The Nationalist stated that without the baker's help, most homes would not have had on their tables the delicacies the baker took time to make.

The year 1915 paved the way for further significant progress, especially with the paving of Moro Street. Merchants organized for continued improvements in Aggieville to form the Aggieville Commercial Club. It was a group of 23 progressive businessmen who had worked industriously to pull the little city up from its simple beginnings.

THE CLUB proved valuable during its first year by securing delivery of express and parcel post to Aggieville and providing a post office branch station.

In the same year, J.L. Johns proved his business acumen by constructing the first building on the south side of the street, which began improvement of that side. John Harrison's claim to fame evolved when he constructed the first two-story business building in Aggieville.

The second floor of the Harrison building was used as a dance hall and the dance floor was the first in this section of the state to be rested on springs. The structure is currently occupied by Brother's Tavern and the Avalon.

In the 1930s it was named the Avalon Ballroom and Dorothy Blaker, a partner in Blaker's Studio Royal, recalled that every day around 5 p.m., people would go to the Avalon for sock hops. Ira Haynes, a owner of Haynes Style Shop, the oldest barbershop in Aggieville, also recalled bouncing on the spring floor while swinging to the sound of the big bands. He said all the big bands of the time performed at the ballroom.

A BIG BUILDING boom hit Aggieville between 1915 and 1930. Guy Varney's building went up in 1916 to house the College Book Store. A beauty parlor and offices occupied its second floor. In 1920, George Givens built between the Johns candy store and Shafer's market to form an attractive row of business buildings.

August 3, 1924 marked both the completion and opening date for the building that was to be occupied by the College State Bank. The bank offered extensive cooperation with the college students. Haynes recalled that when the bank went out of business because of the Great Depression, the bankers said they believed the bank would have had a better chance of survival if it had run more than "bookkeeping for the students."

ONE OF THE largest and the most important improvements came on the scene in 1926 when the Miller Theater (now the Campus Theater) was erected by Harry Miller. It was the center of entertainment.

W.P. Wareham also made his presence known in 1926 with the erection of the buildings which are currently occupied by Scots Ltd., Woody's Ladies Shop and Campbells. He continued to show his enterprising nature by building gas stations for the Long Oil and Beach Oil Co. in 1927 at Manhattan and Moro, where Stehley's Retail Liquor Store now exists.

Other business buildings that have architectural and contextural significance are those occupied by Kite's, Waterbed World and Ballard's.

In the midst of the building boom, Moro was widened and white way lighting was installed in 1922 and Manhattan Avenue was paved to Poyntz Avenue in 1923, finishing the link with downtown and welding the image of Aggieville into the framework of the town.

The artists continued to mold the masterpiece, with careful attention to each intricate part, as some new businesses emerged and old ones bade farewell. Today, this little city of diversified shops, bars and restaurants continues to flourish. D

Aggieville: a "solefull" experience, unusual shops and years of selling goods and services

Need some nuts and bolts? A galvanized tub?

Whatever you need, for whatever purpose, you can probably find it right here — in Aggieville — a mini-city that satisfies more than a thirst.

To the unitiated, Aggieville is a menagerie of bars, night clubs, restaurants, clothing stores, beauty parlors and theaters geared to please the college crowd.

What is it that draws people to its little stores, crowded streets, loud music and bright lights?

What is the "magic" of Aggieville?

Four businesses know, in part at least, because they reflect the very appeal and totality that make Aggieville what it is today — a modern community that provides up-to-date goods and services, not only for college students, but for townspeople, area residents and passers-by as well.

Aggie Hardware, 1205 Moro; Treasure Chest, 1124 Moro; The Art Box, 1321 Anderson; and The Palace, 704 N. Manhattan, are traditions in Aggieville. They've been in business a long time.

"In the 18 years I've been here," said Donna Rooks at The Art Box, "I've watched I don't know how many little shops open and close, but we keep plugging along."

She does not know why others fail, but she knows why The Art Box succeeds: "Walk-in traffic is just marvelous," she said, "especially among college students and families of students who stay at the Ramada Inn."

The shop, "the starting of Aggieville" on the west edge, is entering its 19th year at its present location. It is owned by seven Manhattan women: Rooks, who is consignment chairman; Donna Harkless, Erna Holmes, Betty Jacobson, Dorothy Rehschuh, Jane Stanley and Hariet Schroder.

The shop accepts arts and crafts on consignment from college students, townspeople, area residents and others. Currently, work by 125 artists from Kansas is represented, as well as work by Missouri, Florida, Illinois and Iowa artists. All work is screened before being accepted, Rooks said. Most items are taken for three months or during a season, such as Easter. Sometimes larger works, such as oil paintings, pottery, stained glass and sculpture, are accepted for a year, she said.

Work is primarily accepted from K-Staters, and originally the shop was established in 1964 by 14 women who were interested in young people. Though the number of shop owners has decreased, the purpose remains the same, and students, whether they be University art majors or just hobbyists, are welcome. Sixteen is the minimum age for the shop to accept work, Rooks said.

Shop hours are from 11 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Saturday. Each owner works in the shop one day a week, Rooks said.

The only business in Aggieville to open at 8 a.m. is Aggie Hardware, established in 1928. M.R. Casebeer owned the store for 35 years, and in January of this year, Brian McEwen became the new owner. He had worked in the store for three yeas, and "when Casey talked about retiring, I decided to go for it."

Since taking over, McEwen has remodeled the store's interior and refinished the original hardwood floors. He is now starting an exterior renovation "to bring the front back to its original 1928 look. I'm not one for fake fronts," he said, explaining his plans to clear away signs at the top to expose more of the building. "Signs cover some of the detailed work."

The renovation will enable the store to keep its old-fashioned atmosphere, McEwen said, while at the same time providing stock improvements.

"(Aggie Hardware) is the only place in town you can get a lot of stuff," McEwen said. "We carry a lot of different sizes of nuts and bolts — little pieces of hardware there is not much return on but people come in and buy." He said customers often tell him they can't find a certain item anywhere but at Aggie Hardware.

The store's main clientele are construction companies, McEwen said. Other customers are businesses in Aggieville and townspeople. Students buy some from him, McEwen said, but most of his trade is from contractors and townspeople; therefore, his business does not decline during the summer months.

The Treasure Chest feels the effects of summer vacation, however, and closes on Mondays, according to manager "Dixie," who prefers not to reveal her last name. Store clerks make up for it in October, however, when they often work past 11 p.m. when "everybody rents a costume for Halloween," she said.

The Treasure Chest specializes in costume rentals for all occasions, stocking "well over 5,000" costumes, plus accessories to make the costume complete, she said.

The store "carries the largest selection of costumes in the area," she said, and consequently, people drive from miles around to shop there. Locally, the college crowd with sororities and fraternities provide the biggest business, and "Fort Riley is also good," Dixie said.

The Treasure Chest also carries a large selection of adult gag gifts and novelty items for all occasions, a complete line of back issues of men's magazines, National Geographic, comic books, and used paperback books on a variety of subjects.

Dixie buys, sells and trades such items as used records, 8-track tapes, collectible beer items — signs, lights, trays, mugs and cans — precious metals, coins, stamps and miscellaneous items.

The Treasure Chest has been a Manhattan business in different locations for 20 years. It has been at the present location 10 years, with Dixie as manager for eight years. More costumes have been acquired, particularly during the past three years, she said, and because of demand, the number of children's costumes is increasing. The Treasure Chest can outfit anybody who has a costume party from age 6 to 60, she said.

According to owner Dean Taylor, "We're the only one (necessities and gift store) between here and Kansas City that sells wine and beer-making supplies — all equipment to make your own wine and beer. There are only two places in the state of Kansas where you can go in and see what you're buying."

Taylor said The Palace caters to all ages. "There's a little bit of something for everybody," he said, "and we have a lot of townspeople who come in because we have different and unusual items others don't have."

Opening in November 1929 as a drugstore, The Palace is now a necessities and gift store. Taylor became owner in July 1980. He said both the pharmacy and fountain were taken out in 1978, but he has kept part of the fountain and booths along one wall "for attraction."

The original, ceramic tile floor and the ice boxes that once stored 100-pound blocks of ice that kept the ice cream are still being used. Upstairs, operatic windows complete the old drugstore atmosphere.

This old-fashioned atmosphere is "an attraction and part of the history we don't want to take away," explained Taylor, who said he will keep the atmosphere as long as people appreciate the historic value. He believes, in fact, that college students and other young people "really do appreciate the antiquity of the store."

His reasons for keeping part of The Palace the way it was also stem from personal sentiments. Taylor recalls years ago when the store was a meeting place for teens. It also served as the "student union" until the early '50s, when K-State built its own Union.

Now, with the pharmacy, juke boxes and dance floor gone, The Palace is still a meeting place, of sorts, with its booths, gifts and non-prescription drugs and supplies. "We're the only place this close to campus that has these selections," he said.

And herein is Aggieville's magic — "the only place that has these selections." D

An Asphalt Jungle

By ALAN STOLFUS

It has all the qualities to be called the Plaza West, resembling Kansas City's prominent shopping district. People, horse-drawn buggy rides, nightlife and — cars. Hundreds and hundreds of automobiles descend on Aggieville every weekend except during the summer. To take them away would...well, it wouldn't be the Plaza West.

The stores don't present as rich of palate as those in Kansas City's Plaza and the skyline at Christmas isn't as majestic, but the streets have just as much impact.

Cars come in, circle, circle some more and leave. The classic cruising scene — but this is the Plaza West. In a confined area there are taverns, movie theaters, shops and restaurants all attracting people and their cars.

On that stretch are Rockin' K, Mr. K's, Dark Horse and the Campus Theater and when the movie lets out, he said, the "migration of the movie crowd" to the taverns ultimately causes "one hell of a fight" with the traffic.

If it were up to Edvy, traffic wouldn't enter Aggieville from the north on Manhattan or from the west on Anderson Avenue, thus eliminating the congestion in front of the Campus Theater at the corner of Moro and Manhattan.

"That would cut down on the showing off going on there in front of the movie theater," he said, referring to the way people recklessly drive through the intersection.

Complaints of such reckless driving are what the police department receives the most, Edvy said, and are "those that keep people out of Aggieville."

To Edvy, Aggieville would be the perfect place for a mall but, he added, the future wasn't up to him.

In fact, Aggieville's future does not foresee a change in the street layout.

According to Ken Ebert, managing partner of The Design Group, the Manhattan architectural firm which is designing the Aggieville redevelopment plans, the streets will remain unchanged in the new plan.

"We considred it (changing some streets) but we ultimately decided that it was no good," Ebert said.

According to Jerry Petty, city engineer, there has never been any serious condition that would merit changing the streets of Aggieville because "it works."

"The intersection of Manhattan and Bluemont is enough of an odd ball, with one—way traffic on Manhattan, that it works as slick as it could," he said.

Besides, he said, some vehicles wouldn't be able to navigate the corner if they were approaching from the west on Anderson. "If you're in the right place you can't make the turn in some full-size cars," he said.

JUST AS MUCH as rerouting the streets would change Aggieville's environment, so too would the presence of traffic signals, Petty said — if not adding more danger to the already packed streets.

One intersection — if any intersections were to get traffic lights — would be 11th Street and Moro. The accident potentiality would increase because of cars trying to beat the light on a busy night. It would only induce speeding where speeding is not needed, Petty said.

Not having traffic signals "goes against the traffic engineering grains," he said, but it works in Aggieville.

It is that all-important environment, of having the nightlife and traffic, that is trying to be protected.

Aggieville is one place that doesn't need a mall, Ebert said, because it would eliminate that vital element — traffic.

"Cars and people in them are part of the environment. We didn't want to eliminate that," he said, adding it would be like taking cars away from Kansas City's Plaza.

"What's the Plaza without cars?"

THE AREA IS so dangerous with all the people and cars, Petty said, that it is safe. "The people who frequent the area are aware of the situation," he said, and don't take unnecessary chances.

"There's a tremendous amount of traffic in Aggieville," Petty said. "For no bigger than it is there are a lot of cars."

Evidence of the street savvy is that there has never been a major accident between cars and pedestrians in Aggieville.

Certain precautions were taken, however, to help this record.

To eliminate drag racing on Moro, the intersection of Moro and 12th Street was made into a four-way stop, Edvy said, hindering the "worst offenders" of Aggieville's streets — high school students who repeatedly cruise the area.

But at least the high school students are cruising because they want to. Others cruise Aggieville during the day looking for the closest parking spot.

Because people want to park as close to a business as possible, Ebert said, there is a "perceived parking problem."

Parking analyses by The Design Group showed there was ample daytime parking, but the perceived problem is proximity — not quantity — and creates its own problems.

"The people you see driving around five times finally say 'to hell with it' and park in front of a fire hydrant," Edvy said.

To alleviate the perceived problem, Ebert said the group decided a square block for parking was needed. That was unacceptable, he added, because it would destroy too much of Aggieville. The only other solution was a parking garage.

John Sleezer

Cruising: part of the nightlight of a city within a city

THE REDEVELOPMENT PLANS propose a four-story parking garage with about 350 parking spots to be built in the public parking lot at Manhattan Avenue and Laramie Street. Costing about $2.3 million to build, Ebert said, the garage would also have shops on the street level.

This site was chosen because it was already public land and leant itself to providing immediate parking. The parking should be kept on the fringes of Aggieville, he said, so to lighten the traffic as much as possible in the area.

If Aggieville develops as The Design Group has planned, commercial development will spring up on the south side of Laramie and parking will be placed behind the buildings. Parking will be provided behind the buildings, he said, to provide immediate parking and not detract from the visible edge of Aggieville.

The garage would "conceivably attract more (cars and people) and that's what the merchants want," Petty said.

The parking garage would benefit those businesses on Moro, Al Trochim, owner of Al's Deli on Manhattan, said, and not his business on North Manhattan.

Trochim said his business is now suffering because of limited parking in front of his store

RIGHT NOW, parking spills over into the City Park and side streets on the weekends and sometimes into yards. Edvy said the people who live around Aggieville sometimes come home to find their driveways blocked or cars parked in their driveways and yards.

If cars are blocking a driveway, then they can be towed, but if one is in a yard the police can do little.

"Police power stops at the property line," Edvy said. "Home owners can't understand that the police can't do anything (when a car is in a yard)."

As long as enough space is open for cars to drive in and out of the City Park, cars can be parked there with no threat of being towed or ticketed, Edvy said. The city curfew is enforced only if there is "negligent behavior" — such as beer drinking in cars.

Although the streets do take a pounding from the large amount of traffic, they are in very good shape because of an asphalt overlay put down two years ago, Petty said.

Moro suffers from a football field effect, in which the center is higher than the sidelines for proper drainage. This has been a system that worked in the past, he said, so it was continued. Currently the center of the street is just as high as the sidewalks.

Over what was a brick street years ago, asphalt overlays have been put down, creating the hill and drainage problems. "Birdbaths" — places where water stands — form after a rain and the gutters fill with snow and ice, causing more problems, Petty said.

"It (gutters) does become a little problem with snow and ice and the curbs are higher than the street," Edvy said, "especially for an overweight person trying to get out of a small car."

Jim Schottler, manager of the Casual Encounter on Moro, has received complaints from customers about the gutters.

According to Petty, the next time Moro needs repairs the street will be "milled down" and leveled and then overlaid again with underground drainage in needed areas. D

Exploring the movie menu at the K-State Union: a kaleidoscope of feature films

Union vs. Aggieville:

By CHARLENE FARRELL

Bookstores, copy centers and theaters have their separate existence, but work together to serve students.

Aggieville and the K-State Union: both a mixture of ideas which cater to K-State students and find themselves at the mercy of the same. But, although the tug-of-war for the brunt of the sales market is a serious game, it is not a battle.

"I think if there's any competition created, it is good competition," Walt Smith, director of the K-State Union, said.

Not only is the competition "friendly," there is even an interchange of business.

"I probably use the Union as much as most students do," Ross Ballard, owner of Ballard Sporting Goods in Aggieville, said.

Be the competition fierce or not, both Aggieville and the Union possess inherent elements which make them unique. It is these qualities that act as a magnet drawing the student population through the front doors.

Aggieville has its roots buried in the campus and has established itself as a K-State tradition. The atmosphere is attractive and serves as a customer calling card.

A wide variety of services tucked into a few square blocks is also an advantage. This compactness and variety create an overlap of business — an afternoon beer may include a buy at the bookstore just because of the proximity.

The Union's tallies are just as prevalent.

Because $12 of each semester's activity fees is directed toward the Union, students have a vested interest.

"We call it the Student Union and students consider that home," Smith said.

Convenience is another plus. Distance, however short, involves a loss of time. And when college students' procrastination prevails, time is of the essence.

There are attractions to Aggieville and the Union as whole units, but the businesses within each have unique reasons for their success. And although a business may offer similar services, there may be remarkably strong differences.

Bookstores

"It's a healthy situation," said Mickey Schnedler, manager of the K-State Union Book Store. "Having two bookstores gives students the opportunity to shop in two different places."

According to Jon Levin, manager of Varney's Book Store in Aggieville, there are direct conflicts with some campus bookstores and outside businesses. But it is only a conflict among people, not the bookstores.

The two businesses do not just define an issue of competition but an issue of supply and demand for the approximately 19,000 K-State students.

"One bookstore probably couldn't handle the total population," Smith said.

Sometimes two bookstores can't handle the total population. This is seen in the difficulty the bookstores have in keeping needed textbooks in stock."

"In a lot of situations, some books are difficult to obtain," Levin said.

This book market is a situation unique to most bookstores serving students, Schnedler said.

"When a person goes into a grocery store and there's no whole wheat bread, he is satisfied to take white," Levin said. "With textbooks there isn't that choice."

Because of this situation, a good relationship between Varney's and the Union is a necessity.

According to Schnedler, the Union Bookstore receives the textbook orders from the faculty and then sends them to Varney's.

The real need for communication comes when the stores have inadequate stock.

"That is when time is of the essence," Levin said.

Cooperation may be necessary to facilitate service to students, but cooperation on pricing is seldom necessary. Book pricing enters few gray areas because the book publishers establish the retail prices of books, Schnedler said.

"We're not designed to have book wars," Schnedler said of the bookstores.

The University bookstore does enjoy advantages in one financial category, however — taxing. Because it is part of a state university, it is exempt from inventory tax (classified as property tax), state income tax and federal income tax. It is also housed in a state building.

Net pricing for university bookstores is another advantage the Union has. This practice offered by some publishers "gives college bookstores the opportunity to price a book at any price they want," without publisher constraints, Schnedler said. This policy is used by less than 10 percent of the publishing companies across the country, he said, but it is growing in popularity.

"In industry a lot of people are campaigning to increase the profit margins in textbooks. The cost of doing business exceeds the profit," Levin said.

The Union doesn't take advantage of the net pricing opportunity, Schnedler said. "It's been our policy to maintain a 20 percent profit margin."

Net pricing would be used only if the bookstore was "financially strapped" or the Union Bookstore needed to make some extra money for a Union non-income producing service such as maintenance and the check cashing service.

"At this point there's no reason why the bookstore would need to widen its market of profit with net pricing. The Union is in stable financial condition and no additional revenues are needed from the bookstore," Schnedler said.

But even this potentially volatile situation has not caused problems.

"Why fret?" Levin asked. "They are here and they are here to stay."

Perhaps where the competition is most evident is in the book buy-back category at the end of each school term. The bookstores offer different prices for books and base their pricing on different philosophies.

Traditionally, most bookstores offer 50 percent of the current list price for textbooks, according to Schnedler. If a book is being used the next semester and the bookstore does not have an adequate stock, the Union offers 60 percent to the student.

The 60 percent price is a policy used by only "half a dozen" bookstores across the country, he said.

Schnedler said when the Union Bookstore opened in 1970, a standard 50 percent return was considered.

"It was decided the Union really didn't need that additional money," he said. "It was better from a (public relations) standpoint to start out with that type of program."

Varney's offers a 50 percent return along with a token for 10 percent discount on non-textbook items in the store.

"We've thought about (offering 60 percent), but since we are not a subsidized operation, we feel we can't do that," Levin said.

Levin said the 10 percent token is a way to create a full circle — a complete customer who will return to the store.

"We want to be aggressive in buying books. The whole purpose is to add incentive to the students to sell their books here," he said. "It is also our way of saying 'thank you'."

The book buy-back system at the Union will take a significant change this semester with new computer terminals. They will serve a record-keeping function by giving the student a printout of what books they sold and the amount they received for each one.

It will also speed the process and make it more professional, Schnedler said.

"Automation is here whether we want to admit it or not," he said.

Automation is not yet at Varney's, but the time is not far off.

"When — not if — we get a computer, we don't contemplate putting the book buy-back system on it," Levin said."

Levin said Varney's will continue to evaluate the books "individually" and make sure there is adequate staff to handle the customers.

According to Dan Walter, textbook buyer at Varney's, the human element is what is important.

"You can get a lot of bad news — I was a student and I know there are some books you can get no money for — and I empathize," he said. "It makes a difference when you care about people."

Varney's is planning some changes for the book buy-back period this semester. Arrangements will be made for more room for buyers to speed the process, Walter said. There are also plans for an express lane for students selling fewer books.

Movies

From both come laughter, tears, anger and surprise, but the businesses are not even in the same league.

"It's a bit like comparing apples and oranges — we're so different," Bob Howard, city manager of Manhattan Commonwealth Theaters, said. "We don't compete and we don't try to."

Commonwealth Theaters and Union film committees do not compete, that is, with each other, but each has its own competition.

"Our biggest competitor mostly tends to be pay TV — HBO and Showtime," Tracy Komarek, 1983-84 chairwoman of the Union's Feature Films Committee and junior in labor relations, said. Campus activities such as ballgames and lectures also cause a problem, she said.

Both businesses draw upon the student population for their audiences. Howard estimated that at least 50 percent of his audience is from the campus. And because such a large part of the audience is students, the Aggieville theaters, Campus and Varsity, are more likely to provide movies with more student appeal.

Commonwealth is somewhat selective in where they place certain movies. "Gandhi" was shown at the Wareham Theater because, "there are some people that don't want to go to Aggieville at 9 or 10 at night," Howard said. There are no strict guidelines for this procedure, however. It would be too hard to stereotype a certain type of movie which would draw a big crowd in Aggieville, he said.

"We put a picture there that might fail at the other two extremes (Wareham and Westloop)," he said, using as an example a Disney film or a film that would interest senior citizens.

The Union theater's sole audience is the University community. This is its policy, but the practice is different. People not accompanied by someone connected with the University are usually allowed in.

"For the most part, we're pretty lax on the rules. Unless we know ahead it will be a big ticket seller, then we check IDs," Komarek said.

Although both Commonwealth and the Union operate theaters, the nature of their films makes competition pointless.

"Most of our films are films that Commonwealth would never touch," Sandy Nelson, 1982-83 chairwoman of the Kaleidoscope Film Committee, said. Kaleidoscope is in charge of films shown on Wednesdays and Thursdays, and usually presents foreign and more literary films. The Feature Films Committee, which shows films on Fridays, Saturdays and Sunday afternoons, is more concerned with "box office hits," Nelson said.

David Stuckey

The Campus Theater: when movie goers want the Aggieville decor

There is some overlap between Commonwealth and Feature Films Committee because both show box office hits. But because of the timeliness of the movies, there is still little or no competition.

Movie production companies do not release major films to campuses until after they have made their hit in the "outside" market. Once they are released, they are available at a cheaper price, according to Komarek.

If a movie is released on the outside market and does not do well, it is then released to campus theaters. However, if profits begin to soar on the national level after release to campuses, the production companies have the option to pull back the rights from campuses and re-release the movie on the outside market. This was the case with the movie "An Officer and a Gentleman," Komarek said.

Some bigger hits are not released to the university market for more than a year after their debut. "Star Wars" was not released to K-State for a year and a half and Komarek said he expects to get "Revenge of the Jedi" more than a year after its release.

If a film is available to both markets, the campus still has constraints. According to Nelson, if a film is showing within a 100-mile radius of the University, it cannot be shown on campus.

The Union film committee chairwomen and Howard agree there has been no major conflict because of this regulated procedure.

"Usually, we see a copy of their schedule and if we have something that would be competitive, we do not play it at all," Howard said.

Timing may be a disadvantage to the Union, but Nelson and Komarek believe there are many advantages to the Union's films.

"I think the biggest thing is that students are picking films for other students," Komarek said. Choosing the right films also helps to maintain a certain atmosphere in the Forum Hall that is absent in Aggieville.

"Where else do you see students dressed like monks to see Monty Python?" she added.

Because of the discount rate available to colleges, K-State is able to charge less for admittance. The show price has remained $1.50 for the past five years, Nelson said.

"It's the cheapest date you'll ever get," Komarek said.

Commonwealth's prices are determined by the size of the market, Howard said, and pricing decisions are usually made by the home office in Kansas City.

"Prices are different in Wichita because competitive film costs are higher and there are competitive exhibits," he said.

Shows in Manhattan cost $3.50 for adults and $2 for children.

Copy Centers

When the Union Copy Center opened in 1976, there were no similar copy centers in town.

Aggieville has since found space in its compact 6-square block area to house two — Kinko's Copies and Copy Center of Manhattan. All three are thriving, but only two for profit.

The Union Copy Center was designed as a service but now provides the Aggieville copy shops with strong competition.

"When it was originally set up 5-6 years ago, it was not to be in competition, but to be a service to the students," Jack Connaughton, assistant manager of the Union, said. "That was the initial groundwork."

It still maintains a service philosophy. But because the Union Copy Center does not need to make a profit to stay in existence, it makes the Aggie copy shops' job tougher.

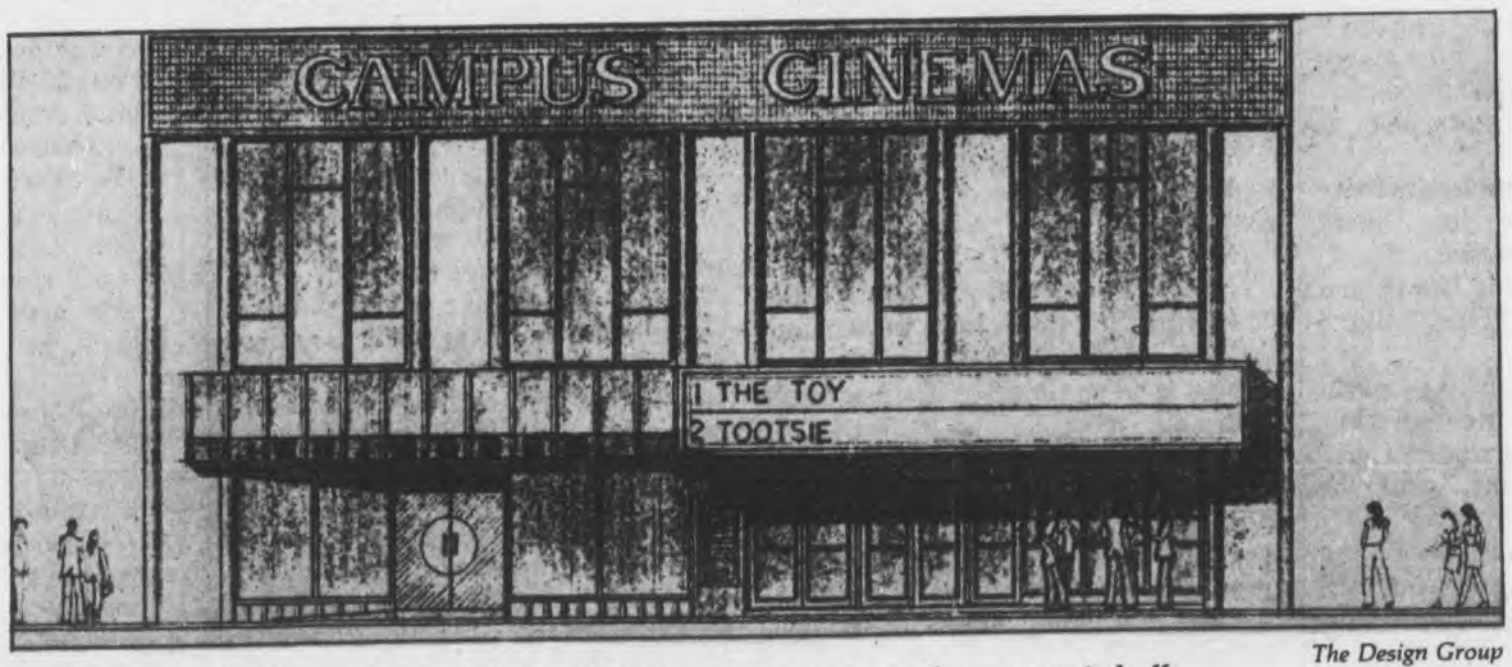
"We need to make enough to pay bills, labor and pay off our machine contracts," Connaughton said.

Kinko's has less flexibility in price determination, according to Ann Fitzgerald, manager. Because it is a nationally based company, the prices are set by the home office in Santa Barbara, Calif. They also have guidelines on bidding for larger projects, she said.

Approximately 40 percent of the Copy Center of Manhattan's business comes from students, according to Clark Rogers, manager. For this reason it is important to attract that market. But the reasons why students would go to an Aggieville copy center are a bit undefined.

"It's sure not because of accessibility," Rogers said. "You can't beat that location up there (Union)."

Rogers guessed the reason students come to Aggieville is because they get more "personalized service" along with less waiting.



"We just want to get the job done right and meet the customers' needs," he said.

Patronage also is determined because of the differences in the services the centers offer.

The three copy centers communicate little, but there exists no animosity among them.

"We send people over there (Union) all the time," Fitzgerald said. "We'd rather tell them where to go instead of telling them to wait or giving no copy at all. It's the only way to keep business."

Police squelch illegal marches in Polish cities

GDANSK, Poland (AP) — Riot police bowled demonstrators over with powerful jets from water cannons, laid down clouds of tear gas and charged with swinging truncheons into tens of thousands of May Day protesters Sunday in this Baltic birthplace of Solidarity. The scene was repeated in Warsaw and other Polish cities.

Lech Walesa saw the huge illegal turnout on the international labor holiday — despite government warnings and a hint of easier times as a reward for peace — as a strong vote for the outlawed independent union.

Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski took a different view. "Although there are still attempts to sow chaos, today these represent only a marginal fringe with no chance of success," the Polish leader said at the beginning of the official May Day march in Warsaw.

He also said that if peace prevails, "in coming days and months the real possibility to lift martial law, and to take acts and actions which accompany it, will arise."

Martial law was imposed Dec. 13, 1981. It was suspended last Dec. 30, but severe restrictions on labor organizers and dissidents remain in force.

Walesa said, "Great demonstrations took place. Obviously the police dispersed them, but so many people took part that it surpassed our expectations." The 39-year-old

Radical feminist accuses men of lies, betrayal

By RHONDA WESSEL
Collegian Reporter

Sonia Johnson bluntly described herself as a "heretic." Yet with the seriousness of that implication, she jokingly laughed it off.

Johnson, co-founder of the Mormons for ERA, spoke on "Women and the Quest for Justice" to a predominately female audience, Friday morning in McCain Auditorium. She was the last speaker of the semester for the All-University Convocation series.

Johnson and her ex-husband had lived in countries outside the United States which didn't have a "booming women's movement." Although she admitted knowledge of the women's movement, she had not known what it was all about.

In 1976, the Johnsons moved back to the United States.

"We moved to Virginia which was then, as it seems destined to remain, a very, very unratified state," she said. "And I began to hear immediately about something called ERA.

"Where I heard about it I was in church and what I heard about it was all horrible. I was distressed about this — not because I cared about ERA, I didn't even know what that was. I didn't even know what the letters stood for. I was distressed because I was hearing about it over the pulpit in church."

Johnson said the Mormon Church had always been political in her lifetime, but never had the church been so political that it discussed issues which it was for or against in its most sacred religious meetings.

Johnson became, as she called herself, a "feminist, a radical feminist" after the project director of moon exploration talked before one of the church's ward meetings.

"Ward is what we call Mormon congregations, which I now think is very appropriate," Johnson said.

The program director was very unprepared, according to Johnson. He really didn't even know what the women's right issue was all about. He did, however, read the proposed ERA amendment.

"I had read it before, but this time it grabbed my heart and soul and it hasn't let go yet."

Men, according to Johnson, have betrayed women. They are the "voice" of the law. The powerful can never treat the powerless (women) as equal or they lose their power. Therefore, men will never change laws granting women equal rights, Johnson said.

"The powerful always lie to the powerless. We can no longer listen to this voice because it is determined to keep us where we are.

"I feel so depraved. I feel so stupid because I hadn't seen this before. It is so reasonable. It is so obvious. I have been such a fool," she said.

"I was so angry that there wasn't a word in the men's dictionary for it. Fury is such a silly little word and rage is kind of sickly.

Poland

shipyard electrician helped found Solidarity and led it through the period of unrest that martial law squelched.

The anti-government outpourings were the biggest since Poles took to the streets in more than 50 cities and towns last August for the second anniversary of Solidarity.

About 40,000 union faithful turned out in Gdansk, As many as 15,000 protested in Warsaw, 3,000-5,000 were reported in the southern city of Krakow, the same number in the southwestern city of Wroclaw, and 5,000-7,000 in Poznan, western Poland. Western observers said crowds were dispersed with force in Wroclaw and Poznan, but not in Krakow.

Warsaw radio said protests also occurred in Lodz, Szczecin, Bydgoszcz and the Krakow industrial suburb of Nowa Huta, but did not say whether there was violence.

Reviewing the situation around the country, the radio said the illegal demonstrations were "unsuccessful" and "introduced a needless note of disharmony in the general atmosphere of the May Day celebrations." May Day is officially celebrated throughout the communist world.

Walesa attended noon Mass at a Roman Catholic church near his home, with his wife Danuta and five of their seven children, but stayed away from the demonstration in downtown Gdansk whose ranks included thousands of people who deserted the official march nearby. Walesa, who has been detained several times, is cautious about public appearances.

Most of the Gdansk demonstrators later tried to march the three miles to Walesa's apartment. It was cordoned off by helmeted riot police but the labor leader, who has just been reinstated in his old job at the huge Lenin Shipyard, went onto his balcony and flashed the victory sign to several thousand people who got close enough to see him.

Water cannon, tear gas and the club-swinging men in helmets were called in to drive off the crowd as Walesa watched.

Western reporters said dozens of people were detained in Gdansk and Warsaw, and some people received light injuries from police truncheons.

In a change of pace, the Solidarity underground has asked supporters to wear union badges and dress clothes to work on Tuesday, the traditional Polish Constitution Day that the communist regime does not honor as a legal holiday. A leaflet from underground leaders in Warsaw urged supporters not to "take part in any kind of demonstrations, rallies or street marches on May 3."

'Kick your elders,' Iacocca tells graduates

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — Chrysler Corp. Chairman Lee A. Iacocca urged University of Michigan graduates "to get so mad that you kick your elders in their figurative posteriors" over America's economic condition.

"I want you to get mad about the current state of affairs," Iacocca told about 6,000 degree candidates at the university's spring commencement Saturday. "I want you (to) move America off dead-center.

"Getting mad in a constructive way is good for the soul — and the country," added Iacocca, who has guided the No. 3 U.S. automaker away from near-bankruptcy.

"America's economic system is still the best there is," Iacocca said, but "the determination that once pushed America to great heights" is missing.

Man, 21, faces 'lover's lane murder' charge

AVON, Mass. — A 21-year-old man has been charged with murdering a woman at a lover's lane by running over her several times with his car, police said.

Peter Chamberlin, of Avon, was arrested Saturday in connection with the killing of Cheryl A. Goodhue, 22, of Brockton, Avon Police Chief Carl Miller said. Goodhue died Saturday morning, two hours after she was found partly clad and unconscious, her body bruised and a leg apparently broken, he said.

The chief said the woman apparently met Chamberlin on Friday night at a local bar.

Chamberlin was being held in lieu of $50,000 cash bail, with arraignment on first-degree murder charges scheduled for today.

Composer, pastor receive Lenin Peace Prize

MOSCOW — Greek composer Mikos Theodorakis and John Morgan, an American-born pastor in Canada, received the Lenin Peace Prize this weekend, the official Soviet news agency said.

Tass said Saturday the prizes were awarded for "outstanding services performed in the struggle for preserving and strengthening peace."

Other recipients were Liber Seregni, described by Tass as a "political and public figure" from Uruguay, and Mahmud Dervish, a Palestinian poet.

Theodorakis was praised as "an outstanding figure of the Greek peace movement, a consistent and irreconciliable fighter for the cause of peace, democracy and progress."

Morgan, 65, president of the Canadian Peace Congress since 1972, has played an active part in the campaign against U.S. cruise missiles tests in Canada and in efforts to get Canada declared a nuclear-free zone, Tass said.

Rubik's riches to aid Hungarian inventors

BUDAPEST, Hungary — Ernoe Rubik, inventor of the Rubik's Cube, plans to use part of the riches from sales of the puzzle to set up a foundation for struggling Hungarian inventors.

Rubik plans to endow a foundation for inventors with the equivalent of $175,000, the government newspaper Magyar Hirlap said Saturday.

Rubik teaches at the Budapest College of Arts and Crafts, where he originally designed the colored cube as a teaching aid for mathematics students.

Professor touts 'Love a Slug' attitude

SEATTLE — Sure they're slimy, ugly and bad for gardens, but that's no reason to hate slugs, a University of Washington professor says.

"They've unfairly been given a bad name," says Ingrith Olsen, a zoology professor. "Actually they're fascinating, lovely animals."

For five years she has been studying the creatures, often described as snails without shells.

"Slugs are very sophisticated and complicated in their behavior, even though they don't look it to some," she said. "For example, did you realize that every cell in their body has a nerve?

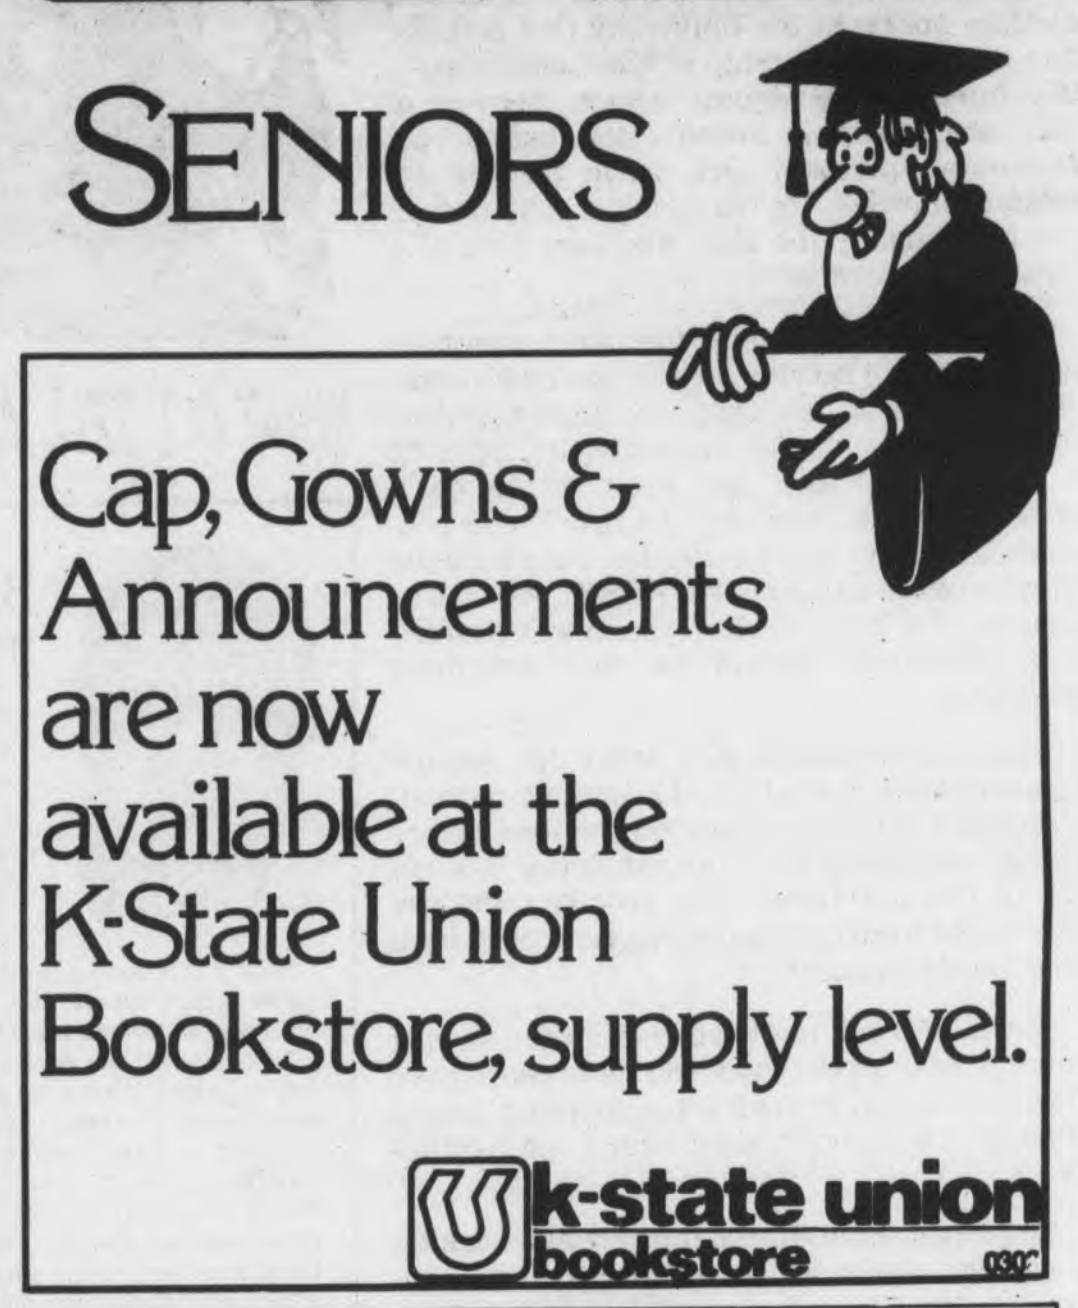
"And they survive in an environment as tough as ours...with skin that's only a single cell thick, unlike the human skin which is comparatively thick."

Olsen also noted slugs have both male and female reproductive organs.

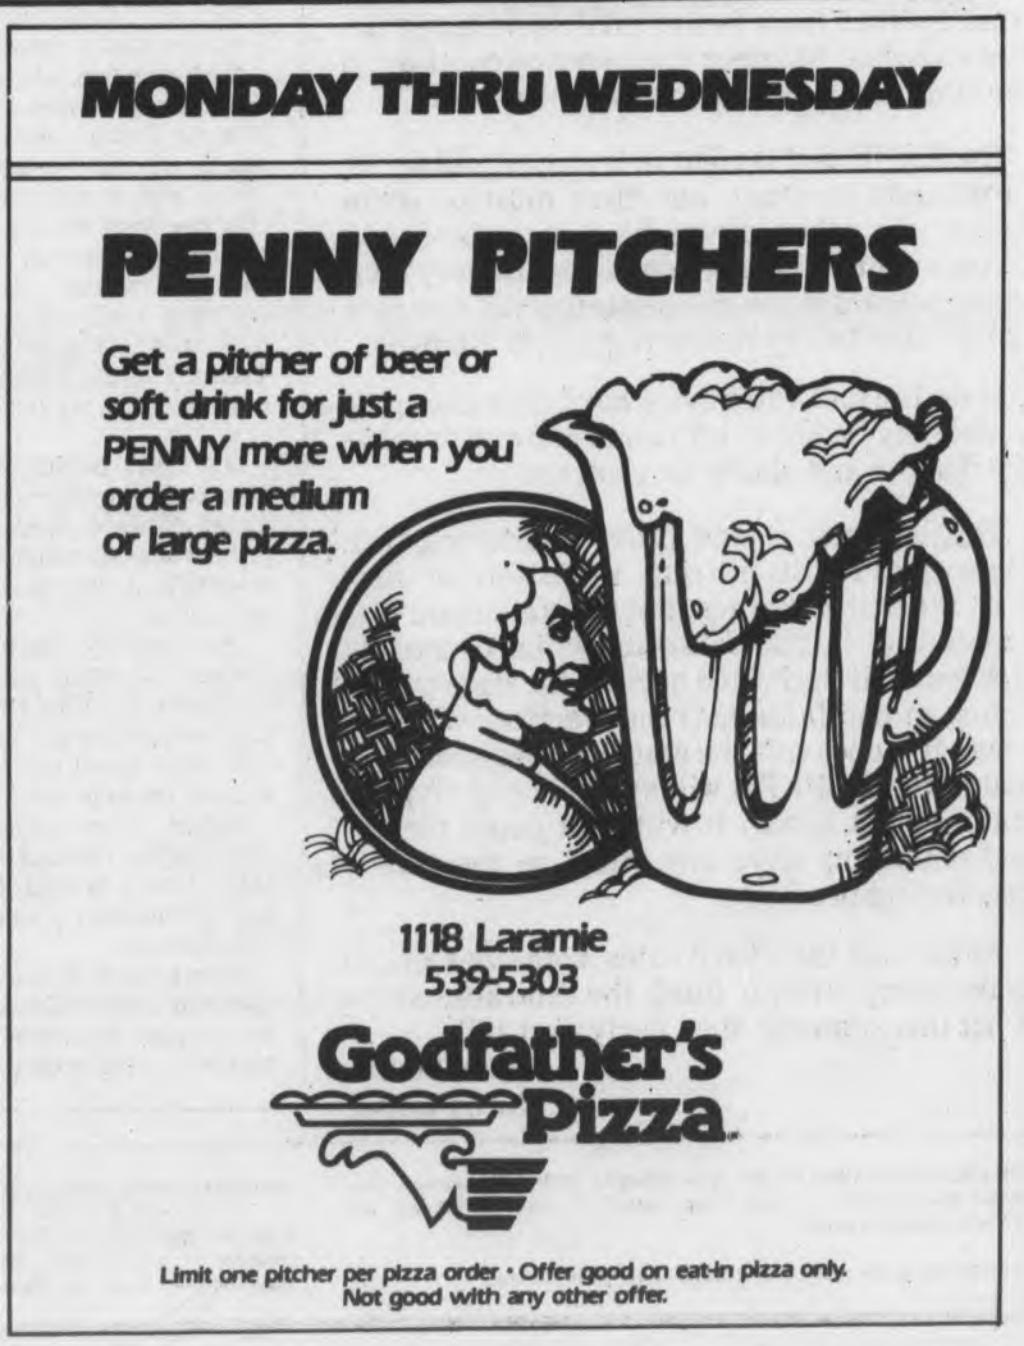
Some gastronomes note that slugs are closely related to the escargot, a snail treasured as a gourmet. But Olsen said she wouldn't eat slugs because there are other sources of protein. Besides, she's too fond of them.

Peaceful revolt brings long subway ride

NEW YORK — A group of subway passengers staged a peaceful revolt by refusing to get off a train that was ordered taken out of service at the Union Square station in Manhattan.



Despite the conductor's call that everyone leave the QB line subway, 75 passengers stayed on — and got a longer ride than they had wanted.



They were taken Saturday night on a non-stop ride to 36th Street in the Sunset Park section of Brooklyn, passing through 16 stations. The passengers got off and caught the next train back to Manhattan.

Weather

Bad news (again) in the forecast. It looks as though cloudy and cool temperatures will stay in town today. Highs around 50.

KAPE deserves finished contract

Two things are keeping the University office and clerical workers unit of the Kansas Association of Public Employees from finishing its first contract negotiations with the state of Kansas and the University. One is a logical and feasible request; the other seems to be more of a gallant effort.

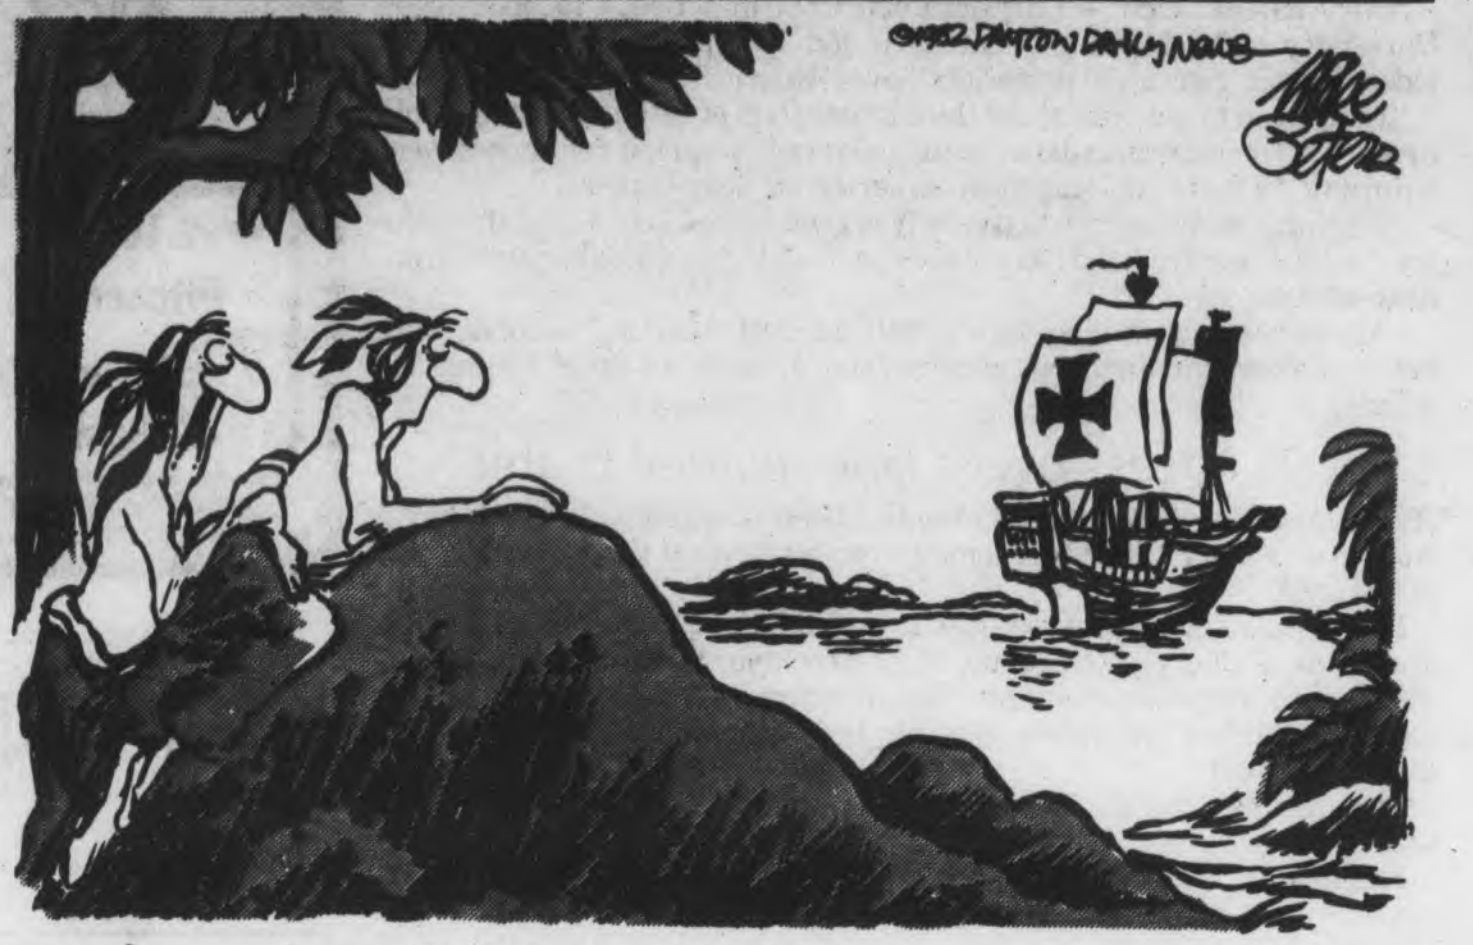
The unit, which represents every office and clerical worker of the University (but actually has a small membership of those employees), is composed of 99 percent women. Because of this, the group is seeking the use of accumulated personal sick leave for family-related illnesses. Its reasoning is that women are traditionally the ones who take care of a sick family member.

Being state employees, the unit's members fall under civil service jurisdiction and, according to Kansas Secretary of Administration Patrick Hurley, cannot negotiate sick leave on a unit-to-unit basis, but must do so on a statewide basis. However, the KAPE unit contends it has that right under the state's Public Employees Relation Board (PERB), which was formed after civil service system was enacted and, therefore, should be the pertaining guidelines.

Using accumulated sick leave for family-related illness is a valid and honorable request. University officials supported the idea before Hurley overruled it. If an employee has accumulated sick leave, why shouldn't she use that time (which is hers anyway), to care for a sick family member?

The KAPE unit has been in existence for just more than two years now and those years have been dominated by contract negotiating. Group members are proud of their efforts and rightfully so.

To protect those efforts, they are also seeking a savings clause which would hold their contract exempt from future civil service regulation changes. No other civil service contract in the state has a savings clause. Why?



The KAPE unit is right in trying to protect its hard-fought contract, but there must be some reason why other groups have not established savings clauses in their contracts. In every civil service contract is a clause stating the contract can be affected by future regulation changes.

If so, the unit will have a hard time changing it and may be better off compromising to settle the dispute and obtain its contract.

This summer should prove interesting with the special PERB hearing, scheduled for June 8, on the unit's charges that the state team was negotiating in bad faith about the dependent sick leave. If the PERB decides the state wasn't acting in bad faith, current practices will continue. If it does rule the state was negotiating in bad faith, the PERB will symbolically slap the state team's hands. It will be a paper victory and doubtfully have any effect on the state's negotiating practices.

Either way the PERB rules, both sides should make every effort to finish the contract soon — if not this summer, then early next fall.

Brian La Rue

The spelling game

What's in a (last) name?

I've asked myself this question a lot during my lifetime, but never as much as I have this past year.

I'd like to set the record straight. My name is Brian James LaRue. It has been so ever since I can remember, even though I've been called many names — some unprintable — in my lifetime.

LaRue, so I am told, is French for "the street." I think this is somewhat appropriate — as assistant opinions editor, and as editor this summer, my mind should be in the gutter (next to the street) for everyone who writes letters with double meanings. To me, it's just a name. I've even kind of grown used to it after 21 years.

My first name is Brian. It is not Bill, Bruce or Brad — these are the names of my father and my two brothers. It is not Bryan (sorry, but I don't like this spelling — sounds too fancy to me). It is not Johnny (the name of John Candy's obnoxious character on "SCTV"), Fred (the guy from Watergate — we're not related) or Lash (if you're old enough to remember this guy, I guess you could call me this — but not to my face, please).

I have been referred to as "Kanga." It's a cute nickname — I have it on the back of my basketball T-shirt. I wouldn't name my child this, though. I may be crude, but I'm not that obnoxious.

MY LAST NAME, technically, is LaRue. It is not Leroux, Layroo, Lerieux or any other combination of the above. When I write for the Collegian, have checks printed and other such things, I have a space printed between the a and R (La Rue), so confusion can be eliminated.

Unfortunately, this has not happened.

When I was in the Chanute public school system, I was not known as Brian. I was the "third LaRue boy," "Bill and Barbara's boy," "Bruce and/or Brad's brother" or "the little smart one who wears glasses." OK, fine. I learned not to let this upset me.

In fact, it was an asset at times. I was saved from some fights because some kid would mutter, "Hey, that's Brad's brother," or something along those lines, and the attacker would leave me alone. I rarely used this, however.

When I was in high school and junior college, the situation improved. I was known as the LaRue who played bass guitar; the one who made all A's; etc. While some teachers actually used my first name, most referred to me as "LaRue." I didn't really care; at least, they could spell my last name.

COLLEGES ARE THE ones that have a spelling problem. I received information addressed to "BRIAN LARUE," "BRYAN LAREU," "LARUE, BRIAN JAM," and, from Wichita State University, "RUE, BRIAN J. LA." What a way to be recruited. I was told "the computers address our mail; it's just the way the system is set up. We can't change it."

Well, I refuse to buy this argument. I've had some computer programming. The computer is only as smart as the person who programs it. It only does what it is told to do. But, it is such a little thing to worry about, right?

K-State has not been too bad about this. Most teachers asked me how I spelled my name. The Collegian allows me to spell it as I please (I use La Rue). You'd think I'd be pleased. Wrong.

The registrar's office and the financial aid office still refer to me as "LARUE, BRIAN JAMES." No space; hence, letters are addressed to me accordingly (Brian James Larue). I am listed in the student directory as "Larue, Brian Jam." The College of Education this year has changed my last name to LaRue, instead of Larue. However, I received a letter from the college a couple of months ago which was addressed to "Brian James Larue."

Considering the number of times my name has been in the Collegian this year, you'd think somebody would spell it right by now.

I'M NOT SURE what it will take to have the record set straight. Maybe proclamations by student and faculty senates would help. Maybe I could have "My last name is LaRue, not Larue" printed on business cards and hand them out to everyone.

Sometimes, I wonder what it would be like to have a name such as Smith, Jones, Johnson or Ward — a name that is easy to spell. One which isn't misspelled by some computer (or computer operator).

I know — I'm just touchy. Many people have their names misspelled. Heck, some have probably had their names misspelled in the Collegian, of all places.

I think I'll stick with LaRue. I have too many checks printed to change it now.

I wonder if Fred is my long lost relative?

Disorganization, weather hinder 'Get Lost' concert

By SUE SCHMITT
Staff Writer

It was a day for sunshine, Frisbee, foot-long hot dogs and music. The Old Stadium had all that and more Sunday at UPC's "Get Lost Concert." Kuzak, The Voices, The Raves and The Zoo were the featured bands.

The day would have been almost perfect had it not been for clouds, wind and poor organization. Although it didn't rain, the clouds did hamper potential suntanners and combined with the wind to cool the temperatures.

The concert seemed poorly organized. It started more than an hour and a half late, and the breaks between bands seemed endless.

There were about 350 people in the audience at one time, but as the weather worsened the crowd dwindled to about 50 people. The poor turnout could be blamed on a number of factors — upcoming tests, poor weather or maybe just lack of interest.

The bands were diversified, offering a variety of music for many different tastes. There was something for almost everyone at the concert.

Kuzak started the concert with good old rock'n'roll and some rhythm and blues. The band looked like an old '60s band and brought back some of the oldies but goodies. Overall, Kuzak's performance was enjoyable. The band had a strong rhythm section, but it was the guitar player who stole the show. The main problem with the show was that it didn't seem to last long enough.

The Voices followed Kuzak, playing more contemporary rock. The clouds repeatedly tried to block the sun, but the sun won out at least temporarily, and the crowd grew. The Voices were definitely loud enough as the sound echoed in the stadium. The group played well and the audience response was good.

It took quite a while for the bands to set up their equipment between performances, but the audience found ways to pass the time. Lying in the sun, throwing Frisbee and playing hacky sack were the more popular activities.

The Raves took the stage and started playing its own brand of music. The music appealed to those who were there to dance. The band had played mainly new wave music, but offered some older music as well. The quality of music The Raves played didn't match up to the performances of the other bands at the concert. The band had an intonation problem and the songs were repetitive. The Raves' performance lasted much longer than the two other bands' performances. In fact, it seemed to go on forever.

The sky filled with clouds by the end of The Raves' set, and the crowd dwindled. The Zoo, a reggae band, was to perform next, but it was more than an hour and a half before the group got set up and ready to play. A few hardy souls braved the cold wind blown up by thunder clouds and waited for the band to play.

The Zoo, with its tight, professional performance, was the concert highlight. Those who braved the weather heard a good representative sample of the kind of music The Zoo plays. The reggae almost brought the sun back to the stadium, but the wind continued to blow and the clouds kept threatening rain.

Although the weather didn't cooperate fully and the concert didn't run smoothly, most people there had a good time.

Comic magician amazes capacity crowd in 'for adults only' evening performance

In a show that could be termed "for adults only," The Amazing Johnathan joked, juggled and tricked his way through an hour-and-a-half performance much to the delight of the capacity crowd at the Union Catskeller Friday night.

Johnathan Saeles is a 23-year-old comedian/magician from Detroit who got his start doing street shows in San Francisco. He has opened for many top-name entertainers such as Jefferson Starship, Tanya Tucker and Leon Russell and is currently on an 80-city tour which includes many college campuses.

Saeles' act began with the apparent destruction of a borrowed dollar bill from a volunteer in the audience. What followed was a series of events that both amazed and amused the audience and the volunteer.

The bill was torn on the corner and through a series of jokes and stories was apparently burned to ashes. In the end the dollar was discovered — unburned — inside an uncut orange.

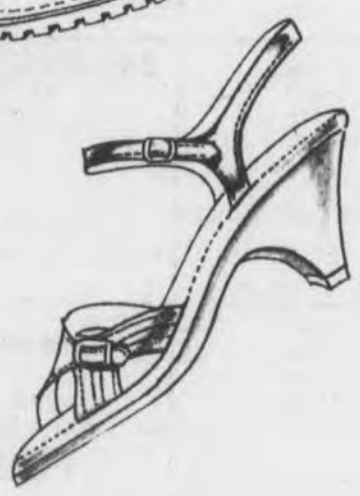
From there, Johnathan progressed to a juggling act that included hilarious one-liners too risque to mention and continued on to what he termed "punk magic."

Wearing a skin cap that featured a Mohawk haircut and sporting rhinestone sunglasses, Saeles appeared to eat five very sharp razor blades, laughing and joking all the way. He then pulled the blades from his mouth using a string, and once again showed the audience that the blades were real. While all this was going on, fake blood gushed from his lips.

After some more jokes with volunteers from the audience, Saeles ended the show with the amazing "zambi ball" which danced through the air under a handkerchief.

His encore included another volunteer who was by that time wary of his tricks. Johnathan then proceeded to make balls of toilet paper disappear in a way that was easily detected by the audience but not easily seen by the volunteer.

After each disappearance he would ask the volunteer what happened to the toilet paper. As the volunteer concentrated on Johnathan's one hand, the entertainer would use his other hand to drop the balls on the floor where the confused woman couldn't see them but audience could.



In the process, Johnathan did everything he could to keep the woman's attention. Eventually he revealed to the woman how the trick was done, only adding to her embarrassment.

Weekend activities honor Hoeflin, feature first Forum on Family Issues

By JUDY MILLS
Collegian Reporter

Ruth Hoeflin, dean of the College of Home Economics, will end 25 years of leadership at K-State this June. To honor her, a weekend celebration featured the first Ruth Hoeflin Forum on Family Issues.

Ruth Hoeflin

At a dinner in Hoeflin's honor Friday night in the Union Ballroom, Rep. Joe Knopp, R-Manhattan, presented an honorary resolution in Hoeflin's honor. It was also announced that the Stonehouse Day Care Center was to be renamed in her honor.

"Taking Charge of Change" was the topic of keynote speaker Nancy Dolton at Friday's forum in Union Forum Hall.

"This is the first annual Ruth Hoeflin Forum on Family Issues," Elnora Huyuck, associate dean of the College of Home Economics, said. "You are here at a beginning of a tradition. We were wondering how to do honor to Ruth as she moves from her leadership position."

Dolton, manager of consumer information and education for the Clorox Company and president-elect of the American Home Economics Association, spoke on the importance of home economists to work with the family of the future.

"We need to be looking at the influence of change on families and how the Home Economists Association can help with this change. Change is part of home ec's heritage. We need to capitalize on this change.

"What types of child care will evolve to help two-income families? What about new technologies, what impact will this have on families? Our population is getting older. How will we handle this?" Dolton asked.

A round-table discussion followed the speech with Dolton; Suzanne Lindamood, associate professor of family economics; and Judy Rollins, head of the Department of Family and Child Development, participating.

Hoeflin, who has been at K-State since 1957, started her career teaching small children.

"I started out as a nursery school teacher. The idea of high school teaching scared me to death — those big kids. I figured in a nursery school I would be taller than my students."

Hoeflin is scheduled to take a one-year sabbatical to study 52 women home economics graduates from K-State.

"I've kept track of them and I plan on visiting them in their homes and jobs and meeting with their families," Hoeflin said.

Hoeflin, who never married, has no regrets about not doing so.

"I grew up in a time when women chose between a family or a profession. I'm a very independent, single woman — but I'm happy. I don't have time for a family. If I could be lonely for 24 hours (to catch up on her work) I'd be happy."

Twisters, floods pound Missouri over weekend

PACIFIC, Mo. (AP) — Scores of people were evacuated from their homes Sunday as Missouri got pounded with more tornadoes and torrential rains that caused flooding across much of the state, authorities said.

At least five tornadoes were sighted in central Missouri, the National Weather Service said.

The Missouri Highway Patrol said a tornado touched down in the business district of O'Fallon, causing major damage. No injuries were immediately reported.

High winds, which could not be confirmed as a tornado, damaged an apartment complex and a church in Wright City, Mo, causing two minor injuries.

A twister also reportedly touched down in LaFayette County about 20 miles east of Kansas City, destroying a barn and machine shed but causing no injuries, authorities said.

A tornado near Linn, in Osage County, knocked over some power lines, causing scattered power outages in the area, a police spokeswoman said. No injuries were reported.

And a tornado hit a mobile home and uprooted some trees southwest of Jefferson City, said a Cole County deputy sheriff.

Flash floods developed throughout eastern and southern Missouri as rivers and creeks swelled out of their banks from downpours that dumped more than 2 inches of rain in short periods of time, said Chester Schulze, an official with the State Emergency Management Agency in Jefferson City.

A STATE OF EMERGENCY was declared Sunday in Franklin County, where scores of residents who live near the Meramec and Bourbeuse rivers were driven from their homes by floodwaters, said Neal Brockmiller, the county's director of emergency preparedness.

Brockmiller said county law officials and firefighters from several communities were using boats and four-wheel drive vehicles to evacuate residents whose homes were surrounded by water.

Brockmiller said the Meramec was expected to crest early Monday at Pacific at between 25 to 30 feet. Flood stage is 18 feet, he said.

"Unless there's a miracle, we feel the town (Pacific) will be in water by (Monday) morning," Brockmiller said. "And nobody here's counting on a miracle."

UPSTREAM FROM PACIFIC, Franklin County officials declared Sullivan and St. Clair under a state of emergency after receiving information that the Meramec was rising six to eight inches an hour.

The river is expected to crest Sunday night within about four feet of the record levels in December, said Terry Wilson of the Franklin County Civil Defense.

Downstream from Pacific, a number of towns — including nearly deserted Times Beach — are waiting to see how badly an incoming storm system will leave them.

A spokesman for the National Weather service said the river would remain about 10 feet below last December's record flood stage without additional rainfall, but that heavy rains were predicted in the area Sunday night.

NORTH OF ST. LOUIS, there were more evacuations caused by overflowing of the Cuivre River and smaller streams.

"We've notified some people to move out of one section, possibly 15 to 20 people, on account of high water," said Lincoln County Sheriff's Deputy Brian Chrismer.

Highway 79 along the Mississippi River was blocked near Winfield, and portions of Foley were reported underwater also, said Chrismer. No sandbagging was reported underway there Sunday, but the water patrol and rescuers were standing by, he said.

Meanwhile, the Mississippir River is expected to crest Monday at Winfield near flood stage. The water will continue to rise until Wednesday at St. Louis, the National Weather Service said, when it will crest about 4.5 feet above flood stage.

And the Missouri River is above flood stage from Hermann to the east. It is expected to crest Tuesday at about 31.5 feet — nearly three feet below last December's levels.

NEARLY 25,000 MISSOURIANS were driven from their homes by massive freak flooding in early December. President Reagan responded by proclaiming 15 counties disaster areas.

Floodwaters and lightning caused an power outage early Sunday for about 400 Crawford Electric Cooperative customers in Franklin, Crawford and Washington counties. A company official said crews hoped to have service restored by Sunday afternoon.

Officials investigate attack; Shultz may have been target

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Two rockets streaked over the U.S. ambassador's residence where Secretary of State George P. Shultz was sleeping early Sunday, and officials said they were investigating whether the attack was an assassination attempt.

First Lt. Alan Burghard, a Marine sentry, said the 122mm Chinese-made Katyusha rockets barely missed the single-story villa of Ambassador Robert Dillon in the Beirut suburb of Yarze.

He said there were no injuries or damage at the residence, but the rockets could have inflicted "a lot of injuries and destroyed a good section of the ambassador's house" if they had hit it.

The attack came less than two weeks after terrorists blew up a truck packed with explosives outside the U.S. Embassy in Beirut, killing at least 49 people including 17 Americans.

"I was vaguely aware of the fact it was taking place," Shultz said. "Lots of times in World War II I heard those sounds," said the 62-year-old former Marine. He said he would not hesitate to return as scheduled Tuesday after a shuttle to Israel.

Shultz's comments came before it was revealed that the rockets were apparently aimed at the residence. Later as his entourage flew to Israel, he told reporters "I'm not intimidated, whatever they are trying to do."

John Hughes, State Department spokesman, said it was too early to say if the 1:30 a.m. attack was an attempt to assassinate Shultz, on a presidential mission to try to complete an agreement for the withdrawal of Israeli, Syrian and Palestinian forces from Lebanon.

In Washington, Undersecretary of State for Political Affairs Lawrence Eagleburger, appearing on the CBS television show "Face The Nation," said reports about the rockets were "grossly exaggerated."

"I hate to burst your balloon, gentlemen," he said. "There were apparently a couple of explosions ... and they were related to some battling that was going on between various Lebanese groups."

Burghard said he believed the residence was the target "since it was directly within the flight path of the rocket ..."

But Marine spokesman Maj. Fred Lash later said it still was not known if the residence was the target. "I can't rule that out," he said. "But I can't rule it in. Who fired it, why they fired it and what was the target, we don't know. It's under investigation."

Burghard said the rockets "flew directly over the top of the residence, both landed 100 yards away. One exploded and one continued to travel like a torpedo for 200 more yards before it exploded on the surface."

He said Marines guarding the ambassador's residence reported the rockets "barely cleared the top of the building."

Burghard displayed charred and twisted pieces of the gray metal rockets, which he identified as Chinese-built Katyushas. He said many warring militia factions in Lebanon have Soviet and Chinese weaponry.

Weather

Springfield Friday night appears to be more extensive than earlier estimated, a state official said Sunday.

National Guard troops remained on duty to help police prevent looting keep out sightseers.

Unofficial estimates placed damage at up to $15 million, but Chester Schulze, a spokesman for the State Emergency Management Agency, said it looked as if the final figure — expected to be released Monday — would be larger.

Schulze said 100 homes, five businesses and a church were destroyed. He said 125 homes were severely damaged and another 375 were slightly damaged.

Police said Melissa Daniels, 16, of Springfield, died after she was hit by flying debris while running from her car for cover, said police Lt. Randy Clutter.

Carl Spencer, 68, died of a heart attack as the tornado was ripping through town, but police did not attribute his death directly to the storm.

Lester Smith, 72, the only person reported to have been badly injured, remained in serious condition Sunday at Cox Medical Center in Springfield.

Hospitals reported 17 others were treated for minor injuries.

Students race cement boats at annual engineering event

Staff/Allen Eyestone

Two contestants from Salina's Kansas Technical Institute row their concrete canoe past a buoy during a men's preliminary race.

Staff/Allen Eyestone

A group of Missouri students wait by the line-up of canoes early Saturday morning during the judging competition. Civil engineering students from 12 schools were involved in the event.

By SALLY NIBLETT
Collegian Reporter

Wet Dream, On Top, Over Easy, Turbulence, Rock, Rockell and Row Balance were among many cement canoes present at the 10th Annual Cement Canoe Race Saturday at River Pond below Tuttle Creek Dam.

The canoe race is sponsored each year by K-State civil engineering students.

Civil engineering students from Missouri, Nebraska, the University of Kansas, North Dakota, South Dakota, Texas A&M, Arkansas, Kansas Technical Institute, University of Missouri-Kansas City, Oklahoma and Oklahoma State came to float their boats.

"Most people just come here to party — that's what we're here for," one University of Nebraska student said.

In addition to the canoe races, a construction and design competition was also an attraction. A report explaining method of construction, materials used and criteria for decisions was required along with a display of pictures of the canoe construction.

Also this year — for the first time — a concrete Frisbee throw was part of the fun.

CHUCK MAY, senior in civil engineering and president of Chi Epsilon, civil engineering honorary, said Frisbee contestants were practicing for a national contest, scheduled for late September in Kansas City, Mo. The contest will be sponsored by the American Concrete Institute (ACI).

Canoes in the contest are built with concrete that is much lighter than normal concrete. It is a mixture of expanded shale, cement, water and styrofoam beads.

A fiberglass mold is first made and then a wire mesh is put over it. The concrete and styrofoam bead mixture is then worked through the mesh.

After the canoes have dried, the engineers sand, seal and paint their masterpieces.

"Students work most of the semester (on their canoes) and work pretty hard on it," Dan Miller, senior in civil engineering, said.

MILLER SAID that after the race is finished, the canoes are usually destroyed, sent to the bottom of the lake, put in the basement of the engineering building, or placed on display. As part of the rules, new canoes must be built each year, he added.

Al Meitl, junior in civil engineering at the KU, said the cement canoe construction and races result in good interdepartment relations.

"It gives you a chance to meet the other students and instructors," he said.

The canoes don't always float, as North Dakota State University found out. Each school is required to fill its canoes with water. If the canoes sink they are disqualified. ACI judged the event.

ONE END of each of NDSU's canoes sank. The judges said if more flotation was added the canoes could race. An empty pony keg and lots of duct tape worked for one, and pieces of stryrofoam and duct tape worked for the other.

Rules for the race require two people per canoe and a 180-degree turn at the end. The canoers race 500 feet and back, Miller said. If one canoe gets out of its lane and interferes with another, it is disqualified.

May said K-State students tried a new canoe design this year.

"We tried to get a shallow V-hull to gain speed. Other years we've had flat-bottomed canoes, but they dragged pretty bad. We may have some stability problems with these," he said.

A $30 fee is charged for a one-canoe entry and a $35 fee is required for two canoes. May said the money is used for the kegs and the noon picnic provided. He said ACI donated $75.

THE TRAVELING trophy was awarded to KU for the highest point total. Missouri placed first in the men's division and KU was first in the women's division.

KU also took first place in the faculty and coed divisions. The University of Nebraska won the construction and design award.

"It all went real well. We had a great turnout for the race and the weather stayed decent for us. Everything went real well, except KU was a little overpowering," May said. "Everybody who came down seemed to have a good time."

Missouri sweeps double-header from Wildcats

By BRAD GILLISPIE
Sports Editor

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Sporadic hitting bursts by the University of Missouri, combined with poor hitting on the part of K-State, resulted in a pair of losses for the Wildcats on Saturday.

A scheduled double-header on Sunday between the two teams was rained out and rescheduled for today, giving the Wildcats more time to regroup and ponder what went wrong on Saturday.

Missouri won the first game against the Wildcats, 14-3, in a game that was called after seven innings according to the new 10-run rule.

K-State drew first blood, scoring one run in the top of the first inning. Mark Teague led off with a single and went to single on a balk by Missouri pitcher Dave Otto. A single by Kerry Golden sent Teague to third and another by Scott Pick drove him in.

The Tigers struck back, however, scoring three runs in their half of the first to gain a 3-1 lead.

K-State was not going to lie down and die this early, though. The Wildcats tied the game up in the top of the third inning, when Otto gave free passes to first base to both Golden and Cary Colbert, as both walked with one out. The two runners advanced to scoring position on a wild pitch by Otto, and Pick drove them in with a two-run double.

THE SCORING was over for K-State, however, and Missouri was just getting ready to put the game far out of reach of the Wildcats. The Tigers hit K-State starter Lynn Lichter for eight more runs in the fifth to push their advantage to 11-3. The sixth inning went no better, as Missouri increased the lead to 11 runs, 14-3, as three more Tigers crossed home plate.

Lichter took the loss for K-State, pushing his record below the .500 mark to 2-3. Otto earned the victory to increase his mark to 6-2.

The K-State batters were even colder in the second game, as Missouri pitcher Greg Larsen threw a seven-hit shutout at the Wildcats.

K-STATE PITCHER Chris Hamilton threw a good ballgame for the Wildcats, giving up only eight hits. The hits came in groups, though, and the Tigers turned the hits, combined with some walks by Hamilton, into 10 runs.

Missouri opened up in the first inning, scoring three runs in the bottom of the first. Hamilton took control after that, pitching four innings of hitless ball. He began to falter later in the game, though, and surrendered seven more runs in the bottom of the sixth, giving the Tigers the final margin of the game.

The loss went to Hamilton, who pitched the entire game for the Wildcats. Hamilton's record fell to 2-2. Larsen's record rose to 5-3 with the win.

Colbert and Pick led the K-State hitters in their foiled attempt against the Tigers. Colbert went 3-3 at the plate in the second game and finished 3-5 on the day. Pick went 3-7 on the day, with two singles and a double, and drove in all three of K-State's runs in the double-header.

The losses dropped K-State's conference record to 1-13 on the season, 17-20 overall. Missouri is now 5-6 in the Big Eight and 21-11 overall. The two teams are scheduled to meet again this afternoon for a double-header in Columbia to make up for the games rained out Sunday.

Lady 'Cat Gary receives honors

Priscilla Gary, the K-State women's basketball team's celebrated player, added more honors to her previous awards as she was named to the Kodak first-team all-American team and the player-of-the-year for Middle America by the Women's Sports Foundation.

Gary, the Lady 'Cats' 5-foot-5 guard from Memphis, Tenn., also picked up honorable mentions by the National Sports Writers group. She averaged 18.3 points per game this season, leading the Lady 'Cats to a 25-7 record and a final 16 finish in the NCAA tournament.

Jackard takes third in conference as tennis team winds up in sixth

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — The men's tennis team ended the season with a sixth-place finish at the Big Eight Tournament here Friday. The Wildcats were paced by No. 1 seed Jeff Jackard, who took third in his division.

Jackard, a freshman, defeated Gary Osteen of Colorado, 7-6, 6-2, in the finals to net the third-place finish. He was beaten by Oklahoma State's Scott Nichol in the semifinals for his only loss of the tourney.

Kris James got K-State's only other win in the finals, knocking off Scott Barber of Iowa State, 6-1, 5-7, 6-1, to salvage fifth place in the No. 4 singles.

Three Wildcats finished sixth in the singles division, as Curt Thompson, Gary Hassenflu and Mark Hassenflu lost their finals matches. Thompson, the No. 2 player, lost to Nebraska's Brian Edwards, 7-6, 6-3. No. 3 player Gary Hassenflu fell to Charles Stearns of the University of Kansas, 6-3, 6-2, and Mark Hassenflu was defeated by Dave Reynolds of Iowa State, 6-4, 6-4, in the No. 5 competition.

K-State's top finisher in the doubles competition was the No. 2 team of James and Thompson. After beating a Colorado team in the first round, the duo lost to Oklahoma State's Curt Loomis and Peter Mallett, 6-3, 6-1, in the second round, and was defeated by Brian Edwards and David Schultz of Nebraska in the finals, 7-6, 6-1.

Jackard and Gary Hassenflu, K-State's No. 1 team, finished fifth, beating Stearns and Michael Center of Kansas, 6-4, 7-6, in the second-round match, then losing to Gary Osteen and Bob Bateman of Colorado, 7-6, 6-7, 6-0, in the finals.

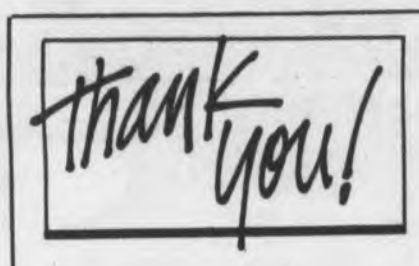
The 'Cats' No. 3 team of Kent Smith and Brady Tinker finished seventh, losing to Eric Parker and Tom Grotewold of Colorado, 6-3, 6-2, in the second round.

Oklahoma State won the conference title with 103 points. Oklahoma was second with 93, Nebraska took third with 77, Colorado was fourth with 56, Kansas finished fifth with 45, K-State had 37 points and Iowa State ended up in seventh with 30. Missouri does not have a tennis team.

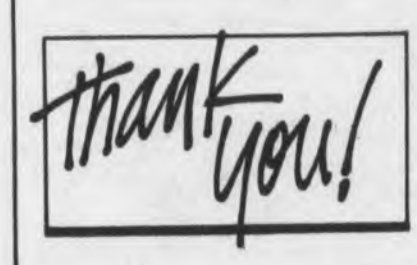
Golf team finishes 17th in tourney

DES MOINES, Iowa — Struggling through unfamiliar territory, K-State's men's golf team finished 17th out of a field of 24 teams at the Drake Relays Golf Tournament here Friday.

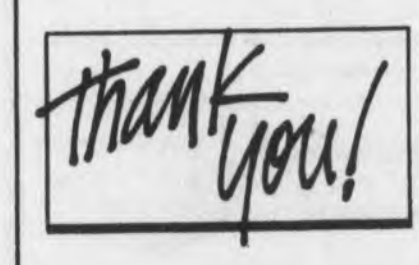
The teams played 36 holes Thursday at the Des Moines Country Club and 36 at the Hyperion Country Club in Des Moines on Friday.



Jim Fiscella led the Wildcats with rounds of 88, 79, 78 and 75 for a total of 320. Robert Sedorcek shot an 84, 80, 83, 77-324; Kevin Crow had rounds of 76, 89, 81, and 80 for 326; Jack Day shot 85, 80, 84, 77-326; and Mark Small finished with 87, 86, 85, 79-337. Only the top four scores counted on the team total.



Wildcat coach Ray Wauthier said he was pleased with the performances of his golfers.



"I feel very good about the tournament. The men played on two different golf courses, neither of which they had ever seen before," he said. "They brought their scores down the last day, when I thought they would have been the most tired. We hadn't played 36 holes in one day yet this year, so in all I feel very good about how we performed."

University of Iowa won the tournament with a score of 1,190. Iowa State took second with 1,224 and the University of Kansas finished third with 1,229.

The Wildcats are next scheduled to compete in the Big Eight Golf Tournament May 9-10 at Lawrence.

Mercer, Lytle lead track teams at Drake Relays

K-State track teams, competing Friday and Saturday at the Drake Relays in Des Moines, Iowa, qualified one more athlete for the NCAA Outdoor Championships.

Julius Mercer finished second in the 400-meter intermediate hurdles in a qualifying time of 50.45. The time was also Mercer's season best.

The Wildcats' lone win at the meet went to Doug Lytle in the pole vault. Lytle won the event with a vault of 18-0.

Top finishers for the women were Rita Graves and Donna King, who finished third in their respective events. Graves tied for third in the high jump with a leap of 5-9½, while King earned the bronze in the 100-meter dash in 11.71.

Gregg Bartlett also had a third-place finish for the men's team with a throw of 61-5¾ in the shot put. Bartlett also took sixth in the discus with a 174-0 toss.

Four K-State school records also fell at the meet, broken by Alfredo Rosas, the men's 1,600 meter relay team, Pinkie Suggs and the women's 400-meter relay team.

Rosas set his mark in the 10,000-meter run, finishing seventh in the race with a record time of 29:54.4. The 1,600-meter team of Mercer, Darryl Bonds, Darryl Anderson and Mike Bradley finished fifth in its heat and did not qualify for the finals of the event, despite a school-record 3:11.92 finish.

Suggs threw the discus a record 162-5, also a season best for the athlete, enroute to a fifth-place finish. She also competed in the shot put, taking sixth with a toss of 48-6. The 400-meter relay team of King, Crystal Hicks, Michelle Maxey and Kelly Wenlock finished sixth, breaking the school record with a 46.02 time.

Another season best came to Deb Pihl, running in the 1,500 meters. Pihl took fourth with a time of 4:21.02 to set her personal mark.

A disappointment for the team came in the performance of Veryl Switzer. The speedster took fourth in his heat in the 100-meter dash with a time of 10.72, failing to qualify for the finals in the event. He also failed to qualify in the long jump, scratching on his first two attempts. Coach Steve Miller was puzzled by Switzer's performances.

"Obviously, we're at a loss with Veryl," he said. "I know he's a great athlete. I guess we'll just have to wait for another week."

"We are very pleased with the performance of both teams. We didn't have any real disappointments this week," Miller said.

According to Miller, the crowd had an effect on Lytle's finish.

"This is the type of crowd that really helps Doug. We are happy with his win."

Miller also mentioned the performances by Mercer, Rosas and the women's 400-meter relay team. Miller described Mercer as a "real stud," as the fleet-footed hurdler beat out University of Kansas hurdler Deon Hogan, while posting one of the top five collegiate times in the nation this year.

Guaranteed Student Loans
Apply Now for Fall 1983

Dear Mom & Dad,
The semester is about over and finals will soon be here!
Just a quick note to let you know I've already applied for my guaranteed student loan through the Kansas State Bank for the fall semester. They assured me that by applying for my loan now it will be ready for me when I return to Manhattan in August. How about that... I am actually thinking ahead! (HA)
Speaking of thinking ahead, I am looking forward to seeing you soon and enjoying home cooking all summer long.
Wish me luck on my finals
Love, your son
DAVE

Are you going to be needing a loan for the fall semester? Apply now. Processing of your paper work will be completed for you over the summer and your loan papers will be waiting for you at our main bank for your signature in August.

Think ahead; by coming in today you can save yourself from the hassles you could encounter in August.

Johnson

If any man had felt what I felt then, there would be a word to describe it in the dictionary.

"Men have given us God as their own image to keep control of us. God invented this little boy's club with God as president. And, because they are all guys, they have this special understanding. They speak the same language.

"The men then go to the pulpit and say, "God told me to tell you he wants you to be sweet and gentle and never raise your voice. Always have a sweet voice. He wants you to make my life warm and comfortable. He wants you to send me off to work every morning feeling just terrific. He wants you waving pompons for me all the time," she said.

Johnson said she would willingly give her life to see the ERA amendment ratified and has told several audiences so. The first time she said it, though, the audience looked embarrassed and thought a statement like that from a woman was immodest.

"But," she said as she pounded on the podium, "when Patrick Henry said, 'Give me liberty or give me death,' no one ducked his head and said, 'That is so immodest'.

"Being the good patriarchal women that we are, we all know that men's rights are worth that kind of sacrifice and a whole lot more. But women? Don't be ridiculous," she said.

Johnson declared all the men in the audience, who had the courage to listen to a radical feminist speak, as "honorary women," as she continued her speech.

World peace will be impossible until women's rights are recognized, she said.

"Every minute we are in danger of assault because in a patriarchy women are the enemy. World peace will be impossible if we are waging war against one-half the human race," she said.

Get your yellow token, which is good for 10% off any non textbook items, when you sell your books during dead week or final week. You decide what the token is worth by the amount you purchase. THE MORE YOU BUY THE MORE YOU SAVE! You can use the token whenever you want. Use it for gifts to take home, for something for yourself or for next semester when you buy your school supplies.

★ Bring all your books to Varney's (regardless of where you bought them) and our buyers will value them individually. You choose what you want to sell! WE BUY BOOKS EVERY DAY! However, you can usually get the most for your books by selling them to us at the end of the semester.

★ The price we pay for books is determined mainly by two factors—if the books will be used again at K-State and if we need the books for our stock. If we cannot buy your books for our stock, we will offer you the best price we can, based on the national market.

★ Remember, it's what you get for all your books that counts, and we think that the wholesaler we buy for pays the highest prices.

★ We know you're busy and in a hurry so we have four buyers to take care of you. We try to keep the time you spend in line to a minimium. We also buy until 9:00 at night during dead week & final week.

Budget proposal contains less defense, higher taxes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Republicans reported substantial progress Monday toward agreement on a fiscal 1984 budget that would provide a small tax increase, less for defense and more for domestic needs than President Reagan wants, and a deficit approaching $200 billion.

"We don't have everyone on board, but it looks a lot better than it did last week," said Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., after he outlined a new budget proposal at a closed meeting attended by most of the 54 GOP senators.

Domenici, chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, said the plan would provide slightly less for defense than Reagan has requested and as much as $11 billion more in domestic spending than the president's original budget plan for the 12 months starting Oct. 1.

Other officials said red ink under the GOP plan would total about $200 billion and perhaps more. That would represent scant progress in reducing the deficit from this year, now forecast at $210 billion.

Even so, Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker, R-Tenn., said, "It's as good as we can do with it right now."

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said Reagan aides were working with the Senate Republicans in the hope that "they will come up with defense spending somewhat close to our figure" of $244.7 billion, a 10 percent boost over the current level.

Several conservative Republicans, including Sen. William Armstrong of Colorado, indicated they would support the latest Domenici plan.

But conservative Sen. Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., was said to be objecting even to nominal tax increases, and some moderate Republicans, such as Sen. Mark O. Hatfield of Oregon, also were withholding endorsement of the plan.

The Republican caucus came shortly before the full Senate began debate on the budget and heard Domenici declare that "very little can be done" to force large reductions in the budget deficit this year or next.

Sen. Lawton Chiles of Florida, senior Democrat on the Budget Committee, said some action is needed to reduce the deficit and sustain the economic recovery. Chiles supports a $30 billion tax increase for 1984, with larger increases in the future.

"Nothing will kill the recovery quicker than high interest rates. And nothing will keep those rates higher than huge federal deficits," Chiles said.

No votes were expected in the Senate until late in the week.

While the final figures have not been settled, officials said the Domenici plan would provide tax increases totaling about $8 billion over the next two years, roughly the amount contained in Reagan's original budget.

Students file ACLU complaint concerning actions at lecture

By KIMBERLY GRACY
Collegian Reporter

Several students have filed a protest with the American Civil Liberties Union for alleged discrimination at the March 28 Landon Lecture by Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani, the Saudi oil minister.

"It looks like there's some credible evidence emerging that some people acting in behalf of the University, who may not have been properly supervised, may have acted in a way which did indeed deprive some individuals of rights that are guaranteed to them under the Constitution," Lyman Baker, English instructor and faculty adviser for the University ACLU student chapter, said.

BAKER SAID PART of those not allowed back in McCain Auditorium were Iranian students "who belong to a local pro-Khomeini, pro-revolution group."

According to Baker, the students were not readmitted because they were thought to be potential troublemakers, "even though they had not been involved in the disturbances that had led to the emptying of the hall."

Because the students are members of the pro-Khomeini group is not reason to believe they were involved in causing the disturbance, he said.

"Our stand is really the role of the student chapter of the ACLU, concerned faculty and members of the University community," Baker said. "We'd like to get to the bottom of the matter and find out what's happened, what the University's position is on it and see what's appropriate."

PRESIDENT DUANE ACKER, in a press conference last Wednesday, said, "We dealt with a situation as best as we could. We gave full authority to the people at the doors. We regret there were some who could not be allowed back in."

Baker said if those wanting to be readmitted were discriminated against, and the University concedes that it happened but maintains that it has the right to do so, "then we would want to persuade the University that it does not have the right to do that.

"If they are not open to that persuasion and we could not ourselves be persuaded that we were mistaken, then we would probably get a court to decide who's theory was right," Baker said.

If the ACLU's theory that people were discriminated against upon readmittance into McCain is correct, Baker said the court would instruct the University to desist that kind of behavior in the future.

HOWEVER, BAKER SAID if the University agrees that discrimination did occur and that it was improper, then "that concession itself together with a resolution that this sort of thing is not going to be repeated, might be the appropriate remedy.

"There wouldn't be any sense in going to get a court to tell them to do something they already agree they should do," he said. "There's a possibility of going to court only if it turns out that the evidence is good, that this has happened or having conceded that it happened refuses to concede that it was wrong in doing what it did."

Baker said the prospects are good that "the University is, one, going to concede that it happened and, two, going to concede that it shouldn't have happened. In which case it will be cleared up right here."

TESTIMONY OF the individuals who say they were denied admittance and those who saw them suffer that frustration will be used as evidence to clear the matter, Baker said.

"We're looking into it right now and hope it is resolved by the end of the term. I'd be very disappointed if we had to go to court on the matter. I think we ought to be able to resolve it short of that and right now I don't see any reason to believe that we can't," Baker said.

K-State will respect any action taken against it, Charles Hein, director of University communications, said.

"Everyone has the freedom to bring an action if that is what they chose to do and Kansas State University would respect that right.

"Our purpose in taking the actions that we took with respect to the visit of Sheikh Yamani was to preserve the right to hear and be heard," Hein said. That purpose has also been supported by the local chapter of the American Association of University Professors who commended President Acker for his handling of that matter.

"If people indeed were denied entrance, it was not by design. There was no intention to do that and I think the president has said that. The circumstances of the moment did dictate to some extent how things happened because it happened very, very quickly," Hein said.

Education professor dies of cancer

Robert E. Scott, 51, professor of adult and occupational education, died at 8:30 p.m. Sunday at St. Mary Hospital.

Scott was found to have cancer in spring 1982, and although he had been in and out of the hospital since, he continued to work at least part time until mid-April.

Born Dec. 13, 1931, Scott earned his bachelor's (1953) and master's (1956) degrees from Pittsburg State University before receiving his Ed.D from the University of Missouri in 1965.

Scott joined the K-State faculty in 1970 as coordinator of industrial education and had held the rank of professor since 1973. He was a frequent consultant to such organizations as the U.S. Army, the Catholic Hospital Association, the American Institute of Baking and vocational schools in Kansas. He had also been cited for outstanding service by the American Nursing Home Association.

He was a past president of the Kansas Vocational Association and a member of numerous professional and honorary organizations. He was the author of two books and more than 50 other publications.

Two memorials have been established in Scott's memory: a Robert E. Scott Cancer Research Fund through the Department of Adult and Occupational Education and the Foundation and a memorial through the First United Methodist Church.

Funeral services will be at 3 p.m. Wednesday at the First United Methodist Church and interment will be at Sunrise Cemetery.

Scott is survived by his widow, Charlotte; a daughter, Janice Marie Scott of Overland Park; and two sons, Paul Robert and Larry Eugene. Also surviving are his parents, Leo and Frances Scott of Independence; a sister Shirley Amend, Council Bluffs, Iowa; and a brother, Lloyd Scott, Pawhuska, Okla.

Housing council to consider rates for 1984-85 year

Tentative housing rates for the 1984-85 school year will be the main topic for discussion at a Housing Council meeting scheduled for 3:30 p.m. today in the Union Director's Conference Room. The meeting is open to the public.

"We will be discussing housing rates for '84-'85 tentatively, although no action will be taken at this time," Chet Peters, council chairman and vice president of student affairs, said. "Normally we would adopt a schedule at this time, but we feel we may be close to not having to increase rates for the '84-'85 year.

"We're hoping the current 4 percent increase (in housing rates) for next fall will carry us through for two years," he said.

Peters added the council will hear an update on the summer and fall residence hall occupancy.

Renovations scheduled for Van Zile Hall, which will soon be considered by the Kansas Board of Regents, will also be discussed at the council meeting.

Intersession sign up runs through Thursday

Registration for spring Intersession is scheduled to run through Thursday in Farrell Library.

Hours for registration are 8:30 to 11:50 a.m. and 1 to 4 p.m.

Intersession classes will run from May 16 to June 3.

Intersession is open to the public as well as to K-State students and prior enrollment at K-State is not necessary. Costs are $24 per undergraduate credit and $37 per graduate credit. Classes are sponsored by the Division of Continuing Education. More than 30 classes are being offered.

Two classes will be taught off campus. A clothing and textiles class will make a five-day tour of New York City, and a general agriculture class will take a three-week study tour of Western Europe.

Severe earthquake strikes California town

SAN FRANCISCO — A severe earthquake struck the small San Joaquin Valley community of Coalinga on Monday afternoon, collapsing buildings, sparking fires and injuring an estimated 50 people, authorities said.

The quake, which struck about 4:45 p.m. and registered an estimated 6.5 on the Richter scale, was felt throughout California — from Sacramento to Valencia, and as far east as Reno, Nev.

"You can't belief the fires down there," said the unidentified pilot of a private plane monitored on Fresno County's emergency radio network.

That community, a town of about 7,000 people about 200 miles southeast of San Francisco, apparently took the brunt of the tremblor.

Lindsay Daniels, assistant administrative officer for Fresno County, said there was "major structural damage as far as buildings are concerned, fires in the city itself and possible injuries."

Identification refusal not grounds for arrest

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court on Monday restrained police from arresting people for refusing to identify themselves when stopped for questioning, saying such arrests can leave to the "whim" of police the decision on who may walk the streets.

But the 7-2 decision stopped short of saying that any anticrime measure forcing joggers and pedestrians to identify themselves would be unconstitutional.

The court struck down a California law that made it a crime for someone who "loiters or wanders" not to identify himself or herself when stopped by police.

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, writing for the majority, said the law was too vague because it left it up to "the whim of any police officer" to decide whether the offered identification was "credible and reliable."

The decision did not offer a formula for a law that would be acceptable.

Church leader's instructions cause 52 deaths

FORT WAYNE, Ind. — Fifty-two people, including 28 babies and seven other children, died while they or their parents followed the teachings of a church that instructs its members to shun doctors, the Fort Wayne News-Sentinel reported Monday.

The adults who died while members of the rapidly growing Faith Assembly church included sufferers of untreated diabetes and kidney disease and seven mothers with complications related to home deliveries, the newspaper said in a copyright article that was the first of a four-part series on the church.

The deaths occurred in Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, Kentucky, Michigan and Missouri, according to the newspaper, which conducted a five-month study of the Wilmot, Ind.-based church and its founder, the Rev. Hobart Freeman.

Freeman, a 63-year-old biblical scholar, tells his followers he doesn't expect to die and that those who turn from his teaching will go to hell. He preaches that his followers get to heaven by faith and that people with faith don't need doctors.

As a result, Faith Assembly families have avoided medical treatment even as they face death.

Eastern Africa is closest region to starvation

WASHINGTON — Rapid population growth and a stark shortage of food make Eastern Africa the region closest to starvation, a population research group reported Monday.

Average food supplies in that region currently provide only 88 percent of the needs of a moderately active person, according to the Population Reference Bureau.

And, the Washington-based study group added, that region's population is growing at a rate of 3.1 percent, well ahead of the 1.8 percent for the world in general.

The bureau's annual World Population Data Sheet showed that, worldwide, food supplies provide an average of 109 percent of the needs of individuals. But that includes 134 percent in the more developed nations, 101 percent in less developed areas, and less than 100 percent in many parts of Africa.

The bureau also estimated that the world's population will top five billion within five years, and six billion by the year 2000.

Needles found in hamburger, hot dog buns

MANNFORD, Okla. — Rusty sewing needles were found in several packages of hamburger and hot dog buns at a grocery, police said.

"As far as we know, this has happened in only one store," Police Chief Orlin White said Sunday. The public and campers were alerted.

All IGA brand buns were pulled from the shelves of Phelp's IGA after two boys reported needles in the buns they were eating. The police checked the remaining stock and found six needles in six packages. The boys were not injured.

Rick Parris, the assistant manager at the store, said as many as 60 packages could have been sold.

One fire station to benefit campus

In action long overdue, K-State students will be serviced solely by the Manhattan fire department on July 1.

When funding for upkeep of the University's educational base, as well as the campus fire department, dwindle rapidly, elimination of duplicated services is necessary.

This decision will allow badly needed state funds to be used in areas where the quality of education, teachers and academic facilities must be increased.

Until this transfer of responsibility to the city, scheduled for July 1, K-State will continue to be serviced by the campus fire department with the city fire services providing backup if needed.

K-Staters would benefit in many ways by this move.

One of the voids to be filled by the city fire department would be to provide more manpower and updated equipment to the scene of an emergency when a fire occurs.

Also, with the concentration of training, equipment, manpower and services in one central location in emergencies when seconds are invaluable, the margin of error is decreased.

One of the promises made to gain support for increased city and county taxes last fall was to provide a new fire department facility for Manhattan residents and K-State students. If efforts to provide this fail, at least students should be able to reap some benefit from their increased cost in the form of city fire department services.

Either way, the important fact is assurance K-State's fire protection needs continue to receive the best possible service available.

'Midnight Express'

"Hi, my name is Hurriyet."

"I'm sorry, I couldn't hear. Is it 'Harriet?'"

"No, no. It is Hurriyet. H-u-double r-i-y-e-t."

"Oh, I see. Hurry-yet. Where are you from, Hurry-yet?"

"I am from Ankara, Turkey. I am studying mechanical engineering here."

"Turkey, wow. You're a long way from home. I saw a movie a couple of years ago, called "Midnight Express." Are prisons really like that in Turkey? Are people really like that?..." .

This is a typical example of an initial conversation I have had with several people I met in the United States since I have been here. There is hardly anybody who hasn't asked me this last question. If they do not ask, I get curious why they have not asked. Finally, I have to ask them if they have seen this movie, because I want to tell them what Turkey is really like, rather than the Hollywood-made images of it.

Turkey is a rapidly developing country in the Middle East. It is a major tourist center on the Mediterranean Sea, with unique beaches and natural scenery. Turkey is known as the land of sun, history and hospitable people.

Rapid development has brought several problems to my country, but none of these problems have created such an inhumane country with such injust laws, terrifying prisons and ugly, filthy streets — as it is portrayed in the movie.

IN FACT, the entire movie (except for a few pictures of Istanbul) was made on the island of Malta, which is south of Sicily. There were no Turks in the cast. And although the film was said to have been based on a true story, scenes such as the tongue-biting, the killing of the guard and the type of escape from the prison never happened. They are excellent products of the film producer's imagination, in order to sell the movie! The acts, the characters and the realities had to have been extremely exaggerated to make the movie more exciting — and more successful. After all, it was a great tension and adventure movie.

Turkish prisons do not have the best conditions for prisoners. No, not at all. The conditions are similar to ones which exist all over the world. This is what William Hayes, whose life was portrayed in this movie, said in an interview:

"The whole thing could have taken place in another country. I would think the prisons in Turkey are the same as (those in) the U.S., the same as a lot of other countries. Amnesty International documents 41 countries (including the United States) where they say there are inhumane prison conditions, beatings and torture. It happens all over. But people either aren't aware of it or don't care about it."

THIS IS EXACTLY RIGHT. The people don't know about prison conditions, or don't care. That is why almost everyone I met asked me if the prisons are that bad. Yes, they are bad — even in the United States — but not as bad as the movie portrays them. Haven't you seen "Brubaker," or programs on "60 Minutes" about prisons?

There is one thing which may not be the same all over the world — the drug laws. The Turkish government simply does not give tickets to the drug users, as law enforcement officials in California do. The drug users, dealers and producers may face up to 30 years in prison once they are arrested. And it doesn't matter if the amount of drugs they possess is 1 kilogram or 100 kilograms.

It is ironic that a murderer in Turkey may get 24 years in prison, while a drug smuggler serves 30 years. But, those extremely harsh laws are a result of pressure on Turkey by the United States to take more effective precautions against smugglers. In the 1970s, the laws were enacted as a result of pressure "to protect the American youth" and have proven to be very successful against foreign and Turkish smugglers.

"Midnight Express" was heavily criticized in Europe for "portraying a nation and a country with very much exaggerated negative sides."

"Even the Jewish nation (Israel) hasn't made a movie like this about the Germans," the critics said. Criticisms were also leveled toward the film's producers and the foreign political propagation groups which financially backed the movie.

AT THE SAME TIME, the same movie critics — especially in Germany — were in favor of the real message the movie presented.

The bottom line is the movie was not made to portray Turkey or its people — and it just doesn't. The characters and places in the scenes were either created or exaggerated to make the message as powerful as possible.

Now, after reading this column, do me a favor. Don't ask me about this movie anymore, please. You can ask me about anything else about Turkey, but not this movie.

Alcohol a problem, not an answer

Editor

Re: Tracy Allen's column, "Alcoholism: the curable disease" and Duff Tweedy's letter, "Alcoholism incurable."

Regarding the issue of whether or not alcoholism is curable or incurable, I feel, depends on the individual. Every individual has a different level of tolerance before becoming intoxicated. Some peple can overcome or recover from harmful habits faster than others and maintain their recovered state.

In essence, we each have different physical and mental capabilities. The alcoholic must really want to stop drinking in order to be cured. This brings me to the question of "Why do people drink in the first place?"

I'm sure, as Allen stated, the reason stems from the fact that as we were going through high school, we believed drinking and getting "high" were the only ways to survive in this world. However, in fact, alcohol is a problem and not an answer.

Today in the United States, there are 100 million drinkers and 10 million are chronic abusers or alcoholics resulting in personal, job and family problems.

We, as college students, must recognize this problem and learn to be "responsible drinkers." Alcohol can be harmless and enjoyable if it is used responsibly and in moderation. Drink along with others, with other activities, and avoid intoxication by drinking slowly with food in the stomach.

If you drink to escape from problems, to block out painful feelings, as a substitute for class relationships or as a "cure" for fears, you are on a definite journey to alcoholism and I would recommend seeking help.

Thanks, Allen and Tweedy for telling us the facts! K-State students needs to open their eyes and face these facts!

'Sacred' lunch hour inconvenient

Editor,

I have finally decided to put my frustrations into words. The services on this campus repeatedly convey the attitude that they are here to serve themselves rather than the students.

Services and offices open when the employees please and close when they want to go home. Lunch hours (70 minutes) are sacred. In fact, they are so important that if you call at 11:45 a.m., you are often told to call back after 1 p.m. since there is not time to answer a question. "Regular" hours vary from service to service, invariably shorter than an 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. day.

In addition to inconsistent hours, students regularly encounter attitudes of condescension and antipathy. Employees act put out and imposed upon when asked to merely perform their duties. Referrals are the common escape from answering questions and meeting student needs. The result is often a never ending runaround from office to office.

Student hours are seldom 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., nor do they usually have time for 70-minute lunch hours. Any quick purusal of the line schedule will show that classes start at 7:30 a.m. and end as late as 10 p.m. Classes do not cease at 11:50 a.m. and resume at 1 p.m.

Students need these services. (Why else are they provided?) Why aren't they open for the students' convenience, ready and willing to serve?

Extension needed for final exams

Editor,

I would like to express my concern over the present policy of administering final exams and the current finals week schedule. I, for one, am plagued with continuous torment of many desperate last-minute assignments from instructors behind their schedules.

Also, I have the arduous task of studying for an assortment of tests and final exams that will require another exhausting sleepless week. Every day requires a cram session or two which I believe disrupts the real learning process. I find it disturbing to have to switch from one or more subjects each day (and night) to different ones the next day and night.

Why can't we have two finals weeks (no classes at all), and spread finals out for improved academic performance on each? Would that help us (the students) learn more effectively, as well as preserve our health? I know for a fact as well as experience that most engineering students have it rough near the end of the semester.

I can only hope that some day the administration will take these factors into consideration to help students improve their overall education and grade point average.

Electrical short causes Kramer power outage

A short in a power line supplying electricity to the Kramer Complex caused a power outage Monday, blacking out both Marlatt and Goodnow halls and Kramer Food Center for the day and well into the night.

Thomas Frith, director of housing, said the short occurred in the line between Kramer and the transformer.

"A new line is being brought into position," Frith said. "It is hoped that power will be back by Monday night."

Cost for the repairs cannot be determined until they are completed.

Kramer was forced to make adjustments in menus and deliveries to cope with the outage. Denise Wiseman, Kramer production dietician, said several changes were made to remain in service through the outage.

"We've been serving as usual," Wiseman said. "But we don't know how it will affect breakfast (this morning) because we have no lighting in the dining room."

Wiseman said breakfast service may have to be moved to Derby Food Center if power wasn't restored by this morning.

Because a loading dock elevator was inoperative, deliveries had to be carried up two flights of stairs.

"We did send back some of our deliveries today," she said, adding that because the dishwashers were also inoperative, paper utensils had to be used.

"It's kind of hard to keep the food hot. Everything is run by electricity," she said.

Wiseman said no problem had occurred yet with spoilage of stored foods, such as meats and vegetables. Perishable items will be moved to Pittman Building for refrigeration if necessary.

"We're below the danger zone temperaturewise," she said. "But we're maintaining. It's been a real event to say the least."

UAB schedules confidential hearing about complaint against Maranatha

By MICHELE SAUER
Collegian Reporter

The University Activities Board's grievance hearing concerning Maranatha Campus Ministries, to determine if Maranatha is in violation of UAB's constitution and by-laws, will be held at 7 tonight in the Union. The hearing is closed to the public.

"The hearing is confidential and the names of the witnesses are confidential," Sally Routson, coordinator of student activities, said. "The procedure will be somewhat different for the hearing, because witnesses will not be present for the duration of the hearing."

Members of the grievance committee are Jerry Katlin, student body president and chairman of the grievance committee; Lori Leu, Student Senate chairwoman; Fred Newton, associate professor of student development and Faculty Senate member; Clinton Owensby, professor of agronomy and appointed to the committee by Chet Peters, vice-president for student affairs; and Charleen Heinke, senior in accounting and UAB member.

Heinke was appointed by UAB chairman Jim Stilwell to be a non-voting member of the grievance committee and serve as executive secretary.

Richard Seaton, University attorney, is serving as legal counsel for the committee, but does not have voting power.

Donald Fallon, coordinator of religious activites and UAB member, said the board won't say much until they get a report from the grievance committee.

"From the UAB perspective, the grievance committee is going to determine if the organization is in violation of the (UAB) constitution," Fallon said. "The hearing will be an effort to look at University and state guidelines. They will see if the organization has been interfering with the health, welfare, safety and education of students."

Certain criteria are used in the investigation by the committee to render a recommendation to UAB, according to UAB's constitution and by-laws.

The decision may include one or more of the following: actions of the organization have endangered or will endanger the health, safety and welfare of the University community; they have interfered with the educational mission of the University; violated the rules and regualtions of UAB, K-State, the Kansas Board of Regents, or federal and state laws; or the group has misrepresented their stated goals, objectives, purposes, or not acted in accordance with its constitution.

"The grievance committee will determine if the group harasses or pressures people," Fallon said. "I helped formulate the religious guidelines and one of these is that organizations are not to pressure students."

The grievance committee looks at what the organization teaches, but also needs to see if the activities of the group lead to harm, Fallon said.

UAB will meet before the end of the semester to discuss the findings and recommendation and to determine a course of action.

Commissioners to formalize fire protection plan

A contract to provide fire protection services for K-State is scheduled for approval by the Manhattan City Commission at its regular meeting tonight.

The one-year contract will cost the University approximately $57,000, Don Harmon, city manager, said.

"They had a decision to make to dispose internal costs by July 1," Harmon said. He said the contract will also go into effect July 1.

Harmon added that the decision to provide the University with city fire protection had been discussed for several years.

"It was a mutually agreed thing over a period of time," he said. "It (fire protection) isn't any different than it is now, we're just putting it in writing."

The commission is also scheduled to receive a progress report on the proposed downtown shopping mall project from Mel Roebuck, vice president of Forest City Rental Properties Corp.

According to Gary Stith, community development director, the report should cover matters previously discussed concerning the proposed downtown mall.

The commission will also receive an interim report from Hay Associates, consultants currently working on the city's classification and pay study. Upon receiving the report, commissioners will decide whether the contract with Hay Associates should be extended for a new study to be conducted.

JIM PEARSON, assistant city manager, said the consultants would not be able to complete their study without more information which was not supplied in the original classification and pay study conducted by Kansas-Denver Associates.

"We have no documentation (from the original study) as to why positions were placed where they were," Pearson said.

He said the original study grouped unrelated occupations together, such as secretarial with maintenance, and failed to provide the rationale for the groupings.

The new study would help the city classify its employees, he added.

"At least (the study) will give us the mechanism by which we can classify employees," Pearson said.

THE COMMISSION will also consider approval of the first reading of an ordinance acquiring right of way on the Haskell Tract property for the Hylton Heights subdivision by using the city's power of eminent domain.

The power of eminent domain gives the city the ability to condemn private property and subsequently purchase it for the city.

Jerry Petty, city engineer, said the property survey was filed last week, but it could be three months before the city is able to acquire the land.

"We don't have use of the property until it is fully paid for and given to us," Petty said.

Student farmers: Cultivating the mind

Part of James' flock awaits shearing.

Lon James, a farmer and a student, walks back to the barn after feeding part of his flock. James spends about 45 hours a week working on his parents' farm.

James listens to a lecture during Principles of Animal Breeding class. He divides his time between his farm work near Clay Center and 12 hours of class at K-State.

Keeping a sheep farm while going to school means two hours on the road every day of classes, studying while driving and not much free time.

James and his twin brother, Loy, senior in agricultural education, spent six years establishing a flock of 70 registered Suffolk ewes at their parents' farm north of Clay Center.

When he decided to attend college, James resisted selling the flock he had worked hard to establish.

"I could sell out and come to school full time," he said, "but when I got through I would have to start all over."

RATHER THAN sell the sheep and go to school, James decided to commute to classes. "It was either sell the flock or commute," he said.

Because James is on the go a lot, he misses out on the college atmosphere, social life and extracurricular activities, such as Block and Bridle Club. "When you gain in one area, you have to give up things in others," he said.

However, he wouldn't trade life on the farm. "When its springtime, I get spring fever," he said. "I would just about go crazy here. I enjoy the outside and working with livestock. It's a way to get away from school."

He said he is making most advancement with the registered flock of ewes. In the future he would like to replace his commercial cross-bred stock with registered Suffolk sheep.

HE WORKS CONSTANTLY to improve his breeding flock by attending weekend sales in Kansas and Oklahoma. "I'm always on the move and trying to improve," he said.

The registered Suffolk ewes are sold mostly for breeding stock or to 4-H members, he said.

Although he enjoys crop farming, the livestock end is James' favorite.

He finds satisfaction in bringing up a lamb from birth, selling it to a 4-H member and watching it win a blue ribbon at the fair.

"I go into the ring with that kid," he said. "I go in with a part of me in that lamb. I follow all the lambs I sell and find out how they do at fairs. I keep tabs on my lambs."

James spends two hours in the morning and night doing chores. During lambing season, which began in February, he was up one or two times each night checking on the ewes.

When he is at school or stays in Manhattan to study for an exam, James' parents and grandfather help care for the sheep. "It's a family operation," he said. "Without family support, it wouldn't be possible."

THIS SPRING is the third semester James has commuted to Manhattan from Clay Center, about a 45 minute drive.

He is carrying 12 credit hours. His classes every Monday, Wednesday and Friday demand a lot of study, so he uses his time on the road to study, planting his notebook on the wheel as he drives.

Next fall he said he hopes to go to school full-time while his brother manages the farm and cares for the sheep.

He said when he started college, he planned to go only two years to obtain a farm and ranch management degree from Cloud County Community College. But realizing the need to gain more knowledge about farming, he returned to school on a commuting basis.

"I started taking classes to benefit me on the farm," he said. Since then he has decided to obtain his animal science degree.

ANOTHER FACTOR in his decision to attend K-State was his desire to participate in livestock judging. He has judged livestock since he was 9 years old. This year he was a member of the team that judged at the Denver stock show in January.

Another student who farms in addition to going to school is Keith Badger, senior in animal sciences and industry.

Badger's prior commitment to the farm and his family are two reasons why he plans to return to the farm.

"I made capital investments into the farm which basically committed me to farming," he said.

Because Badger's father became ill this wnter, he traveled the 80 miles to Overbrook every weekend to take care of the farm. However, his commitment to farming probably would have drawn him home on the weekends anyway, he said.

BADGER SAID it was always planned that he would return to the farm after graduation. But the investments he made secured his commitment to farming.

Badger admitted that going back to the farm placed him in a minority. He said money, investments and farm hours may make some graduates reluctant to come back to the farm. He also said he believes those graduates who enter business or industry are likely to never return to the farm.

"I have my doubts whether those kids will ever come back to the farm," he said.

Badger said in his situation he had the support from his family to enable him to make the initial investments in the family farm.

"Often times kids don't have that backing," he said. As a result, it is difficult for them to begin farming.

Badger said he has never had any feelings that he should try entering agricultural industry.

"I like working for myself," he said.

For James, farming is more than a way to make a living; it is a way of life. "The problem is — people look at the dollar figure. I feel if you enjoy what you're doing, no matter what you get paid, it's worth it."

Although potential for making money in farming is not great now, James remains optimistic about the future.

"I see an excellent future for agriculture," he said.

Softball team wins two from Cloud County

By BRAD GILLISPIE
Sports Editor

After a fifth place finish at the Big Eight Tournament over the weekend, the K-State softball team came back home for a two-game sweep of Cloud County Community College Monday. The Wildcats received strong pitching performances from Janel Anderson and Amy Fischer to win by scores of 9-1 and 5-1.

Anderson pitched a six-hitter the first game, getting plenty of support on offense from her teammates. The Wildcats collected 14 hits, led by second baseman Cathy Hinson, who went 4-4, knocking in two runs. Center fielder Leslie Taylor and catcher Annette Kirkham also had two RBIs apiece for the Wildcats.

Cloud County scored the first run, taking a 1-0 lead in the top of the third inning. Elena Moreno led off for Cloud County with a single and went to second on a K-State error. The next batter, Mary Relph, hit a triple to left to score Moreno. Anderson got the next three batters out to end any threat.

K-State came back with two runs in the third as Kirkham knocked both runs in with a bases-loaded single, scoring Anderson, who led off with a single, and Rachelle Borders, who walked.

THE WILDCATS then put the game out of reach, adding two runs in the fourth and four more in the fifth. In the fourth, K-State's Pam Rufener got on base on a fielder's choice, advanced to second on Anderson's sacrifice bunt, and scored on an error, which also allowed Borders to reach first. Borders later scored on a single by Cathy Hinson.

K-State batted all the way around in the fifth, as Kelly Scoles led off with a single, advanced to second on Cindy Wasinger's sacrifice bunt, ran to third on a wild pitch and scored on a single by Shelly Shaw. Shaw was thrown out on a fielder's choice by Rufener.

The bases were loaded when Anderson rapped a single and Borders walked. Taylor's single scored Rufener and Anderson, and Borders came in a short time later on another single by Hinson.

K-STATE ADDED another run in the sixth when Scoles singled and scored on Wasinger's double. The game was called immediately after that.

Anderson earned the win for K-State, giving up six hits in six innings while walking one and striking out six. Her record stepped just above .500 to 15-14. Erin Johnson got the loss for Cloud County, allowing 14 hits in 5⅓ innings.

The second game was similar to the earlier contest, with Amy Fischer taking over where Anderson left off on the mound. Fischer also allowed six hits while recording her first decision of the season, setting her record at 1-0.

Cloud County again drew first blood, scoring a run in the top of the third to take the lead. Relph hit a one-out single, advanced to second on Johnson's single, and scored on another single by Debbie McLane. The scoring stopped there for Cloud County, however, as it was K-State's turn to put points on the scoreboard.

THE WILDCATS came back in the bottom of the third, tallying two runs. Taylor got on base on an error to lead off the inning and went to second on a sacrifice bunt by Hinson. A single by Kirkham scored Taylor. Kirkham advanced to second on a groundout by Scoles, went to third on a wild pitch and scored on a single by Wasinger.

K-State scored the last three runs of the game in the fifth inning, taking advantage of a home run by Kirkham and some poor pitching by Cloud County's McLane.

Kirkham led off the inning with her homer, a solo shot to center field. The blast must have flustered McLane, who hit Wasinger with a pitch two batters later. Shelly Shaw got on base with a bunt, followed by walks issued to Rufener and Fischer, scoring Wasinger. Shaw scored on a single by Borders to finish off the scoring in the game.

The Wildcats are now 16-14 on the season, after going 3-3 at the Big Eight Tournament over the weekend in Norman, Okla. K-State finished behind Missouri, Oklahoma State, Oklahoma and Kansas, all of which had 4-2 marks for the tourney.

K-State started off the tourney Thursday with a 5-3 loss to Nebraska, the Cornhuskers' only win of the weekend. The Wildcats came back to upset tourney-favorite Oklahoma State later in the evening by a 1-0 score. The second day of play saw K-State knock off Nebraska 7-0 and lose to Kansas two hours later, 8-1.

The Wildcats split the last day of play also, beating Iowa State, 2-0, but ending the day with a 4-0 loss to Missouri. A high point of the tournament was the selection of K-State shortstop Kelly Scoles to the All-Tournament Team.

K-State ends the season Wednesday afternoon with a double-header against Allen County Community College at CiCo Park in Manhattan. The first game begins at 3 p.m.

Tubbs returns to Sooner post after accident

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — University of Oklahoma basketball Coach Billy Tubbs officially announced his return to the job Monday, 10 weeks after he suffered a fractured skull when he was hit by a car.

"At this point, I think I'm back to normal. We may have a problem — I'm back to normal," Tubbs said, laughing as he addressed a news conference he had scheduled to mark his return.

Tubbs was hit by a car while jogging Feb. 20 and spent the next two months practically immobilized, first in the intensive care unit of St. Anthony Hospital in Oklahoma City and later at home and at Norman Municipal Hosptial.

He was diagnosed as having a severe skull fracture and later developed an infection in his pelvis that required surgery. But the coach said Monday his head is "back intact" and he is regaining his physical strength.

"I feel good, I'm rational, I can think, I can make decisions concerning Oklahoma basketball," Tubbs said. "I think for coaching, I'm ready to go back today."

Tubbs said he did not remember the accident, which occurred when he sidestepped a mud puddle on a residential street in Norman and ran into the path of the car, which struck him from behind.

NFL Hall-of-Famer Norm Van Brocklin dies of heart attack

ATLANTA (AP) — Norm Van Brocklin, who quarterbacked two National Football League championship teams and coached two other teams on his way to the Hall of Fame, died Monday of a massive heart attack. He was 57.

Van Brocklin was dead on arrival at Walton County Hospital in Monroe, a few miles from his Social Circle home east of Atlanta, said nursing supervisor Ann Haymaker. Dr. Jeffrey Cohenour, Walton County's medical examiner, said an autopsy showed he had suffered a massive heart attack.

"The Dutchman" was a stormy figure as a player and as a coach, leading the Los Angeles Rams and the Philadelphia Eagles to championships and then building respectable teams from ragged expansion clubs as a coach with the Minnesota Vikings and the Atlanta Falcons.

Van Brocklin entered the NFL in 1949 after an All-American season as quarterback at Oregon. With the Los Angeles Rams, he became known as one of the best to play the game, even though he was forced to divide playing time with other quarterbacks.

In the pros, Van Brocklin led the league in passing three times and in punting twice. After his final season, he became the first head coach of the new Minnesota Vikings. He later coached the Atlanta Falcons.

Van Brocklin's last job in football was as an assistant coach at Georgia Tech under Pepper Rodgers in 1979.

Tubbs

"I was told that when I hit (the ground), evidently I didn't lose consciousness immediately, because I got up and sat on the curb," Tubbs said. "When the ... police arrived, I got in an argument with the policeman because I thought he was an official."

The coach said he decided to wear stereo headphones while jogging because he wanted to listen to a sports talk show on an Oklahoma City radio station. Because he was wearing the headphones, he never heard the car coming behind him.

Tubbs said he "never worried about my head" while hospitalized, but he was frustrated by the fact he could not finish the season with his team. The Sooners finished the year 24-9 and went to the NCAA playoffs, but Tubbs missed both the Big Eight Conference and NCAA tournaments.

"Out of the first seven weeks of the episode, there's five of them that are missing," he said. "I think that's the part that I really hate most about this deal, because all the work that we've done, and the toil and everything that's gone into this job, I had to miss it."

Book Buy-Back

Question: How does the Union Bookstore determine how much your books are worth when you sell them back?

Answer: If the Bookstore has notification from the instructor that the books are to be re-adopted for use the next semester, and if the Bookstore does not already have a sufficient stock on hand, then you will be offered 60% of the publisher's current list price.

For example: if a book sells for $10 new and it meets the requirements noted above, the book would be bought from you for $6.

If the Bookstore has not received notice that the book will be used again, or if it already has a sufficient stock on hand, the book would be worth the current wholesale price as indicated by one of the nation's largest jobbers of used textbooks.

If you have any questions about the price being paid for a textbook, the buyer will be happy to answer any questions which you may have regarding the price paid.

Question: Is 60% the usual price paid for textbooks around the country?

Answer: Definitely not. Most stores in the United States pay only 50% for books being used again. The Union Bookstore is one of the few stores which pays 60%. And remember, we pay cash. You don't have to take your money out in trade.

Question: What about paperbacks? Does the 60% policy apply to them too?

Answer: Yes. The Union Bookstore does not penalize you on paperbacks. If they are being used again, and if the bookstore needs them, you will receive 60% of the publisher's list price.

Question: If the publisher's price has gone up since I bought my books, will I receive the benefit of that price increase?

Answer: Yes. For instance, if you bought your book for $9 and the publisher's list price is now $10, you will get $6, not $5.40.

We Will Buy Books:

May 3rd through 6th	8:15 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.
May 7th	10:15 a.m. to 3:45 p.m.
May 9th through 11th	8:15 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.
May 12th	8:15 a.m. to 1 p.m.

'High-tech city' may reflect future of K-State

By DAVID STUCKEY
Collegian Reporter

A "high-tech city" similar to those in California and Massachusetts could be developed around K-State, a University official said he believes.

Charles Hein, director of communications, compared what has happened with the area around Stanford University — a mini-city known as "Silicon Valley" of high-tech industries cooperating with the university that have located near the campus — and a similar area around the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

"High-tech is the creation of new products and the application of new products to various uses through the theoretical and applied sciences," Hein said.

University and local Chamber of Commerce officials have had a preliminary meeting with the Pierson Commission, which is a group appointed by the governor to look at the high-tech potential in Kansas, Hein said.

"This is in line with the statewide interest in identifying areas of scientific exploration here and at KU and Wichita State that might be applicable for high-tech industry.

"THE MEETING was to see if we could identify sites proximal to the University suitable for high-tech development," Hein said.

Although no decisions have been made about high-tech development around K-State, Hein said this kind of cooperation — between industry and education — is being seen more often.

"Research parks are becoming more common around the U.S. as a combination of the private sector and public education," Hein said.

The closest piece of land that was identfied as an area for possible construction development by industry is located west of the State and Extension Forestry Building — bordered by Claflin Road, Browning Avenue and Dickens Avenue — and is owned by the K-State Foundation.

PURCHASE OF 28 acres of this land by the foundation was formally completed last week, when the Unified School District 383 school board, former owner of the land, gave its final approval of the sale.

"We knew the school board did not have plans to utilize that property," Arthur Loub, executive vice president of the foundation, said.

The land was purchased, he said, because of an incident a few years ago when K-State was approached by a research firm, Advanced Genetics, which wanted to build a facility near the campus. No land was available at the time.

"At that time it became apparent if there were to be created opportunities for contractual arrangements between corporations and the University for research and development, more land was going to have to be obtained to make it more accessible.

"THE ACQUISITION of the land is to make it (industry development) more appealing and to remove a potential barrier for the development of research and development and high-tech industry," Loub said.

Hein said other land was being considered for industrial development, but no decisions have been made.

The state and the Department of Economic Development have made available $205,000 to K-State for high-tech development that must be matched 150 percent by money other than state funds.

Hein said the matching funds would not come from the University itself.

House vetoes aid to rebels in Nicaragua

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Intelligence Committee, in a blow to President Reagan's Central American policy, voted Tuesday to cut off covert aid to rebels fighting against Nicaragua's leftist government.

However, congressional sources said Reagan apparently has the votes to turn back a similar attempt in the Senate Intelligence Committee. After a two-hour meeting the Republican-dominated panel put off action until Friday on an amendment by Sen. David Durenberger, R-Minn., to terminate funding.

In a party-line vote, the Democratic-controlled House Intelligence Committee decided 9-5 to eliminate the CIA support for the rebels who Monday reportedly launched a new series of attacks into Nicaragua.

Rep. Edward P. Boland, D-Mass., committee chairman, said the committee voted the aid cut-off because it felt that "what we were doing in that area was counterproductive."

However, Rep. C.W. Young, R-Fla., a committee member, said the vote made it "an exciting day in Managua for the Sandinistas — a great morale boost."

The bill, which the Reagan administration lobbied vigorously against, will also be considered by the House Foreign Affairs Committee and then be voted on by the full House. The Senate Intelligence Committee was considering a similar proposal.

But while the bill still has a long way to go in Congress, Rep. Wyche Fowler, D-Ga., chairman of the House Intelligence subcommittee overseeing

Quake clean-up postponed by aftershocks

COALINGA, Calif. (AP) — Hundreds of aftershocks chased residents from their damaged homes Tuesday as they tried to clean up more than $25 million in damage from a powerful earthquake that injured 47 people but caused no reported deaths.

The Monday afternoon earthquake, registering 6.5 on the Richter scale, damaged virtually every home in this rural community and reduced the refurbished downtown area to rubble, ripping the brick facades from buildings, snapping gas lines and rupturing water mains.

Many of the town's 7,000 residents spent the night in tents, on mattresses on their lawns or in cars, and on Tuesday people whose homes suffered less damage wandered in the sunshine examining the damage.

No one was reported missing, said Fresno County Sheriff's Lt. Merrill Wright, who spent the night at the scene.

"It was a disaster and a miracle," said Fresno County Supervisor Deran Koligian. "The disaster was that everything was demolished. The miracle was there were no fatalities."

Most of the injured suffered cuts and bruises and were treated and released from hospitals in several counties. Six people with more serious injuries were transfered to other hospitals.

The quake, centered five miles north of this oil and farming community 200 miles southeast of San Francisco, struck at 4:45 p.m. and rippled along a 450-mile stretch from Sacramento to San Bernardino and into western Nevada.

Houses were hurled from their foundations, roofs gave way, large buildings collapsed in clouds of dust and ruptured gas lines sent 40-to 50-foot flames raging into the sky before they were controlled.

Animals make presence known in nursing homes

Staff/Scott Williams

In the lobby... Margie Tilton, (center) a worker at the College Hill Nursing Center, introduces a mule to Rosa Rameriz, nursing home resident, Tuesday afternoon. A group of veterinary medicine students took an assortment of animals into two area nursing homes in recognition of National Pet Week, May 1-7.

It's not too often that birds fly and turtles swim — in the lobby of a nursing home.

In recognition of National Pet Week, May 1-7, a group of veterinary medicine students spent part of Tuesday taking animals to two local nursing homes.

Vicki Scott, junior in veterinary medicine, said the purpose is to make people aware of how to take care of their pets, including first aid, grooming and general health techniques.

For the second year in a row, a group of students took animals to nursing homes. "We're planning on making this an annual event," Scott said.

Fifteen students participated in the visit, taking with them an assortment of animals, including a donkey, python, goat, and an African-gray cockateil, as well as more domesticated pets, like a dog and cat.

The animals are all privately owned by students, except for two birds, which are from the Veterinary Clinic's aviary.

The students spent about an hour at both the College Hill Nursing Center and Wharton Manor, Scott said.

She had been told by nursing home staff members the visits helped the residents.

"They need things like touching and petting the animals and they really identify with that. They really come out of their shells for this," Scott said.

Senate revises activities board, confirms ASK campus director

Student Senate met Tuesday night in a short session to approve the new Associated Students of Kansas campus director and to consider a resolution to revise the constitution and by-laws of the University Activities Board.

Brett Lambert, freshman in pre-law, has been chosen to replace John Kohler as ASK campus director. Lambert's experience with ASK includes participation in a legislative assembly.

"I feel it's the best way for students to get involved in government," Lambert said. He added that he would try to get ASK to "take the role of educator" next year and inform people about what ASK is and how it helps students.

Kohler, senior in pre-law, said he was pleased with the seven applicants and "feels comfortable" with the selection of Lambert.

Senate also passed a resolution which revises several sections of UAB's constitution and by-laws. By-laws revisions include a change of membership from 13 to 11 and a change in the number of members needed to form a quorum from 10 to nine. Revisions also state that an organization wishing to register with UAB must consist of at least five members.

A new article was inserted in the by-laws which states in part that any person or organization may register a formal written complaint against a registered campus organization and that such complaints will be presented to the Student Organization Grievance Committee.

The article guarantees the organization the right to a hearing within two weeks, the right to choose its counsel, the right to present evidence in its own behalf, and the right to question witnesses.

Correction

Registration for spring intersession is scheduled to run through today in Farrell Library, not Thursday as reported in Tuesday's Collegian. After today, students will be able to register for intersession in Umburger Hall, room 317, until the start of intersession classes.

The final decision on whether the classes will be offered will be determined by the number of registrants as of Friday evening.

No residence hall price increases requested for '84-85 school year

By JULIE STROUTS
Collegian Reporter

A residence hall rate increase will not be requested for the 1984-85 academic year, according to the proposed budget for the Department of Housing.

Chet Peters, Housing Council chairman and vice president of student affairs, said the budget is still tentative because items such as utility rates will not be determined for a few months. He said final approval of the budget by the council will be made soon after the school year begins next fall.

The council did not have any rate increase requested for next year, but Thomas Frith, director of housing, said the council might want to increase the application for a housing contract fee, which has been $25 for the past 18 years, to $30.

Approximately half of the current fee is put into the social and educational programs provided in the individual halls, Peters said.

Frith said he anticipated the Association of Residence Halls asking for funding for these programs within the next year and said this additional $5 could be used to supply the funding for those programs in the halls.

NO ACTION was taken on the proposal for a $5 increase, which would require approval by the Kansas Board of Regents, but Peters said it would be discussed and a motion made next fall.

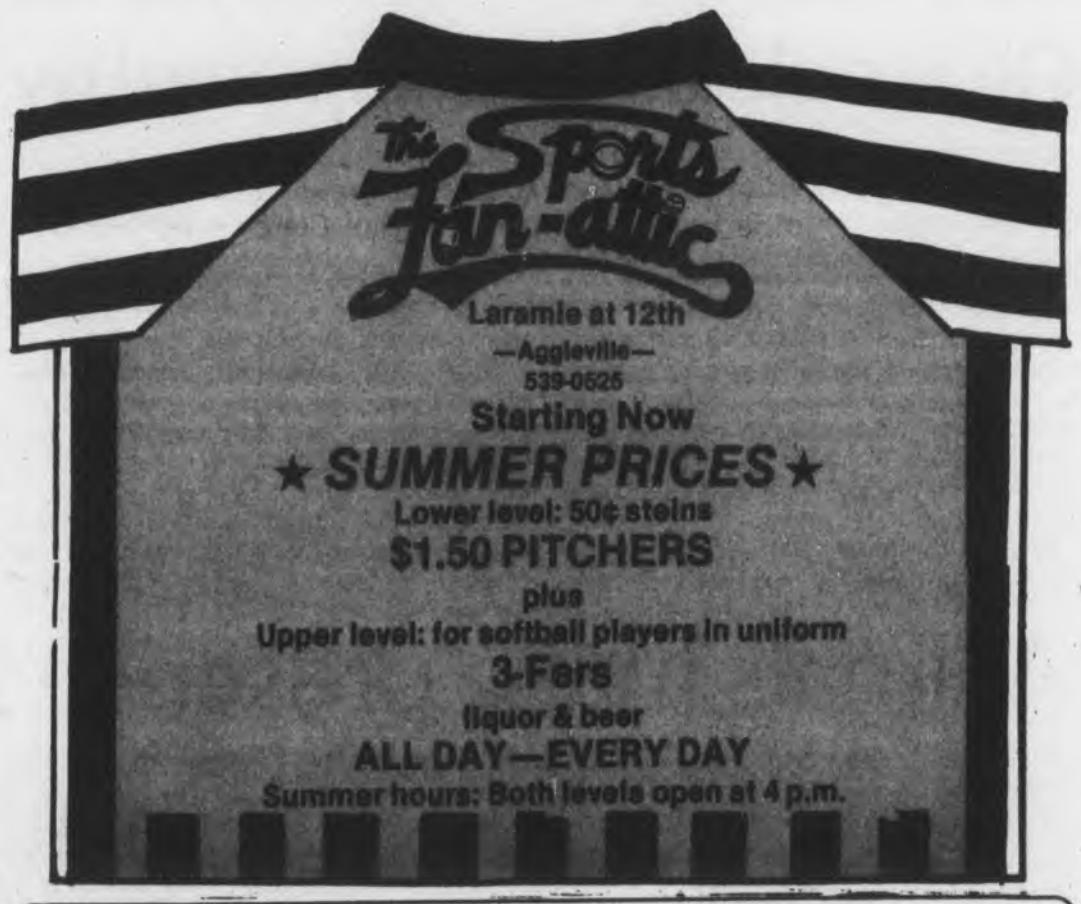
The number of contracts turned in so far this year for housing next fall has decreased from the same time last year, according to Frith.

The Department of Housing has received approximately 700 fewer contracts than last year, but Frith said he was not overly concerned about the decrease. Approximately 2,500 of contracts — half of the available contracts — have been turned in so far this year, Frith said.

"In past years, we have filled the halls earlier, but I don't think there should be any concern about this. The halls just may not be full until the first part of August this year," he said.

THE COUNCIL also discussed the renovation of Van Zile Hall. Frith said if the amount proposed for the renovations is approved by the regents, the hall may be closed in May 1984 to start the work.

Frith said no set amount for the renovation has been specified, but the appropriation would not be more than $1 million.



The hall will then be closed for summer school and both semesters the following year to allow workers to renovate the hall, which will include installing air conditioning such as that already used in the Derby Complex, he said.

The hall may be closed as long as 15 months, opening in time for the summer session in 1985, although the time it will take to renovate the building is still tentative because no contractor has been consulted about the job, Frith said.

IT COULD be possible to reopen the hall for the 1985 spring semester, he said, but that would mean shifting students into temporary living conditions until the renovations were completed.

When the hall is closed for construction, it may produce more competition for housing arrangements because those living in Van Zile will need to find other accommodations, he said.

According to Frith, no decision has been made whether Van Zile will continue as a coed residence hall.

Drinker's horse sense fails to pay off

FREMONT, Calif. — A man who rode his horse home from a bar was arrested for investigation of drunken driving after a policeman saw him nearly fall out of the saddle.

John Charles Black was released on $1,500 bail after his arrest early Monday. He was also accused of resisting arrest because the horse allegedly galloped off when the pursuing police officer turned on his siren.

His wife, Tammi, said she and her husband often ride home on horseback from bars. "After all, you can't hurt yourself on a horse and the horse knows its way back," she said. "It's the safest way to go if you're going to go out drinking.

"The horse watches out for cars...It gives you time to sober up between the bar and home."

But Fremont police said a horse falls under the state Vehicle Code definition of a vehicle: anything that can be "propelled, moved or drawn upon a highway."

Tape from rock singer helps crash victim

TILBURY, England — A taped appeal from British rock singer Boy George helped 12-year-old Lisa Green pull out of a three-week coma after a motorcycle crash, her father said.

"He told her how much we all missed her and loved her and said when she got better they would have to get together," Lisa's father, Brian Green, said Tuesday in a telephone interview.

"I really think it helped. The nurses said even though she was unconscious, Lisa cried every time they played the cassette because she was unable to talk. It wasn't long afterwards that she came back to us," the 42-year-old taxi driver said.

Boy George taped the 20-minute message to Lisa after hearing of her head injury and that she was a fan. The tape also carried get-well wishes from other members of his band, Culture Club.

Lisa, who is still recovering after waking up five weeks ago at Oldchurch Hospital in Romford, said she didn't remember hearing Boy George's voice, but the tape probably helped.

Helsinki accords violated, journalists say

BERN, Switzerland — The Swiss Journalists' Union charged Tuesday that authorities violated the Helsinki accords on a free flow of information between East and West by closing the Novosti press agency's Bern bureau last week and expelling its Soviet director.

Union director Fred Muller told reporters the union might lodge a formal complaint with the European Human Rights Commission, contending the moves were incompatible with the right to freedom of opinion.

The government said in a communique Friday Novosti's Bern bureau had directed a subversive campaign, ranging from helping to organize rallies against nuclear armament to "paramilitary" training of youthful demonstrators.

Expelled Novosti correspondent Alexei Dumov said Tuesday he considered the allegations "without any foundation."

Israel negotiates for nuclear reactor

TEL AVIV, Israel — A government official said Tuesday that Israel has recently stepped up negotiations with several West European countries to buy a nuclear reactor.

Uriel Linn, director-general of the Energy Ministry, told The Associated Press that Israel was seeking a plant that would generate 900 megawatts of electric power.

He declined to identify the countries involved in the discussions and would not comment on the progress of the negotiations which he said had begun "years ago."

The main obstacle has been Israel's refusal to sign the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty which would expose secret Israeli facilities to international inspection.

The government decided in principle in March to set up nuclear power stations to reduce Israel's dependency on imported oil and coal. Officials have said that Israel could build its own reactor but that it would be cheaper to buy one.

Worker charged with horse groom's death

CIRENCESTER, England — Police on Tuesday charged a fairgrounds worker with the murder of horse groom Suzanne Thatcher, who was slain only yards from where Princess Anne's husband Mark Phillips was competing in a horse trial.

Police charged Keith Morris, 27, of no fixed address, with the murder of the 18-year-old groom. Miss Thatcher's naked, strangled body was found Monday morning by a deerkeeper at Cirencester Park, the home of Lord Bathurst, a friend of the royal family.

Phillips was among hundreds of competitors in showjumping and cross-country events at the park Monday. Prince Charles, heir to the British throne, regularly plays polo on the estate.

Cirencester Magistrates' Court ordered Morris held without bail and continued the case until May 12.

Weather

Today will be ideal for getting on your horse and going bar hopping in Aggieville, with the high near 70 and low around 50. But be careful — it can probably get you in as much trouble in Kansas as it does in California.

Missile reduction should be studied

President Reagan should cautiously consider the offer made by Yuri Andropov, Soviet Communist Party chief, to balance the number of Soviet and NATO missiles and nuclear warheads in Europe.

The Soviet proposal is to limit the number of warheads and missiles in Europe to 162 — the number now held by Great Britain and France.

Currently, the Soviets have three warheads on every SS-20 medium-range missile. Under a proposal made in December, the Soviets would have reduced the number of SS-20s aimed at Europe to 162. The British and French missiles have 282 warheads; the Soviet total for 162 missiles is 486.

While the offer may seem as if it is a joke, it should be considered. Any way to lessen world tensions — especially when the words "nuclear war" are used — must be achieved.

Reagan should confirm the sincerity of the offer, and then explore ways to fulfill it. The offer is too good to let die as an off-the-cuff dinner remark. If Andropov is serious, then the European situation could be resolved. If he is not serious, then he will have to suffer the consequences of making an offer and then being unable to back up his word.

'Latinos' need unity

Editor,

As another K-State student, I would like to congratulate Nelson Vazquez (April 28) and Ricardo Salas (April 29) for speaking up and bringing stronger reasons to Student Senate and Collegian readers about the reduction in funds for the Hispanic organizations on campus, PRSO and MEChA. At the same time, I want to express my own opinion, with all respect to other "Latinos" at K-State.

I believe that it will not help to solve our organizations' financial problems if just a few students have the courage and the motivation to talk openly and ask for money from senate. For example, if we get together and we discuss our main organization problems with the president of PRSO, we might help improve our organization's financial problems.

"Latinos," we're as proud of our race, roots and culture as is anyone else! In conclusion, I do not want to criticize our organization or any students: "Latinos," en la union esta la fuerza.

Thoughts of home

There's no place like home — a too-often-used cliche which holds several meanings to students these days.

When students first come here, they pack most of their belongings and physically transport their room to school. But it's more than just moving objects and clothes. Their place of residence, as far as the University is concerned, is Manhattan.

Utility and phone bills are addressed to them here, not to "Mommy and Daddy." Albeit grades are sent to their permanent address initially, students have caught on to the fact that address is used for solicitations as well.

As their lives became enmeshed with those of Manhattanites through jobs or relationships, students find a reason to stay in Manhattan. Then again, it could be because they just don't want to spend another dull summer in their hometowns.

Gradually through the four years (or maybe more), Manhattan does become home to many students, legally and sentimentally.

Many students are even willing to register and vote in Riley County. They participate eagerly in the political process.

But there is another meaning of home for students.

Newly arrived freshmen occasionally develop homesickness and go home nearly every weekend. They seem to grasp for every excuse to return.

THIS TENDENCY GRADUALLY fades during the sophomore year. As each student adjusts to college life, excuses are found to stay in town.

The most common ones are, "I have a paper due," "I have a project due" or "I have a party to go to."

During this time, defining home becomes more difficult. As a student becomes more familiar with Manhattan, it no longer is viewed in awe.

Finding the post office is no longer initiated by a trek through the phone book. Going from the residence halls to downtown is no longer an odyssey through unknown streets and alleys.

Confusion arises when you say "I'm going home." What is home for college students?

Home for me is and always will be Beloit, Kan. For those of you who are not true-blue Beloitians, Beloit is approximately 60 miles northwest of Salina. For those of you who are not familiar with Kansas geography, Salina is approximately 70 miles west of Manhattan.

I have no problem defining home. After classes, I go back to the house for lunch. I never go home.

When I go home, it is to get away from Manhattan and unwind. I also am able to stock up on food while I'm home.

Somehow I had always thought Beloit would be there for me to come home to. This situation will most likely change this summer.

My parents are making plans to move to San Francisco, which leaves me with no place to go home to next semester.

THE THOUGHT OF NOWHERE to go home to does not bother me as much as having my parents more than a thousand miles away.

And don't anyone give me that shit about "Reaching out and touching them." Huge phone bills are the last thing I need when my main source of funds are my parents.

I can now sympathize with out-of-state students who blow off going home for short holiday breaks like Easter weekend. It just isn't worth the time and effort. You spend most of the weekend on the road getting there and back.

The security of having a hometown is gone, although the feeling of transiency has not quite sunk in. I have never really thought of Manhattan as my home, temporary though it may be.

I only attend classes here. I live at home — in Beloit.

The only problem I have encountered other than the emotional jarring of my karma is that of where to forward my mail. I know that may seem trivial to you, but the highlight of my day is my mail. (I lead such a fulfilling, exciting life, don't I?)

After I move out at the end of this month, I should forward the mail home. Since my summer plans are uncertain now, I don't have a summer address to forward to. Such is life.

Coming from a relatively ordinary background and hometown, I haven't been able to adjust very well.

Other people may like to move around a lot, but not me. I guess all I can do is pray to Chairman Mao for guidance.

'Get Lost' review has old-fashioned outlook...

Editor,

I would like to thank the Union Program Council for initiating the "Get Lost" concert. After spending a good part of the day in the sun, the weather appeared only to be the lesser of two disappointments of the event.

The major disappointment was to wake up the following morning to read such an amateurish review of the event in the Collegian on Monday. Words such as "disorganization" and "poor organization" were used to describe a problem caused, apparently, as the writer was unaware, by Kuzak's refusal to take the stage until what little equipment they had contributed to the event was covered with plastic.

After an hour-and-a-half delay, Kuzak took the stage to give a show described as "good old rock'n'roll," bringing back some "oldies but goodies" and "enjoyable," when words like "dinosauric," "just plain oldies" and "trite" seemed more appropriate.

I find it hard to see how it was "the guitar player who stole the show" with licks we've been hearing for the past 15 years, asinine comments about liking drunks and drugs and tongue-waggling antics which brought back nightmares of Kiss.

Next the Voices played "contemporary rock," including a pre-'70s Who medley, played copy after copy — no originals. They also failed to bring up one single dancer.

As for the statement, "the audience response was good," I found this to be true only in their finale."

As for the review of The Raves, I knew they were in trouble when the reviewer classified them as "new wave." The new wave was new in 1977, but is now a dated term used by those confused by progressive music of those who watch too much television. The Raves played a song about those people, Video Man, an originial as was most of their play list.

It seems the reviewer was intimidated by their blend of progressive rock, powerpop and psychedelic music played with the intensity of most hard-core bands. For the benefit of the reviewer, hard-core is a term used for bands we used to call punk back in the '70s.

As one of those "hardy souls," I found the review of The Zoo the only accurate appraisal of the show. It may need mentioning their hour-and-a-half delay was due mainly to an extensive sound check denied the previous two bands.

Having an interest in the Manhattan music scene, I find it discouraging to see such a "stuck in the '70s" attitude toward modern original music emanating from right here in Manhattan.

...local band deserves more credit

Editor,

I am writing in regard to Sue Schmitt's review "Disorganization, weather hinder 'Get Lost' concert."

Schmitt has a right to her opinion and that's exactly what her review is — her opinion. Her review neglects to mention quotes from any of the band members or from anyone from the audience.

Schmitt said there was a lack of organization and to a point, I must agree. However, considering the adverse conditions and the fact the bands combined their equipment for the first time, I thought the breaks between the bands were minimal. Under the adverse conditions, I thought all the bands had an exceptional sound.

Schmitt obviously didn't put all the facts together when she reviewed the bands. Without a doubt, Kuzak and The Voices had a very good sound mix and a very tight show. But when The Raves took the stage they delivered a high energy of rock'n'roll and they showed enthuasium which resulted in the worst audience response of the entire concert. Schmitt said The Raves, "started playing its own kind of music." I think this should have read, "The Raves played mostly original material, unlike any of the other bands." Schmitt also comments, "The quality of music The Raves played didn't match up to the performances of the other bands at the concert." If this is true, why didn't anyone show any more response for the other bands?

After The Raves finished, The Zoo took more than an hour to set up, which caused the crowd to dwindle. The Zoo had a crisp, clear reggae sound which was enjoyed by the few people who stayed.

I don't want to criticize any of the bands — Kuzak, The Voice, The Zoo — but I also think credit should be given when deserved to Manhattan's own — The Raves! If Schmitt is to continue to review such events, I would suggest more thorough reporting and combing more facts before attempting to print only her point of view.

Nooner coverage lacks accuracy

Editor,

Re: Tanya Branson's "Band's potential surfaces in Nooner."

I would like to thank Branson and the Collegian for the excellent coverage of our Nooner on April 19; it was nice to see that jazz isn't a forgotten idiom of music.

As I read Branson's review, I became more and more confused until I had to ask this question: "Were you even at our Nooner on April 19?" I think Branson has us confused with another group or else was in the wrong place that day. We didn't play any songs titled "Blues Walker," "Woodchop" or "Watermelon Band," nor did I play with a Steve Johnson, freshman in electrical engineering or a Danny Whitsitt, senior in marriage and family counseling and I have no special love for slow songs.

However, I did play with a Steve Johnson, junior in electrical engineering and a Danny Whitsit, graduate in marriage and family counseling and the songs we played were "Blues Walk," "Whitch hunt" and "Watermelon Man."

I would hope after we showed Branson the order of the songs and spelled them to her three times (which took 20 minutes), that she would be able to get those simple facts straight. I'm also sorry Branson has such a narrow mind that she can put her foot to only one type of song, but thanks for trying anyway.

I'd love to comment further on your abilities as a journalist, but unlike you, I try to refrain from criticizing something I know very little about, so why don't you try it. If not, see if you can cover recess at the grade school without screwing up.

Fee overcharge warrants protest

Editor,

Do I understand correctly that the University will not take any initiative in refunding the money it overcharged motorcyclists for parking permits? If so, what is the procedure for these who bought these permits to obtain a refund? Common decency, not to mention common sense, dictates that the injustice suffered by motorcyclists should be corrected immediately.

Instead, all we are told is that it will be a matter of months before any official action can be taken. It has even been mentioned nothing may be done and that the price of $5 per semester will resume next fall without any consideration for those who have already paid for two years worth of permits.

I propose that if the University cannot untangle its web of bureaucracy and resolve this matter before next fall, motorcyclists should refuse to buy '83-'84 permits. We could then collect all subsequent tickets resulting from our lack of proper permits and burn them in protest.

If this somewhat radical approach fails to solicit a favorable response from the proper authorities, perhaps a more subtle approach would be in order. For instance, let's say we inadvertently make out our checks for housing or similar payments $100 less than required.

When University officials discover our minor clerical mistake (and you thought light traveled fast), we can kindly inform them we are too busy and that it would take too long to consult our channels of moral obligation to determine what course of action is necessary. Consequently, we'll just forget the matter and resume paying the proper amount in the following months.

Soviets offer to compromise in arms talks

MOSCOW (AP) — In a new arms reduction offer, Communist Party chief Yuri V. Andropov said Tuesday that the Kremlin was prepared to balance Soviet and NATO nuclear forces in Europe on the basis of warheads as well as missiles.

The statement was seen as a concession by Moscow, although Andropov stuck to the Soviet position that aircraft-borne missiles must be counted in reducing European nuclear forces, and that British and French missiles must be included as part of the NATO arsenal.

President Reagan's latest proposal was to calculate the European balance only on the basis of U.S. and Soviet missile warheads.

Last December, Andropov offered to reduce the number of Soviet medium-range missiles targeted on Western Europe to 162 — equal to the number of British and French nuclear missiles. In exchange, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization would have to cancel its planned deployment of 572 new U.S. medium-range missiles in Western Europe.

But most of the British and French missiles have single warheads, compared with the triple warheads atop the Soviet SS-20 intermediate-range missiles.

The British and French missiles, mostly on submarines, have 282 warheads, but 162 SS-20s would have 486 warheads.

Andropov's statement was made during a Kremlin banquet speech honoring East German leader Erich Honecker.

"The Soviet Union has stated readiness not to have in Europe a single missile and a single plane more than possessed today by NATO countries," Andropov said.

"We are told that in this event the Soviet Union would have more missile nuclear warheads. Alright, we are prepared to reach agreement on the equality of nuclear potentials in Europe both as regards delivery vehicles and warheads with due account, of course, for the corresponding armaments of Britain and France.

"In other words, we stand for the USSR to have no more missiles and warheads mounted on them than on the side of NATO," he said.

"This same approach would be applied also to the aviation systems of this class deployed in Europe. Thereby an approximate equality would be maintained between the USSR and NATO both as regards mediumrange nuclear weapon delivery vehicles, that is missiles and aircraft, and by the number of warheads carried by them."

Six new members voted onto alumni board

University alumni have elected six new members to the Alumni Association's board of directors.

The 22-member board, the associations's policy-making body, authorizes all association programs. Eighteen members are elected and four appointed.

Five in-state representatives from nine candidates and one of two out-of-state candidates were elected in balloting conducted by mail during April.

The new board members, who will begin their three-year terms in June, are Dick Boyd, Norton; Dick Renfro, Salina; Marilyn Taylor, Winfield; Marjorie Warta, Newton; Scott Wieland, Colby; and Sally Baker, Dallas.

Professor, graduate named engineers of year

Ralph Lipper, professor of agricultural engineering, has been named 1983 Engineer of the Year by the Mid-Central Region of the American Society of Agricultural Engineers (ASAE).

Rodney S. Horn, a 1970 agricultural engineering graduate, was named the 1983 Young Engineer of the Year by the society. He is an advanced development engineer with the Hesston Corp.

Lipper and Horn previously received recognition as Engineer of the Year and Young Engineer of the Year from the Kansas Section of ASAE.

Lipper, who has been on the University faculty for 37 years, received his bachelor's and master's degrees from K-State. He is the author of a number of papers on environmental quality and electric power utilization, his fields of specialty.

Horn worked as an extension agricultural engineer for the University for a year before joining Hesston in 1971.

Four faculty to receive excellence awards

Four University faculty members are scheduled to receive Excellence in Undergraduate Teaching awards for 1983 at commencement May 14.

They are Gerry L. Posler, professor of agronomy; Robert T. Corum Jr., associate professor of modern languages; Patricia C. Crews, instructor in clothing textiles and interior design; and Bernard M. Frank, assistant professor of administration and foundation.

The awards include a $1,000 stipend made possible by the Amoco Foundation of Indiana and the KSU Foundation.

Acker names three to national Hispanic staff

President Duane Acker has appointed three members of the University's Hispanic community to serve on the Public Participation/Special Concerns Staff, Hispanic Concern Staff (HCS) of the Department of Education in Washington.

Eliezer "Eddie" Rodriguez, president of MEChA and sophomore in pre-law and theater, will serve as K-State's representative to the HCS staff. Andres Calvo, president of Puerto Rican Student Organization and senior in pre-veterinary medicine, will serve as the alternate member. Raul Guevara, Outreach coordinator in the Office of Minority Affairs and a graduate in political science, will serve as a resource person for the HCS staff and adviser to the student members.

The Public Participation/Special Concerns Staff, Hispanic Concerns Staff has been in existence for 12 years. One of its main functions has been to encourage the Hispanic public to participate in educational activities at all levels.

Rodriguez, Calvo and Guevara will serve as liaisons between HCS and the University.

University to confer 100,000th degree

A milestone has been reached in the University's history.

Jeffrey M. Simpson, senior in engineering technology, is scheduled to receive the 100,000th degree conferred by the University. Simpson, who will graduate at commencement May 14, completed requirements in December.

Among the 978 students who were graduated in December, Simpson was selected from an an alphabetical degree list generated by computer from the registrar's office. Since 1867, the University has awarded 100,358 degrees. Approximately 2,200 more degrees are expected to be conferred this month.

K-State has only one formal commencement ceremony a year. Students who completed degree requirements in October, December, and March, as well as candidates for graduation in May and August, are invited to participate in the exercises.

Phillips to enter prestigious theater program

Miles Phillips, senior in theater, has been accepted into the prestigious American Conservatory Theatre's (ACT) Actors Training Program.

Allen Fletcher, program director for the ACT, toured the country in February auditioning hopefuls for the 43 positions in the program. Phillips is the first K-State graduate to be accepted.

Phillips' career in the theater includes performances in roles such as Marchbanks in "Candida," Freddy Hill in "My Fair Lady," the Emcee in "Cabaret," as well as Malcolm in this spring's production of "Macbeth."

The American Conservatory Theatre, headed by William Ball, is located in San Francisco and is renowned for its excellent training as well as productions in repertory, touring, and PBS presentations.

With the program to begin in September, Phillips is currently raising funds for his living expenses and tuition in San Francisco, as the rigorous schedule will not allow him to work while at the conservatory.

NATIONAL DAY OF PRAYER

By the President of the United States of America

A Proclamation

Prayer is the mainspring of the American spirit, a fundamental tenet of our people since before the Republic was founded. A year before the Declaration of Independence in 1775, the Continental Congress proclaimed the first National Day of Prayer as the initial positive action they asked of every colonist.

Two hundred years ago in 1783, the Treaty of Paris officially ended the long, weary Revolutionary War during which a National Day of Prayer had been proclaimed every spring for eight years. When peace came the National Day of Prayer was forgotten. For almost half a century, as the Nation grew in power and wealth, we put aside this deepest expression of American belief—our national dependence on the Providence of God.

It took the tragedy of the Civil War to restore a National Day of Prayer. As Abraham Lincoln said, "Intoxicated with unbroken success, we have become too self-sufficient to feel the necessity of redeeming and preserving grace, too proud to pray to the God that made us."

Revived as an annual observance by Congress in 1952, the National Day of Prayer has become a great unifying force for our citizens who come from all the great religions of the world. Prayer unites people. This common expression of reverence heals and brings us together as a Nation and we pray it may one day bring renewed respect for God to all the peoples of the world.

From General Washington's struggle at Valley Forge to the present, this Nation has fervently sought and received divine guidance as it pursued the course of history. This occasion provides our Nation with an opportunity to further recognize the source of our blessings, and to seek His help for the challenges we face today and in the future.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, RONALD REAGAN, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim Thursday, May 5, 1983 National Day of Prayer. I call upon every citizen of this great Nation to gather together on that day in homes and places of worship to pray, each after his or her own manner, for unity of the hearts of all mankind.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand this 27th day of January in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and eighty-three, and of the Independence of the United States of America the two hundred and seventh.

Coalinga earthquake small by comparison with California's 'violent history' of tremors

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Compared with earthquakes that can —'and will — shake California, the tremor that shattered the small San Joaquin valley town of Coalinga was hardly a giant. The state's uneasy Earth holds jolts a hundred times greater.

Monday's earthquake, in an unexpected area and on a fault that was undetected, demonstrates another truism of California geology: Few places are risk-free.

Charles Richter, a retired California Institute of Technology seismologist who devised the most widely used scale of earthquake magnitude, has said he's often asked where a resident of California can go to avoid the threat of earthquakes.

His answer: "Nowhere ... There is almost no part of California where one might not expect a good-sized earthquake. The eventual occurence of a serious earthquake is about as near to a certainty as anything we have to deal with."

The quake, centered five miles from Coalinga, measured about 6.5 on the Richter scale, according to the University of California-Berkeley.

THE RICHTER SCALE MEASURES ground motion as recorded on seismographs. Each numerical increase on the scale represents a tenfold increase in magnitude. Thus a reading of 7.5 earthquake is 10 times stronger than a 6.5 tremor, and many scientists believe the energy release increases by much more than tenfold.

California has felt the Earth's real fury in the past. The infamous San Francisco earthquake of 1906 had an estimated magnitude of 8.3. It killed 500 people and destroyed much of the city.

Southern California suffered a quake of about the same intensity in 1857, when Los Angeles was a small town. The ground shook so hard and long some residents became seasick.

Scientists uniformly agree those quakes, each nearly 100 times the intensity of the Coalinga disaster, will be repeated someday.

The damage wrought by a quake stems from a combination of magnitude and location — plus the quality of the buildings that are being shaken.

"If (Monday's quake) had been another 10 miles away, I suspect the damage would have been much less," said seismologist Clarence Allen of Caltech. The area around Coalinga is largely deserted.

QUAKES GREATER THAN MAGNITUDE 6 occur once or twice a year somewhere in California, said Jerry Eaton of the U.S. Geological Survey in Menlo Park. As least they have been hitting that often since earthquake activity inexplicably increased throughout the state about five years ago. Before that, residents had enjoyed nearly three decades of unusual quiet.

Most of the large shakers rock unpopulated areas and cause little damage. Four hit the Mammoth Lakes area in May 1980 without great damage. But a 6.6 near El Centro in Southern California caused millions of dollars in damage in October 1979.

And in a metropolitan area such as Los Angeles or San Francisco, that size quake could be a disaster. The Sylmar quake of Feb. 9, 1971, killed 65 people and caused a half-billion dollars in damage in the San Fernando Valley of Los Angeles County.

After the Sylmar disaster, building codes were tightened beyond the 1934 strictures enacted after a 1933 quake in Long Beach killed 102 people. That's no guarantee of safety, of course. The El Centro tremor wrecked a new county building that met the criteria and had been billed as earthquake safe.

BUT THE BIGGEST RISK is probably the thousands of unreinforced brick and masonry buildings built before 1934. Their fragility was amply demonstrated Monday in Coalinga as aging downtown buildings collapsed into piles of loose bricks.

The culprit in California's shaky existence is the San Andreas Fault, a 600-mile rip in the Earth's fabric that winds like a serpent from the southern deserts to the rocky northern coast.

It was the San Andreas that gutted San Francisco in 1906 and rattled Southern California 49 years earlier. But even when the great fault sits still, the pressures it produces are the root of most earthquakes around the state, including almost certainly Monday's tremor.

The San Andreas is the boundary between two great chunks of the Earth's surface — giant plates that ride on an underground sea of partly molten rock. One plate carries the United States, the other the Pacific Ocean and a long sliver of the West Coast.

Earthquake

"There's no part of the city that's untouched," Mayor Keith Scrivner said Tuesday. "All of the residences are damaged, half of them extensively. It's terrible, everybody's going to lose a lot."

Brick fronts were torn from many of the two-story, 60-year old buildings downtown. The area, refurbished a dozen years ago, is "completely going to be demolished and hauled away — the entire original buildings in the city of Coalinga," Scrivner said. But he was optimistic: "We can build it again, and we will."

Coalinga city spokesman Bob Semple said preliminary estimates put damage at $25 million to the eight-block downtown commercial area alone. He said 300 of 2,600 homes suffered major damage.

All roads into Coalinga were restricted, said Officer Ten Eichman of the California Highway Patrol in Fresno.

County dump trucks cleared the streets of the 2-foot-high piles of bricks and rubble collected overnight by cranes and bulldozers working under floodlights. Electricity was restored to all but the downtown area, but phone service was erratic.

Hundreds of aftershocks were recorded. Some measuring as much as 4.0 on the Richter scale rocked the town every hour or so, sending residents scurrying into the streets.

Gov. George Deukmejian declared a state of emergency for Fresno County, setting the stage for large-scale state and federal assistance.

Classic car buffs enter road race; goal is to finish

By GLENDA HUMBERT
Collegian Reporter

"To dream the impossible dream, to fight the unbeatable foe..." These words from the classic song describe the thoughts of four area men whose dream — to compete in the Great American Race — is close to becoming a reality.

The Great American Race is a professional automotive competition stressing precise driving and navigational skills in antique and classic automobiles. The competition will be run as a time-speed-distance rally. The car that averages the closest to 50 miles per hour during the rally will be declared the winner.

COMING UP WITH a $5,000 entry fee and actually entering The Great American Race is the first part of a dream for David Laurie, associate professor of health, physical education and recreation; Todd Williams, senior in general business; Mark Bonjour, supervisor of Ahearn Field House; and Jack Hileman, metal shop supervisor for University Facilities — otherwise known as the Kansas Classic Touring Team.

To win is the team's next dream and "realistically we would like to finish the race," Laurie said.

The race is a spin-off of the New York-to-Paris road race in 1909 and the movie "The Great Race," he said.

The original Thomasflyer car which won the 1909 race has been restored and is

Prairie wildflowers: simple elegance

Tiny blooms found in meadows display colorful, delicate beauty

By JEANIE JOHNSON
Agriculture Editor

Bringing a showy display of bright and vivid colors to campus, flowers and shrubs burst into bloom to announce spring's arrival. Although less conspicuous, a more delicate, subtle beauty is found in prairie wildflowers.

The large-blossomed, prolific, highway-roadside wildflowers are most easily observed and include butterfly milkweed and Missouri eveningprimrose.

Butterfly milkweed, a beautiful red-to-orange flower, blooms in roadside ditches. Missouri eveningprimrose is a large yellow flower which grows on hillsides.

However, the flowers observed from roadways are not necessarily the nicest, according to Gene Towne, graduate in agronomy.

"To really appreciate the beauty, it doesn't have to be big and conspicuous," he said. "The tiny flowers are what I call 'belly plants.' You have to go out and almost crawl on your belly to see them because they are so small."

FOR EXAMPLE, Venus' looking-glass, a low, annual plant, displays minute blue or purplish flowers which are not recognizable from the road, but which are delicately beautiful. "It is very small, but it has a neat flower and neat leaves," Towne said.

"There are a lot more belly flowers than some others, but you just don't notice them. You notice the ones that stick out. I like to teach (about) belly flowers. If you are in to plants, you will start appreciating them."

Towne instructed University for Man wildflower classes for five years. He is "turned on" by plants and enjoys sparking others' interest in the plants growing around them.

He avoids scientific jargon when teaching others wildflower identification, although the Latin names flow from his lips as casually as the common names do.

"PEOPLE WANT TO be told the common name," he said. "Whether the common name is right or not, it really doesn't matter. They want to be told the name they can remember."

For example, a plant identified as Euphorbia marginata won't be remembered, he said, but snow-on-the-mountain will.

"I think most people are turned off by some teachers who speak scientific terminology," Towne said, explaining that the Latin system of naming plants is "fine for the scientific community but needs to be halted when talking to the general public."

The Latin names can be confusing and difficult for the beginner to remember, he explained, discouraging students who may have a strong desire to know what a plant is.

What is remembered and related to, he said, is the story behind the plant. The story about jimsonweed, for example, is one of Towne's favorite yarns.

Normally considered a weed, jimsonweed or "stinkweed" bears blue and white flowers which bloom in early morning.

Staff/Hurriyet Aydogan

Dutchman's breeches grow along a wooded path.

According to Towne, in 1676 British troops surrounded Jamestown, Va., and were attempting to crush the settlers' rebellion, known as Bacon's Rebellion.

The soldiers camped near Jamestown, and when they ran out of food they began looking for plants to eat. One plant, known as "white man's weed" by the Indians because it grew in areas disturbed by the colonists, was prolific in the area.

"They ate it, they died and Bacon won his rebellion," Towne said. The poisonous plants were originally named "Jamestown weeds," but the pronunciation was relaxed to jimsonweed through time.

The nearly 1,000 species of forbs, or herbaceous wildflowers, in Kansas are best observed in spring and fall, according to Clenton Owensby, professor of agronomy and author of "Kansas Prairie Wildflowers."

The prairie flowers avoid intense competition with the warm-season perennial grasses, he noted, by blooming early and late in the growing season. However, a wide diversity of flowering dates allows for continuous wildflower blooming during the warm months.

Owensby's book is aimed primarily at the non-scientific reader and lists only a few major species, representing the showy, common prairie wildflowers.

The book came about because of a demand for information by persons with a limited background in botany.

"I did it not for the money, but because there was a need there," Owensby said of his book.

Included for each species in the book are a color photograph, distribution map, plant description, flowering dates and medicinal or edible properties.

Wildflowers are a favorite pastime for John Sjo, professor of economics. He has successfully grown more than 100 species of flowering vascular plants on his 10-acre tract near Manhattan.

Understanding the specific habitat requirements of wildflowers has been a key to his success. He used the natural ecosystems created by a stream, a bog, open prairie, wet woodlands and dry woodlands to create a wildflower haven.

Collecting seeds and transplanting from western Saline, eastern Ellsworth and Riley counties, Sjo established the wildflower plants on his land during a 10-year period.

Along a grassy, scarcely trodden path in the woods near his home, the delicate, minute beauty of the wildflowers would scarcely be noticed by the casual passer-by — yet each plant was nurtured to acceptance of its surrogate home by his skilled, gentle hands.

DUTCHMAN'S BREECHES, a pale pink or white flower with breeches-shaped blossoms, grows only in rich, open, wooded areas.

Also along Sjo's wildflower path are found toothwort, toad trillium, field pansy, ground plum, bloodroot and dogtooth violet, also known as fawn lily or trout lily.

Leaves of the fawn lily are mottled with brown, like a fawn's back.

The bloodroot is among the first of the woodland plants to bloom in spring, during the first two weeks of April. When broken or bruised, the rhizome (underground stem) yields a red liquid, a special secretion once used by Indians for paint or dye.

The field pansy has petals in combination of white, yellow and purple. It is also known as Johnny-jump-up, which is appropriate because it is up from its seedbed in the early morning of spring and blooms before April passes.

Ground-plum milkvetch, a perennial herb with a woody taproot, bears a flesh-colored-to-purple fruit. The fruit may be eaten raw or cooked. Dakota Indians called it "fruit of the buffalo."

Near Manhattan are many areas which are prime for wildflower observation, Towne said.

Unmowed areas of Warner Park, federally owned areas near Tuttle Creek Reservoir and Marlatt Park near Seth Childs Road and Marlatt Avenue are typically good places to see wildflowers, he said.

Local businesses stay 'all in the family'

Sons, daughters carry on tradition in Aggie stores

By LUCINDA ELLISON
Staff Writer

Like father, like son...and like daughter?

Father and son businesses have been a tradition in America, but now the male members of the family are not the only ones getting into the act.

Five Aggieville businesses are carrying on the family business tradition. Daughters and sisters play a part in two of these. Although the business may or may not have been established by the senior member of the family, four will be carried on in the future by the younger partners.

"They (the children) do know that eventually they will either have the business or the profits from it," George Penland, owner of Cinderella Dry Cleaners, said.

"I think one of the main things is they've got something to work for, where they wouldn't in any other job."

Penland, his daughter Nancy Moss and son Darrel all work together now, but future plans for the business will leave the operation and ownership to Darrel and Nancy when their father retires.

"What we're working for is to get out from under it (the business) and give it to the family. In fact, they want me to leave now," George said, laughing.

Penland, who began in the dry cleaning business managing a store, has 18 years of experience. During that time, he has employed all six of his children.

"WHEN I STARTED in the business, we sat down and I said, 'I can do this if I have help.' So they have all worked here," he said.

Another business currently being run by a father and son team was established 58 years ago. Haynes Style Shop is under a 50-50 partnership between Ira Haynes and his son J.R. Although J.R. has only been in partnership with his father for little over a year, plans for a father-son shop have always been in their minds.

"We'd always planned that he'd be in here," Ira said.

"When he came over here, he took over half of it. He'll probably end up taking over the whole thing after I quit," he added.

ORIGINALLY, J.R. attended barber school and cut hair to put himself through K-State.

"After three years I got tired of not making any money," J.R. said.

After quitting the University, J.R. worked for 12 years at Junior's Barbershop in Aggieville, before buying half of his father's shop.

"I was paying a big percentage over there. I could buy half this building and make a lot more money. I came over here because I wanted to," he said.

ALTHOUGH FAMILY BUSINESSES traditionally begin with the father and are passed on, The Candy Man, not inc., originally was a joint effort by a father and son.

"We more or less started it together," Don Pickering Sr. said.

Pickering and his son Don became business partners 11 years ago, beginning with a downtown business. After losing the lease on their building two years ago, the Pickerings moved to their current location in Aggieville under The Candy Man name.

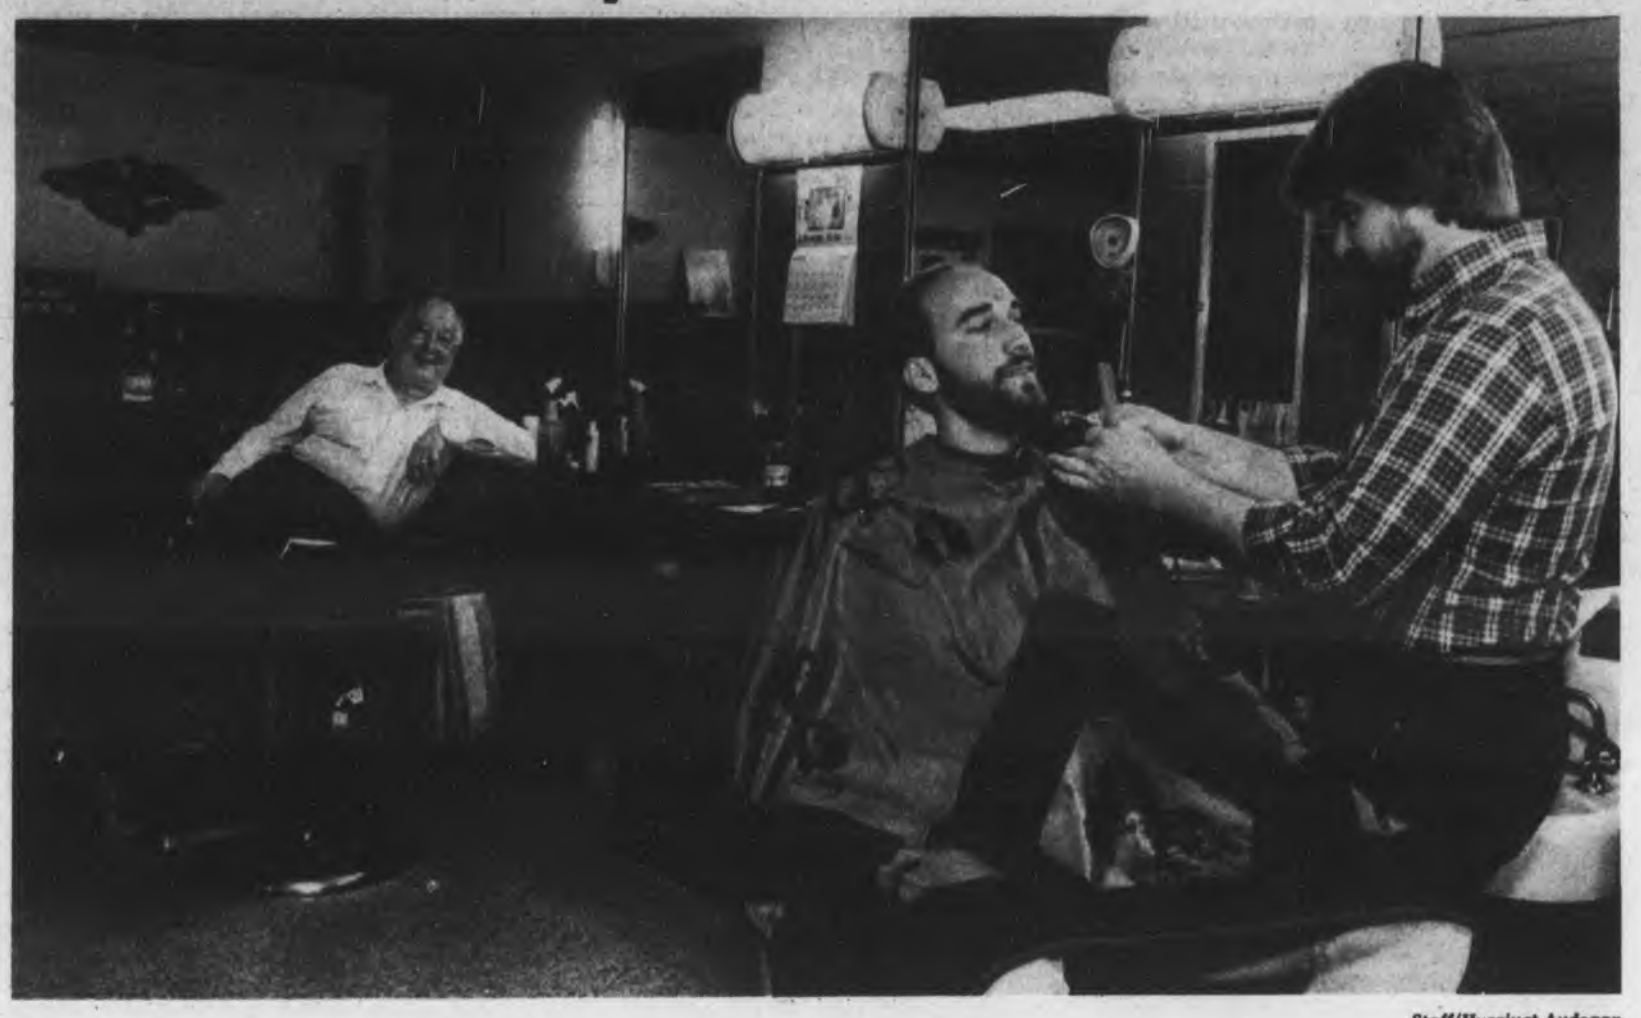
Pickering Jr. called the partnership "a general consensus situation."

"I wanted to go into the retail business when I got out of college and it was advantageous to keep it in the family, I guess," he said.

"If I were going to start over again, I'd make changes, which is something you always do, but I wouldn't change going into business together," Pickering Jr. added.

The older partner's wife also participates in the business, but is more behind the scenes, keeping the shop straight and giving opinions on new items.

ANOTHER FATHER and son team runs Stickel Cleaners and Shirt Laundry. Although he began under Stickel in 1949, Tony Gieber has taken over ownership of the business and intends to pass the position on to his 21-year-old son, Brian.



"I started sweeping floors in eighth grade," Brian said. "I got a chance to make a litle money and it was a good way for him to keep an eye on me," he added. Gieber's daughter, Jeanette Gould, also works with her father in the store.

The father and son team is aided by Jeanette's help in checking garments in and out to customers. Geiber spots and cleans, and Brian works the front and makes deliveries. Although both children are part of the business, future plans include the older Gieber leaving the store to his son.

The Palace is a father and son business that began in 1980. Dean Taylor bought the business and hired his son, Bryan, as store manager.

"I'M FORTUNATE that Bryan had a natural ability for this position," Taylor said. "He just has a natural ability for pur-

Utility rate increases under consideration, await public input

TOPEKA (AP) — Formal proceedings before the Kansas Corporation Commission concluded Tuesday on proposals by three electric utilities to immediately increase their rates by nearly $107 million.

The commission, which regulates utilities in Kansas, finished testimony from utility officials and will take the three proposals under advisement after a special hearing Thursday to hear comments from the public.

The last witnesses appeared for the Western Power Division of the Centel Corp. urging approval of a $10.1 million or 14.4 percent rate increase for the utility.

Kansas Power and Light Co. is asking for a $76.3 million or 26 percent rate increase, and Kansas Gas and Electric Co. has requested a $20.3 million or 6 percent rate increase.

The utilities want the higher charges to take effect immediately to pay for the cost of building the third generator at the Jeffrey power plant, which is scheduled to begin operation in June. The three companies are joint owners of the Jeffrey Energy Center near St. Marys, in northeast Kansas.

If fully granted, the Centel proposal would add $11.70 to monthly bills of residential customers using 750 kilowatt hours of electricity. The KPL proposal would raise monthly bills by $11.16 and the KG&E request would add $2.90 to customer bills.

However, the staff of the Corporation Commission has recommended cuts in each case, proposing a $73.4 million increase for KPL; $18.8 million for KG&E; and $8.4 million for Centel-Western Power.

The interim rate cases before the commission are designed to implement the proposed higher charges around June 1 when Jeffrey three begins operation. Permanent rate cases will be filed in early 1984.

chasing, designing and displaying merchandise. I had the background and administrative portions."

Although both father and son are pleased with the business, there hasn't been much thought toward Bryan's ownership of the store when the elder Taylor retires.

"We haven't made any plans along that line. It'd only be a natural thing. But there are no definite arrangements at the moment," Taylor said.

Although families sometimes disagree, these businesses have been successful because the partners work out difficulties.

"We get along pretty good as long as I can holler and he listens," the older Gieber said.

"MAYBE WE flare up and holler a little. We holler at one another like you couldn't with other help. He apologizes and I apologize, and then it's over with," he said.

Having several children employed at one time didn't cause conflicts for Penland and his family.

"There were no major character clashes, just run-of-the-mill ones," Penland said. "That's growing up. You have the same thing at home. I don't think any family is much different."

While he employed four children at one time, Penland and his wife attempted to vary schedules in order to separate their children on the job. Although Darrel and Nancy were not working together at a young age, they currently work similar schedules.

"WE PROBABLY get along better than any of the other kids did working down here," Darrel said.

"The main advantage there is she (Nancy) doesn't live at home anymore," the elder Penland added.

The owner and manager of The Palace have not found conflicts in running a business together.

"It's really no different than working with someone unrelated. We basically both have our areas of responsibility. There's no real conflict in any areas," Taylor said.

As manager, the younger Taylor's duties differ from his father's.

"I do all the buying, stocking and overseeing of the help. He (Dean) pays the bills and that stuff," Bryan said.

The two men also get different days off during the week, with the exception of busy seasons, when they work together six days a week.

HAYNES AND HIS SON enjoy doing things together outside of the job, despite their working together. In addition to traveling together, they have shared time hunting and fishing.

"We have a wonderful relationship. Being my only boy, we never have any problems," the older Haynes said. "I think a father and son have enough respect for each other that they would bend over backwards for one another."

Because each partner handles his own business, both men keep books for his share of the business and split costs such as utilities. Haynes handles the wide range of products sold in the shop, along with walk-in business. His son takes appointments.

"I like it real well We get along super. You've got to bite you're tongue once in a while, but that's the way it is," the younger Haynes said.

"A LOT OF our ideas don't correlate. You listen to both sides and then go with his ideas. You've got to respect them (parents), that's for sure," the younger partner added.

Father and son owners of The Candy Man found dividing duties an aid in making the business work.

"We've basically got it down to where each has certain things to do. It's a good relationship," the older Pickering said.

"That's why it works well, because we don't get into one another's hair too much," he added.

Depending on the individual businesses, a family operation can have advantages and disadvantages.

"There's a trust there you couldn't put on a stranger," Nancy Moss said.

Her father agreed. "There are a lot of advantages for me. I know what they can do when I leave.

"A disadvantage is that they can get by with stuff they couldn't, working for someone else," Penland added. "Normally, they're like everybody else. We work when there's work. When there's not, we all loaf," he said jokingly.

The younger partner at Haynes Barber Shop has found both disadvantages and advantages in the working relationship with his father.

"It's all a business agreement no matter how you put it. It's probably more relaxed," he said.

The senior owner of The Candy Man discovered starting the partnership may have been easier in a family business.

"I would say in our case it was easier to start together than for two strangers, because we were very compatible," he said.

"I don't know that it brought the family closer together, but it kept the family from drifting apart as families tend to do these days," Pickering Jr. said.

Disney film shows promise utilizing suspense, romance

By GARY JOHNSON
Collegian Reviewer

"Something Wicked This Way Comes" is the newest offering from Walt Disney Productions, and for the most part, it is their most promising film to date.

There was once a time when the Walt Disney Productions label was distinctly displayed in advertisements for their films. The label is now discreetly hidden and for good reasons — the ultraconservative approach to filmmaking that had been pursued since the death of Walt Disney had made the studio's name synonymous with banality.

The past few years have found the studio struggling to change its image with risky projects like "Tron", which failed to break even at the box office by several million dollars.

In the newest film director Jack Clayton takes the audience on a romantic trip into time and places of the past. As the film begins, a narrator looks back fondly on the autumn days of his 12th year. This sets the audience back in time to the small-town America of the 1930s.

As a boy, our narrator Will Halloway is first seen hurdling the bushes beside a sidewalk with his friend Jim Nightshade as they run home from school. The scene is complete with the chilling air, blustery winds and swirling leaves of autumn. The storefronts and houses are rendered with the gentle distortions that occur in memory.

A SENSE OF SUSENSE is created early by a howling noise in the distance, which Jim hears but Will cannot. This difference between the two boys becomes quite important as the film progresses.

Will's father (Jason Robards) can feel something odd in the air as well. He is an old man who, because of heart trouble, has been distanced from his son.

The arrival by train of Dark's Pandemonium Carnival one October night brings Will and Jim scurrying away from home ready to explore with imaginations running rampant. They find the carnival tents and caravans have been arranged quite inexplicably in only a matter of seconds while the grounds appear absent of people.

THIS DOESN'T bother Jim — he doesn't ask any questions — but Will is puzzled and approaches the carnival with great trepidation.

They find much more than a simple carnival. There is a merry-go-round which advances age when moving forward and reverses age when moving backward. The "Fabulous MIRROR Maze" shows people their lost youth.

The townspeople flock to the carnival and become mesmerized when they find their greatest dreams fulfilled. Soon though, they begin disappearing, hanging 'Closed Due to Illness' signs in their shop windows.

Jim is initially tempted by the carnival's ability to make him a grown-up, but once he and Will discover what has been happening to the rest of the townspeople, they set out running.

RAY BRADBURY'S allegorical novel of the corruption of our souls, on which the film is based, was a rather odd choice for filming because allegory rarely transfers well from the printed page. His screenplay though, keeps much of the novel's beautiful language intact while the careful set designs faithfully recreate the small-town atmosphere.

For the first half of the film the atmosphere is so completely intoxicating that large gaps in the plot seem insignificant, but

Humor in 'Real Life' falters; portrayal of reality 'boring'

By GARY JOHNSON
Collegian Reviewer

Albert Brooks is finding out the same thing that Steve Martin did with "The Jerk": playing an obnoxious character for two hours can become quite wearisome on the audience.

Brooks' short subject films were successful because the audience was given only small doses of his grating personality. In short scenes, he is even quite funny, but when the same character is on screen for an entire feature-length film, the comedy begins to wear thin after the first half hour.

Brooks' "Real Life" starts out with a promising premise: put a camera inside a family's home and watch the "reality of their lives" unfold. The film begins with a search for the "perfect American family." Through vigorous testing of hundreds of applicants, Brooks decides on the Yeagers of Phoenix, Ariz.

To minimize the intrusion that a cameraman would make, special cameras that look like astronaut helmets are used. The cameramen crouch about the Yeagers' home with their hands stuck into the control openings located below the ear holes.

THE OPENING SCENE in the Yeagers' home finds the mother, Jeanette (Frances Lee McCain), with a bad case of the cramps. As she yells at her children, her husband Warren (Charles Grodin) speaks into the camera, trying to make excuses for her actions. Later, Jeanette tries to apologize to Brooks for the bad opening, but he says the scene was great, just what he was looking for. She decides to make it up to him by allowing Brooks and cameramen to go with her to the gynecologist. He says, "I don't know. I'm hooked into a PG rating." When they get to the gynecologist, the doctor thinks he is being filmed by the "60 Minutes" crew and pushes Brooks out of the office.

When filming Warren operating at his veterinary clinic, Warren becomes so nervous that he orders a double dose of anesthetic for a horse. When the horse dies, Warren begs Brooks not to use the film for fear it might destroy his career. Brooks insists the scene was wonderful — just the reality he was searching for.

FROM THIS POINT ON, the film falters gravely. The family is thrown into depression once Jeanette's grandmother dies. The depression is funny for about the first 30 seconds, but unfortunately it drags on for about 15 minutes. This becomes typical of the entire latter half of the movie. The problem is there just aren't enough ideas to sustain a feature-length film. The jokes are repeated too often and pushed far too hard.

The film shifts away from the Yeagers in the second half and focuses upon how the film has affected Brooks. This is a major fault because once Brooks is on screen for large periods of time he ceases to be funny and instead becomes grating.

WHEN THE PSYCHOLOGICAL institutes backing the film decide to pull because they think the film is "altering reality," Brooks decides that people don't want reality. He looks for a "fake" way to end the film. He says, "People crave fake. That's what art is. Borrow a little here, a little there, put it all together, it's something new."

After discarding ideas for blowing up the planet ("Star Wars") or having the family eaten by a big fish ("Jaws"), he decides on the burning of Atlanta ("Gone With the Wind").

"Real Life" contains some very funny bits in the first hour — those scenes are almost

Commission examines storage parking law, authorizes city fire protection for University

By JANICE CARLTON
Collegian Reporter

A possible ordinance which would prohibit storage parking in Manhattan was discussed by the Manhattan City Commission Tuesday night.

The commission received a report from William Frost, city attorney, regarding current city ordinances which grant authority to tow away vehicles parked on city streets or private property longer than 24 hours.

Frost said the current ordinances were not constitutional.

"The ordinance says if a vehicle is parked in one place for 24 hours, it can be towed," he said. "That in itself has some constitutional defects."

Frost said the report was in response to renewed interest by local citizens who wish to have stored cars towed from their streets. Much of the renewed interest came as a result of the commission's decision not to establish a parking zone along Fairchild Avenue, he said.

"If towing is necessary, we need to provide the ordinances that will satisfy statutory requirements," Frost said, adding that any time a vehicle is towed, there must be a certain set of steps to follow.

COMMISSIONERS EXPRESSED general agreement with Frost's report, highlighting the need to address the storage parking problem in the city, particularly in areas surrounding K-State.

"I personally feel we need an ordinance for storage parking," Mayor Wanda Fateley said.

Commissioner Dave Fiser said he did not favor towing, unless other methods of discouraging storage parking fail.

"I'd like to see us work this out with towing as a last resort," Fiser said.

Frost said the storage parking problem primarily affects areas surrounding K-State as well as the Manhattan Municipal Airport.

"I don't know if you want to address the storage parking problem citywide if the problem exists only in certain areas," he said.

Upon hearing and discussing Frost's report, the commission decided to investigate the possibility of creating a revised ordinance to address the problem.

IN OTHER BUSINESS, the commission authorized Mayor Fateley to execute a contract with the University for fire protection services. The one-year contract will provide K-State with city fire protection for a charge of $57,000, lower than the amount favored by commissioners.

"The University did not feel they could commit any more than that," City Manager Don Harmon said. Harmon added the contract was only for one year, with future costs for fire protection to be negotiated upon renewal, if necessary.

"This was an equitable relationship for services rendered," Harmon said.

Commissioner Gene Klingler said he favors the contract with the University. He said K-State has inadequate facilities to fight major fires.

KLINGLER ALSO said the city has an obligation to meet the needs that could arise from a fire in one of the high-rise residence halls.

"We cannot rescue people in the upper floors of those dormitories," Klingler said. "We have an obligation to do everything we can to make sure everybody we say we're protecting is actually protected."

Klingler suggested the commission look into ways of dealing with high-rise fires such as the possibility of bringing in helicopters from Fort Riley.

Commissioners also received a progress report on the proposed downtown shopping mall project from Mel Roebuck, vice president of Forest City Rental Properties Corp., developer of the downtown mall project.

"I think there is general dissatisfaction that UDAG was held over," Roebuck said concerning the city's Urban Development Action Grant application which was "rolled over" — turned down — in April.

"I have worked too long for all bureaucracies. I am not surprised," he said.

Roebuck said Forest City had arranged a general agreement with Jones Store and J.C. Penney regarding leasing space in the proposed mall.

"I feel the project is very much go," Roebuck said.

Fateley said she wants the project to make progress this month.

"I think May is the month we're going to have to get this together," she said. "The city would like to see some progress made at this time."

Disney

later the flaws make the storytelling virtually incomprehensible.

For the most part, Walt Disney Studio has put together a romantic but not overly sentimental adaptation that doesn't resort to simple-minded blood spattering in creating its suspense.

Jonathan Pryce creates a classically villainous role in Mr. Dark, the proprietor of the carnival. His charisma becomes as alluring to the film audience as do the carnival attractions to the townspeople.

Brooks

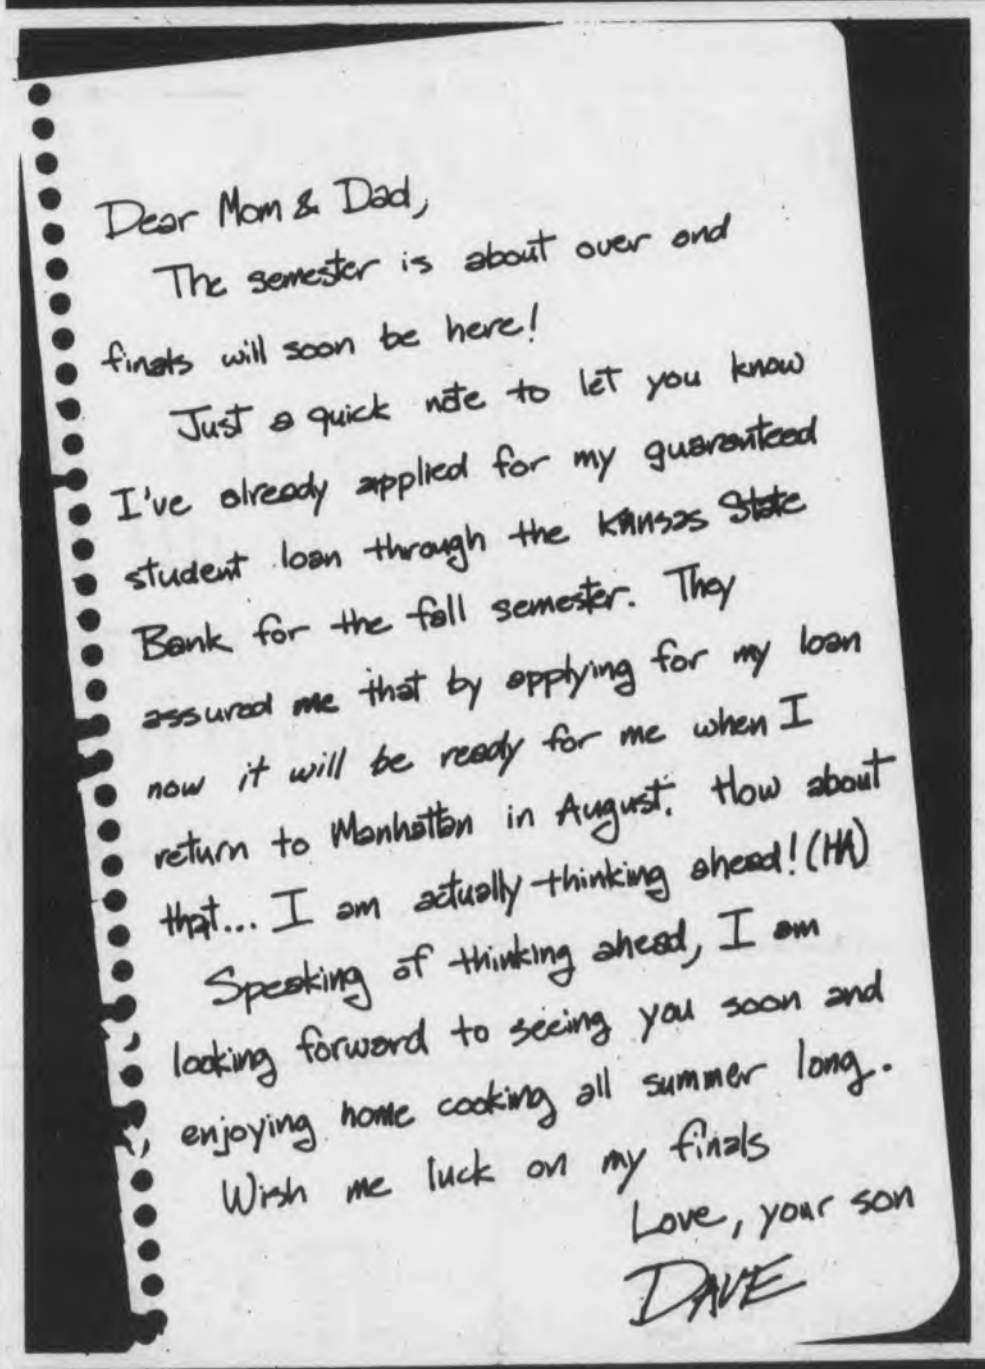
enough to recommend the movie — but later on, the film becomes just plain boring. Maybe that is the point — a "typical American family" is dull — but making a boring movie definitely isn't good cinema.



A good film could have made their dull lives interesting by finding new comedic angles for presenting their everyday actions. That is what the first half of the film does, but then Brooks runs out of ideas.

Wildcat track coach brings out best in athletes

By JUDI WRIGHT
Collegian Reporter

He's 5-feet-10, 190 pounds and, in his own words, full of "enthusiasm, involvement and intensity."

During the morning and early afternoon hours, he sits behind a tidy, efficient desk while his late afternoons are spent at practice sessions.

His office in Ahearn Field House 115 has the simple decor of a winning coach. A trophy won just last fall at the Women's Big Eight Cross Country Championships is displayed on the corner of his desk as a reminder of one of his recent accomplishments. Award plaques and pictures of K-State's top track and cross country athletes line the walls as if they are a new type of wallpaper.

Miller runs the Wildcat track program with the help of his assistant coaches, Jan Samuelson and Greg Kraft. Two graduate assistants, Randy Cole and John Capriotti, also aid Miller in track.

Two years ago, Miller came to K-State and undertook the responsibilities of keeping the track program as it was, but also giving it any needed improvements.

MILLER SAID his first reaction to a K-State coaching job was negative because he liked California, where he coached before coming to K-State. But California Polytechnic State University in San Luis Obispo was an NCAA Division II school and wasn't well known.

K-State, on the other hand, was a Division I school, and Miller said he believed it belonged to a better conference — the Big Eight.

Miller likes Manhattan and finds the K-State atmosphere "very pleasant."

"I felt it (coming to K-State) was a challenge and knew K-State's program was good but needed improvements," Miller said.

And improvements are just what he added.

SINCE COMING to the University, Miller has coached athletes who have broken more than 45 percent of the records in the men's indoor and outdoor track and field events. Sixty percent of the records in the women's division have been replaced by Miller-coached athletes.

In the overall team performance, the men's and women's track sqauds have been steadily climbing the ladder of success. In the Big Eight Indoor Track Championships in February at Lincoln, Neb., the women's team finished second compared to its seventh-place finish last year. The men finished fourth this year, improving on their eighth-place finish last year.

In cross country, the men have moved from sixth to third and the women have moved from third to first in the time that Miller has coached the sport.

But, like anything, there are two sides to every coin. As is the case with anybody, there are people who don't follow Miller's methods.

"I THINK because I'm so enthusiastic, involved and intense, people find it's too good to be true," Miller said.

"I'm so intense and aggressive it's hard for people to handle it, but I accept it."

Miller said he has his own way of coaching just as coaches in any other sport have their own ways.

"I don't care how people see me," he said. "I'm only concerned with the people I work with."

Miller's goal is to "bring the absolute best out of each person."

"I want people to challenge themselves," Miller said. "I want to be surrounded by people who aren't afraid to do this.

"Contrary to what most people think, not all people want to succeed. I'm helping people who want to succeed and challenge themselves. Through this, winning will come."

MILLER'S MAIN sport interests not only include track and cross country, but football.

"I have always enjoyed football," he said. "I like the strategy involved with the players moving around the field."

Miller played football at Bradley University in Peoria, Ill., and had a chance to play professionally with the Detroit Lions. An injury erased his grid chances, so he turned to teaching and coaching because he "didn't want to leave athletics."

In 1965 Miller received a bachelor's degree from Bradley University in physical education and English literature.

He continued his education at Governors State University in Park Forest South, Ill., and received a master's in contemporary English literature in 1970.

MILLER'S EDUCATION didn't stop there, however. In 1978 he received a master's in physical education and biomechanical analysis. That was at California Polytechnic State University.

According to Miller, he has written and published several articles all over the world "especially in France." He writes about the techniques of track and field but mainly about field events.

Miller has also spoken at numerous clinics and dinners throughout the United States and abroad. His topics range from biomechanical information (action-reaction aspects of the human body) to motivation and organization.

Through Miller's enthusiasm, intensity and involvement, he motivates many of the athletes and groups with whom he comes into contact.

"Coach Miller is a super motivator," Mike Bradley, member of the men's track squad, said. "When he's done talking to you, you want to compete."

Women's soccer club beats Wichita Rebels

WICHITA — Keeping its perfect record intact, the women's soccer club defeated the Wichita Rebels 1-0 over the weekend. K-State sports a 3-0 record.

The Wildcats won the game despite being short-handed, having only eight players. Teams are supposed to have 11 players, but they can play with a minimum of eight.

Diane Chamblin scored K-State's only goal on an assist by Mary Linn Roberts. The defense did the rest, preventing the Rebels from getting the ball near the K-State goal.

K-State's next game is against the Wichita Sizzlers at 2 p.m. May 8 in Manhattan at the old football stadium.

Rugby club gains tie with Johnson County team to end season

The K-State Rugby Club, stifled by a tough Johnson County club, had to settle with a season-ending 12-12 tie Saturday.

K-State started the game with hard hitting and good running, but could not capitalize on its opportunities. K-State would move the ball down the field, only to have Johnson County move it right back. Johnson County's Blaine Heggeman finally broke through K-State's back line and ran the ball into the try zone to draw first blood. Mike Sinovic connected on the extra point and suddenly a stunned K-State club was down 6-0.

The score had an awakening effect on the Wildcats as they began to punish Johnson County runners.

K-State's Kelly Coyan grabbed a loose ball and sprinted toward the goal line. Johnson County kept him from scoring, but seconds later Coyan snatched a stray line-out pass from a Johnson County player and dove into the try zone.

Bill Knopick added the kick to knot the score at 6-6.

At this point the game began to get wild. Both teams were putting everything they had into each hit. The 'Cats were bigger and in better condition, however, and the Johnson County players were forced to take numerous injury time-outs. K-State began to move the ball all over the field but still could not get into the try zone.

TIME AFTER TIME, K-State had the ball near the zone but good tackling or bad ball handling prevented the Wildcats from pulling ahead.

Near the end of the first half, K-State had a four-on-one run and it looked as if the team was going to get in. But another fumbled pass stopped the run and K-State had to settle with a 6-6 tie at the end of the first period.

The Wildcats came out with fire in their eyes in the second half as Greg Benton leveled a Johnson County player on the kickoff.

K-State was still punishing the Johnson County club when Wildcat Doug Scherick broke through the Johnson County back line and raced 20 meters to put K-State ahead finally. Knopick made good on the extra point and the 'Cats were up 12-6.

K-STATE CONTROLLED the ball with most of the action taking place in Johnson County's half of the field. K-State would move the ball down and Johnson County would kick the ball out.

Then Johnson County finally got its chance, moving the ball right to the K-State try line. The Johnson County scrum then pushed the ball into the zone only to have K-State touch it down. The Johnson County scrum again pushed it in, but K-State again was the team that touched the ball down.

The third scrum had the same result and the teams got set for a fourth scrum. K-State stopped Johnson County, but Sinovic picked up the ball and forced his way into the zone. He then dropped the ball, but fell on top of it to score the try. Sinovic then hit the extra point to tie the game at 12-12.

K-State immediately moved the ball up field to the Johnson County try line, but the Wildcats could not get the score.

WILDCAT HEAD COACH Mike Patten was not pleased with the tie or the team's play.

"We couldn't do anything right," he said. "We had a few good moments out there, but not enough. We were intense but not intense enough.

"This is a poor way to end the season. It is easier to say the word 'tie' than 'lost,' but it is kind of worthless to work and play this hard and end up the same as you started."

K-State finished the season with an 8-2-2 record and the Heart of America championship.

Trainers, horses prepare for Saturday's Kentucky Derby

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Trainer Wayne Lukas believes he's been dealt three of a kind — quality colts — for Saturday's Kentucky Derby.

But his ace is a wild card — a rambunctious colt named Marfa, who won the Santa Anita Derby, then was disqualified from second to fourth for interfering with Copelan and Desert Wine in the Blue Grass Stakes last Thursday at Keeneland.

Lukas' other two Derby starters will be Louisiana Derby winner Balboa Native and Total Departure, who finished second in the one-mile Derby Trial stakes on opening day at Churchill Downs.

The last trainer to start a three-horse entry in the Derby was Tom Smith. In 1946, he saddled Main Chance Farm's Lord Boswell, Knockdown and Perfect Bahram.

A maximum field of 20 3-year-olds is expected to start in the 1¼-mile $250,000-added Derby. Two colts who are the latest probables are Common Sense and High Honors.

COMMON SENSE, who has won $63,545, and High Honors, $46,940, are 19th and 20th, on the unofficial money earnings list of the top Derby candidates.

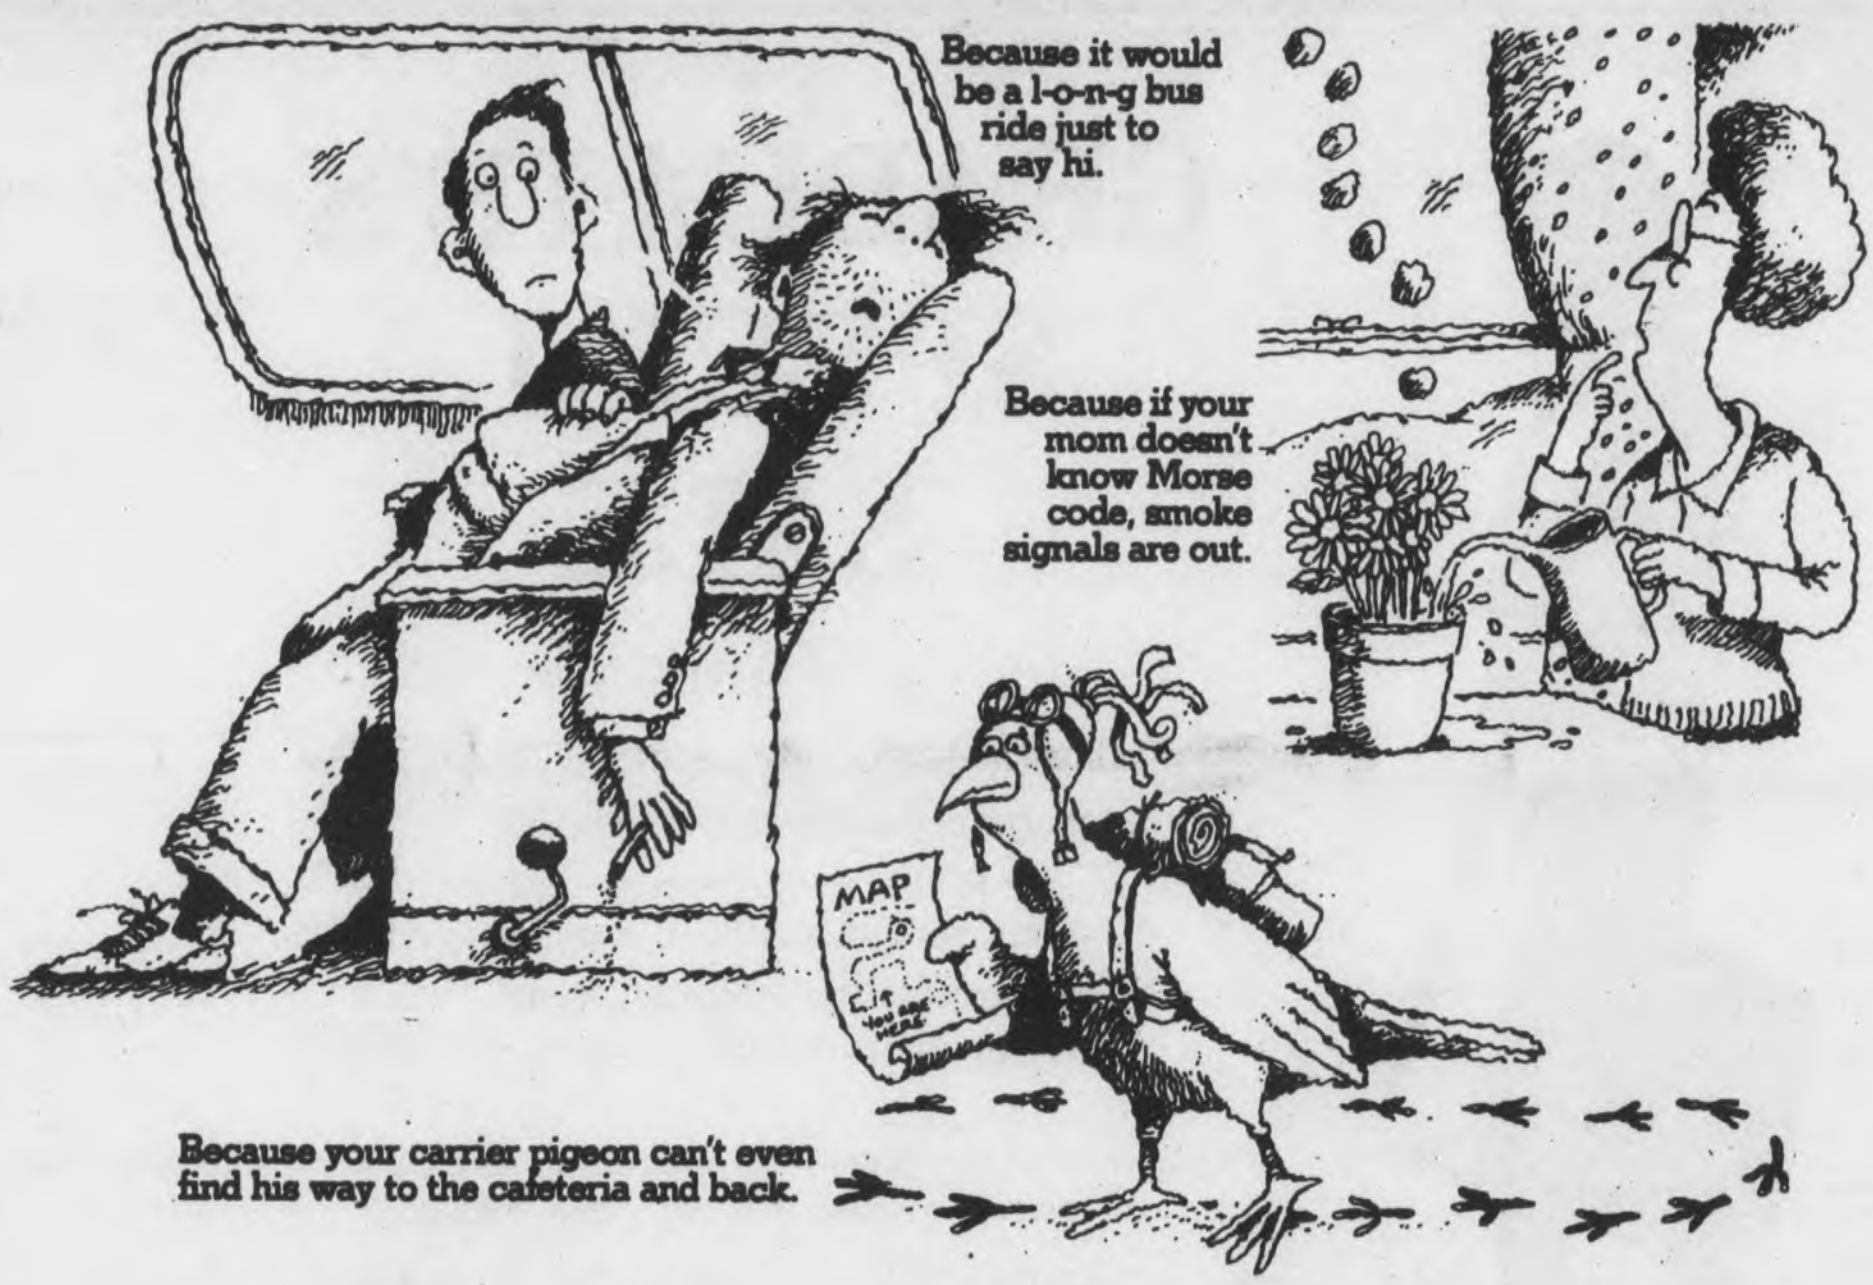
Other leading candidates include Blue Grass winner Play Fellow, Arkansas Derby winner Sunny's Halo, Flamingo winner Current Hope, and the Woody Stephens-trained pair of Caveat, winner of the Derby Trial, and Chumming, second in the Flamingo.

Then there is Explosive Wagon, who Tuesday stood in his stall wearing a contraption over his muzzle in which he breathed an antibiotic. The device's purpose was similar to that of a vaporizer.

"He's being treated for a respiratory ailment, but he had no temperature this morning (Tuesday), so it looks good " said Gene Norman, who trains the winner of the Holiday in Dixie Stakes April 23 at Louisiana Downs.

"WE'LL RUN SATURDAY, I feel sure," Norman said.

One who won't run in the Derby will be Copelan, a leading 2-year-old in 1982, who opened this year with a victory, but lost his last three races.



The colt, who has won $569,000, suffered a cut in the Blue Grass, in which he finished fourth, but was moved to third on the disqualification of Marfa.

"He got cut across the right front leg," owner Fred W. Hooper said from his home at Ocala, Fla. "It peeled off about the size of a half-dollar. I wouldn't dare run him if he wasn't in the best of shape.

"It's so ridiculous that horse (Marfa) did what he did," said Hooper.

Marfa tried to get at a lead pony on the way to the post in the Santa Catalina Stakes, in which he finished fourth, at Santa Anita March 16. One day last week, when Total Departure walked past his stall, Marfa bit him on the rump.

Elway leaves Baltimore to play in Denver; trade raises more controversy, discontent

BALTIMORE (AP) — Less than a week after selecting disenchanted quarterback John Elway as the No. 1 player in the National Football League draft, the Baltimore Colts have traded him — for another unhappy player.

In disposing of Elway, who threatened to play baseball rather than sign with Baltimore, the Colts received from Denver quarterback Mark Herrmann, offensive tackle Chris Hinton and the Broncos' No. 1 draft pick in 1984.

Hinton, Denver's No. 1 selection and the No. 4 choice overall in last week's draft, was reported having second thoughts about an NFL career.

Dick Lynn, the atorney representing Hinton, said his client was "crushed" by the trade, which was announced Monday night, and would entertain offers from the Chicago Blitz of the fledgling United States Football League.

The deal apparently was engineered by Colts' owner Robert Irsay, whose impulsive statements and moves have made him unpopular in Baltimore, without the knowledge of Coach Frank Kush or General Manager Ernie Accorsi.

"I KNOW AS MUCH about it as you do," Kush said Tuesday when he was contacted about the trade. Accorsi was not available for comment.

"We knew they (Irsay and club attorney Michael Chernoff) were talking to a number of teams and that Denver was one of them," Kush said. "But we had no idea the trade was finalized."

As late as Monday, Kush was contending that the club's stand on Elway — the player had told the Colts prior to the draft he would not play for them, but Baltimore insisted on picking him anyway — was in the best interests of the team and the NFL.

"If we gave in," Kush said, "what would happen to every kid who wanted to play in Los Angeles or Dallas instead of wanting to go to Houston? The system is built on the teams you want to help out. There's nothing wrong with the system."

After being chosen by the Colts, Elway, in a telephone conversation with Kush, expressed his disappointment and told the Colts not to call back.

THE COLTS DIDN'T, but Jack Elway, the quarterback's father, called Kush the following day and they talked several more times before last weekend.

Buoyed by the re-established contact, the Colts privately held out hope they could persuade their draft pick to play in Baltimore.

But that was undercut by Irsay, who made a deal that appeared to offer less than the Colts rejected shortly before the draft.

The Los Angeles Raiders had offered three No. 1 draft choices — this year plus each of the next two years — and backup quarterback Marc Wilson.

The San Diego Chargers offered two first-round picks, the 20th and 22nd in this year's draft, plus a No. 1 choice in 1984.

The Colts resisted, saying the compensation was insufficient. Then Irsay struck.

White's homer lifts Kansas City over Yanks, 5-2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Hal McRae went 3-for-3, and Frank White blasted a tie-breaking solo home run Tuesday night to power the Kansas City Royals past the New York Yankees 5-2.

Royals starter Paul Splittorff, 1-1, scattered eight hits through six innings. Mike Armstrong worked two scoreless innings, and Dan Quisenberry notched his sixth save by pitching the ninth.

Amos Otis singled to open the Royals second against loser Doyle Alexander, 0-2, and McRae walked. After Willie Aikens forced Otis at third, McRae scored the game's first run on a single by John Wathan. After Joe Simpson walked to load the bases, Greg Pryor's grounder brought Aikens home with the second run.

Phillies use nine-run inning to whip Reds 13-7

Mike Schmidt drove in three runs with a pair of hits in a nine-run third inning and Bo Diaz had a three-run homer in the explosion that triggered the Philadelphia Phillies to a 13-7 rout of the Cincinnati Reds Tuesday night.

The score was tied at 1-1 when the Phils sent 14 batters to the plate in the third, collecting eight of their 20 hits.

Pete Rose and Gary Matthews singled and Frank Pastore, 2-4, walked Joe Morgan to load the bases. Schmidt singled home one run and Tony Perez made it 3-1 with a sacrifice fly before Diaz hit his second homer.

Garry Maddox singled to chase Pastore and Ivan DeJesus and pitcher Marty Bystrom continued the barrage against Reds reliever Ben Hayes with singles to make it 7-1. Rose walked to load the bases again, DeJesus scored on a sacrifice fly by Matthews and Morgan walked again, loading the bases for a third time. Schmidt then doubled to give the Phillies a 10-1 bulge.

DeJesus had an RBI-single for the Phils in the bottom of the sixth and Morgan and Schmidt hit solo homers in the seventh.

Bystrom, who came off the disabled list Tuesday night, lasted only 4⅔ innings and gave up five runs before being relieved by winner Sid Monge, 3-0. Porfi Altamirano earned his first save.

Baltimore 4, California 2

Cal Ripken Jr. rapped a tie-breaking eighth-inning home run following a leadoff walk to Dan Ford, giving the Baltimore Orioles a 4-2 victory over the Califonia Angels Tuesday night.

Ripken's third homer of the season came on a 2-1 pitch from Geoff Zahn, 3-2, who has a 1-9 lifetime record against Baltimore.

Mike Flanagan, who had won only one previous decision against California against five losses, hurled a seven-hitter to notch his fourth victory without a defeat. Flanagan struck out eight and allowed only two hits after the third inning.

Boston 3, Oakland 1

Dwight Evans drilled a three-run homer in the third inning and the Boston Red Sox went on to a 3-1 victory over the Oakland A's Tuesday night behind the six-hit pitching of Dennis Eckersley and Bob Stanley.

Evans, who hit two homers in a 4-2 victory in Oakland on April 24, lined his fourth of the season into the screen in leftcenter after one-out singles by Glenn Hoffman and Jerry Remy put runners at first and third. Evans lined a shot just outside the right-field foul pole before lofting the next pitch over the high wall in left-center.

Eckersley, 3-1, made a bid for his third consecutive shutout over Oakland in Fenway Park until the A's scored in the seventh.

Rookie left-hander Bill Krueger, 2-3, allowed only seven hits but took the loss on Evans' homer.

Bob Stanley relieved Eckersley at the start of the ninth and allowed one hit to record his seventh save.

Cleveland 3, Minnesota 1

Andre Thornton hit his fourth home run of the season in support of Bert Blyleven's four-hit, 10-strikeout performance over eight innings as the Cleveland Indians beat the Minnesota Twins 3-1 Tuesday night.

Blyelven boosted his record to 2-3 and Neal Heaton worked the ninth.

Thornton gave Cleveland a 1-0 lead in the second inning with a line drive over the right-field wall off Bobby Castillo, 1-2.

Texas 7, Toronto 2

Larry Parrish drove in three runs with a double and a two-run homer and Jim Sundberg also hit a two-run shot to lead the Texas Rangers to a 7-2 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays Tuesday night.

Parrish, who doubled a run across in the first inning, hit his fifth homer of the season and fourth in the last six games to pad the Rangers' lead to 5-0 in the sixth inning after Buddy Bell led off with a triple.

Jon Matlack, 2-1, was the winner, with relief from Dave Tobik in the seventh. Matlack went 6 1-3 scoreless innings, allowing five hits.

Jim Gott, 0-2, was the loser.

Royals

The Yankees tied it in the third. Roy Smalley led off with a single, went to second on a grounder and scored on a single by Steve Kemp. Lou Pinella doubled Kemp home with New York's second run.

White blasted an 0-1 offering from Alexander over the fence in left-center for his first home run of the season to give the Royals a 3-2 lead with one out in the third. Dale Murray relieved Alexander after Otis walked, and McRae greeted him with a single. Aikens grounded back to Murray, who threw to second base for the force out, but Otis scored when first baseman Don Baylor dropped the relay throw on a double-play attempt.

McRae singled in the fifth and made it 5-2 when he scored on Aikens' double.

Top seeds easily advance into third round of Tournament of Champions tennis match

NEW YORK (AP) — Displaying the form that powered him to victory here a year ago, top-seeded Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia crushed South Africa's Brent Pirow 6-1, 6-0 Tuesday night in the $500,000 Mercedes Tournament of Champions at the famed West Side Tennis Club.

Also advancing into the third round of this unique champions-only event at Forest Hills were fifth-seeded Vitas Gerulaitis, No. 9 Johan Kriek, No. 10 Tomas Smid of Czechoslovakia, No. 12 Mark Dickson and No. 16 Jimmy Arias.

Young Peter Bastiansen of Denmark celebrated his 21st birthday by upsetting No. 7 Brian Teacher, the only seeded player to fall Tuesday, 6-2, 3-6, 6-1.

Hometown favorite John McEnroe, who defeated Lendl Sunday to capture the WCT Finals at Dallas and who is seeded No. 2, will see his first action on Wednesday when he plays Jairo Velasco of Colombia.

The winner in Sunday's final will collect $100,000, with the loser pocketing $40,000.

KRIEK ELIMINATED Nick Saviano 6-4, 6-2; Arias defeated Michiel Schapers of the Netherlands 6-4, 6-4; Smid ousted Australia's John Alexander 6-2, 6-4; Gerulaitis stopped Craig Wittus 6-2, 7-6, and Dickson advanced with Zoltan Kuharszky of Switzerland retired with a pulled stomach muscle while leading 6-3, 4-5.

In the final first-round match, Veteran Jaime Fillol of Chile downed Pablo Arraya of Peru 6-2, 5-7, 6-3.

Lendl had no problems with Pirow, whose only victory in the past 12 months came in a $25,000 event in England. The Czech combined his powerful serve and forehand with successful drop shots that caught his South African opponent way back of the baseline.

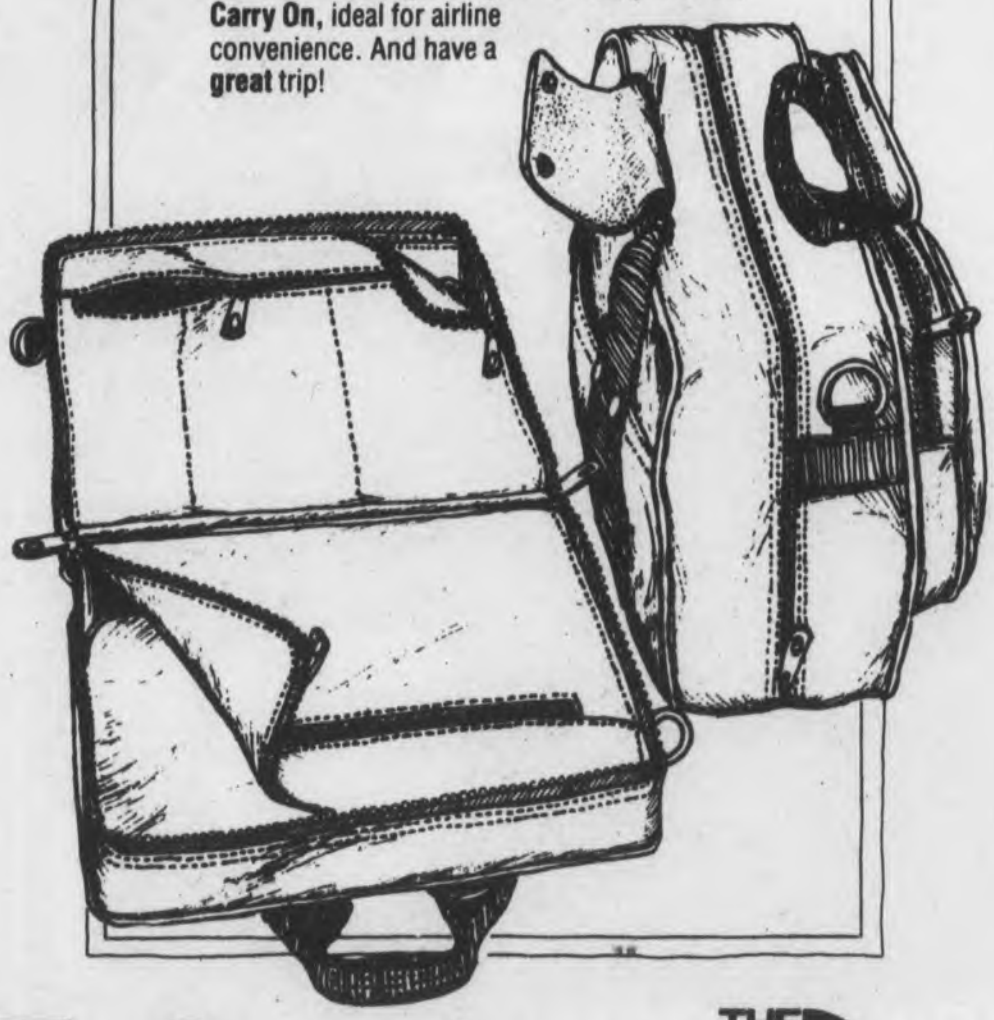
He opened the match by quickly grabbing a 4-0 lead, breaking Pirow in the first and third games. When he broke the South African in the seventh game, he had wrapped up the first set.

HE WAS only warming up.

In the second set, Pirow won only seven points as Lendl breezed to victory in 50 minutes.

Gerulaitis has a little tougher time, needing to take a second-set tiebreaker 7-5 to close it out in two sets.

Bastiansen, who qualified for the T of C by capturing a $25,000 tournament in Tampere, Finland, called his victory over Teacher, the 1980 Australian Open champion, "my best result.



"But my most important match was when I beat (Hungary's Balazs) Taroczy in Davis Cup," the tall, blond Dane said. That victory boosted Denmark into the World Group and a shot at the prestigious cup, but the Danes lost in the first round in March to New Zealand.

Bastiansen next will face Kriek, who fell behind 2-4 in the opening set before rolling over Saviano. The 1981 and 1982 Australian Open champion, Kriek is ranked 17th in the world on the Nixdorf Computer, while Bastiansen is ranked 301st.

Panel determines moderate use of caffeine safe

Caffeine is "one of the world's most widely used drugs," according to a newly released Scientific Status Summary prepared by the Expert Panel on Food Safety and Nutrition of the Institute of Food Technologists (IFT).

While the panel admitted many questions are still being asked about caffeine's ultimate safety, it stated "the available data do not seem to support a judgment of hazard to mankind from moderate intake."

Martha B. Stone, assistant professor of foods and nutrition and Kansas IFT communicator, makes the point that caffeine is a natural component of some 63 species of plants, including coffee, tea, cola and cocoa, and is included in many over-the-counter medications.

"The present 'standard of identity' issued by government agencies actually requires that caffeine be included in soft drinks if they are to bear the name 'cola' or 'pepper'," she said.

In spite of its long history of use, Stone said, caffeine has come under suspicion in recent years as a health hazard. Depending on the dose, caffeine can increase the heartbeat and basal metabolic rate, promote secretion of stomach acid and step up the production of urine.

"IT ACTS to dilate some blood vessels, to constrict others and to increase the capacity for muscular work," she said, "and its overall effect is often described as a 'lift,' but a lift only back to an original, undergraded level of performance — hence it is not a true 'stimulant'."

Caffeine is distributed throughout all bodily fluids shortly after foods containing it are ingested, according to the IFT panel. This distribution through the body extends to the reproductive system and caffeine is also absorbed into the milk of lactating mothers. The time required for the body to eliminate the substance varies with age, sex, hormonal status, medications being taken and whether a person smokes.

For example, the half life — time for the body to eliminate half the caffeine which has been introduced — is less than three hours in children and smokers, from three to seven hours in non-smoking adults and up to 13 hours for women "on the pill." Pregnant women may take from 18 to 20 hours to metabolize half the caffeine ingested, but their metabolism usually returns to normal within a month after delivery.

"THERE IS NO persuasive evidence that moderate amounts of caffeine are harmful to the average healthy adult," the IFT Status Summary reported. "Excessive consumption — more than 100 milligrams per day, the equivalent of about 10 cups of strong coffee — may lead to caffeinism, sometimes referred to as 'coffee nerves,' especially if consumed in a short time."

The summary continued, "it would take a considerable quantity of caffeine to cause poisoning" and estimated the amount is equivalent to that in about 100 cups of strong brewed coffee or 200 cans of cola consumed within a half hour.

Since its earliest documented use, "only eight fatalities from caffeine poisoning have been reported in the English language literature, none of them from food," according to the summary.

THE IFT STATUS SUMMARY also reviews scientific studies on caffeine in relation to a variety of bodily ills, including ulcers and heartburn, cardiovascular disease, cancer, fibrocystic breast disease and birth defects. In general, the studies cited showed substantial variation one from another, with little actual agreement as to dangers.

The summary quoted the findings of a 1979 U.S. Food and Drug Administration committee, to the effect that "while no evidence in the available information on caffeine demonstrates a hazard to the public when it is used in cola-type beverages at levels that are now current and in the manner now practiced, uncertainties exist requiring that additional studies be conducted."

Stone said the IFT panel recommends pregnant women, especially those in the last months of pregnancy, should use caffeine-containing food products and beverages only in moderation. As for the bulk of the population, it suggested caffeine "has had a long history of safe use by humans, and scientific studies conducted to date indicate that mankind will suffer no harm by consuming currently available caffeine-containing beverages in moderation."

Crime of the week

CRIME STOPPERS 539-7777 CONFIDENTIALLY

Crime Stoppers of Manhattan/Riley County, Inc.

This week's Crime Stoppers crime-of-the-week involves involves the burglary of a storage unit.

Crime Stoppers of Manhattan/Riley County, a non-profit organization, provides details of an unsolved crime each week. Citizens are encouraged to provide information needed to assist police in solving this and other crimes. Informants, who will remain anonymous, can receive cash rewards of up to $1,000.

Sometime between 2:30 p.m. April 10 and 7:45 a.m. April 13, someone entered one of the storage units at Aztec Self Storage near the Manhattan Municipal Airport and removed numerous items. The storage unit is located on the north side of the complex.

Once inside the unit, the suspect removed two black Bell Star motorcycle helmets, one antique clock, one antique wall phone, one guitar with case and miscellaneous tools.

Also stolen during the burglary were seven pen flares with seven flares attached to each pen. The pens have a firing device consisting of a simple spring configuration. These flares are simple to operate, but if used in any manner other than which they were intended, they could cause serious injuries.

Anyone with information on this crime, location of stolen property or information on any other crime should call Crime Stoppers at 539-7777.

Nicaragua

CIA covert actions, said the committee's vote could effectively force an end to U.S. support for attacks against Nicaragua.

"I feel that the impact of the committee's action makes that (continuation of the covert activities) difficult," Fowler said.

Although the bill calls for cutting off the covert aid, the committee deleted a 45-day time limit for withdrawal from the public part of the legislation.

Boland said the bill retains a time limit for extricating CIA-supported forces from Nicaragua, but the time span will be included in a classified part of the bill.

Fowler said that change was made to permit a safer withdrawal of CIA-backed forces.

The committee, which met for five hours Tuesday behind closed doors, also approved an $80 million fund to help "friendly" nations in Central America to interdict weapons going from leftist Nicaragua to guerrillas in other countries.

Boland said there was "no question that Nicaragua is in violation of international law" in its alleged support for leftist insurgents in El Salvador. But he added the committee felt the covert action was not the way to respond to it.

Fowler said the covert actions had only served to "strengthen internal and international support for the Sandinistas."

In one change, the committee dropped a flat prohibition against the United States taking any military action "against" Nicaragua. Fowler said that restriction was deleted to permit, for instance, the United States to assist Honduras in the event of a Nicaraguan intrusion into its territory.

The vote came as Nicaragua accused Honduran-based rebels of starting "a massive new invasion."

Race

entered in this year's race. Tony Curtis, who starred in the movie, has also entered a car in the race and plans to drive part of the race, Laurie said.

"On Feb. 6, the team seriously decided to enter the race," he noted.

WILLIAMS "CONSIDERED entering (the race) but it was out of his price range. Bonjour then thought it would be neat. Hileman thought it was something fun to do, but a ridiculous amount of money was needed," Laurie said of the team's thoughts of the race.

"We were going to use Jack's Model A originally because it was such a classy and very unusual car, but the car was not road worthy enough," he said.

Hileman said the team decided the Model A would not "hack the race."

A 1934 Ford five-window coupe was "the most durable (automobile) of what we had" among the team members, Laurie said.

Laurie bought the car in 1968 for $550 from a man in Ottawa.

"I drove the car from 1969 to 1978 to work," he said. "In 1978, I started to rebuild it into a hot rod. I came within a few weeks of getting it completed as a hot rod.

"THE TEAM LIFTED the body off and started rebuilding it back to its original specifications with another '34 Ford Williams had," Laurie said.

"We have one of the very few common-type cars compared with the Cadillacs and Packards owned by the wealthy people who, in a lot of cases, have hired a team to fix the car and drive for them. To us what we are doing is like entering the Indy 500. It is that big of a challenge," Bonjour said.

According to the rules of the race, the car has to be like it was originally when delivered by the manufacturer, with some minor exceptions, "what we call safety factors," Hileman said.

The exceptions are in the electrical and brake systems, Laurie said. For example changing over from 6-volt to 12-volt electrical systems, adding turn signals and seat belts are a few changes.

Parts can be custom built, Laurie said, but "must be made in the original style and design."

He said Hileman has made some of the parts for the car.

IT IS "UNUSUAL FOR someone from University Facilities to do something like this and use the skills he uses for the University in his hobby," Laurie said.

"This car game is an expensive hobby and it is neat to see a guy who has worked his way through it without having to put a lot of extra money into a hobby. The kinds of things people buy done, he (Hileman) does himself," Laurie said.

Only six of the seven days of racing are counted, Williams said. Every car starts out with zero points and gains each day. The cars will be started out every morning in 30-second intervals, according to Laurie.

"If you have a major breakdown you get one free day," Williams said.

Speed checks will be made at undisclosed spots during the day's route. If a speeding ticket is picked up, Laurie said, the car will be disqualified. Each car will be limited to the use of the factory odometer, a slide rule or non-programmable hand-held calculator and a stopwatch. No other timing or mileage devices are allowed, Laurie said.

THE CAR'S GAS TANK holds only about 11 gallons, "but we are allowed to take extra gas if it is a vehicle-approved gas tank," Laurie said. An auxiliary gas tank "probably will be put in the rumble seat, which is legal," he said.

Williams said a support vehicle is allowed to follow the entry, but must remain "at least an hour and a half behind you and there cannot be any communication between the two vehicles.

"Basically everything except for the body is in the support truck in case something is to break down. It is quicker to pull out the entire rear end and replace it than to mess with the gears," he said.

The race starts at Knotts Berry Farm in Anaheim, Calif., on May 21. The course is 2,800 miles long, ending at the Indianapolis Speedway in Indianopolis, Ind.

THE WINNINGS TOTAL more than $200,000, including a $100,000 first prize and $25,000 for the oldest car that finishes the race. All entries must be automobiles manufactured in 1941 or earlier, Laurie said.

The race will include seven days of driving, with overnight stops approximately every 400 miles. The race goes through 11 states with a May 25 overnight stop in Kansas City, Bonjour said.

"Each of the seven nights we're on the road the rich guys are going to stay at the Hilton Inns and we're going to stay in the back of the truck in the parking lot," Laurie said.

The Kansas Classic Touring Team is raising support for the race, Bonjour said. In addition to the entry fee, approximately $6,000 is needed in actual expenses.

The field has been limited to 100 automobiles that meet the requirement of manufacturers' original specifications and are of good appearance. Each entry will be inspected at the starting line at Knotts Berry Farm to verify authenticity and road worthiness.

The race to date has only 66 entries, Bonjour said, and only one from Kansas.

The last 2½ miles of the race will be on the Indy 500 track, he said.

PERSONAL

TERRI—WE'VE been through a lot and I'm falling in love with you. I will never give you up, and I'm yours . . . completely! I love you—Todd (151)

STRAIGHT-HAIRED Dan of K-Laires. Even though you may get a "bang" from playing hero, laying down on the job to get female sympathy just doesn't cut it. Hope you enjoyed your funeral flowers—now we're even! —the Snowball Avengers (151)

TANZ AND Jules: This year has passed so very fast, but we all know that it was a blast. Aggie, the parties, the road trip to Hayes, the guys and the drinks left us in a daze. Just want you to know you guys are first rate, and life this semester has been super great! Love ya, C.M. (151)

DIANE, WE'VE made it through another year and though we don't see each other as much you are never more than a thought away. Through all these years you've always been there when I needed a shoulder or a smile. Everyone needs that one special friend and I'm so glad you're mine. Thanks for all the caring, understanding and love that have given me some of the best memories of my life. Love ya, Vicki (151)

WAYNE—THE past two months have been memorable! Thanks for sharing them with me. Love, Dawn (151)

SHERRY—HAPPY Birthday Babe. Hope you like your bird. I love you. MUH. JB (151)

ANN AND Anita—You guys are the best roommates ever. I'll miss you next year! Love, Bert Campbell (151)

A BIG thanks to whoever turned in my calculator Monday night in the Union!! (151)

PAT NICHOLS: How can I find the words to thank you? I guess all I can say is P.T.L. for giving me a caring friend like you! I appreciate your openness and honesty and also the many rap sessions we have shared! Thanks for listening because sometimes I don't know what I would of done without you!! Marilyn P.S. Congrats on being president!! (151)

GAMMA PHIS: Tonight's our night but you're the ones who are so special. Thanks for being part of an awesome senior year—Homecoming, Greek Week, Outstanding Province Chapter . . . what more could we ask for? Thanks for the memories—we'll miss you! Love, the seniors. (151)

SUSAN—FROM rush parties to toilet paper, composites, married men and sloe gin, you are a friend, I say P-A-L-S friend. Hope your 21st is super! Love and AOT, Kim. P.S. Who (or what) are you going to wrap tonight?? (151)

LORETTA NINCI, After all these years you're still my best friend. Happy 21st!! Good luck on finals. Love ya, Ang. (151)

ROB LAW: This past month has been super! Summer will be awesome, especially you and your savage tan! Good luck on finals. I didn't say it, Tiger. (151)

SHELLEY—WE'VE had our share this year haven't we? Hopefully things will work out the way we want for next year; we'll make it. Thanks for being a true friend. I'm always here—Love, Jenny. (151)

NESE, WELL after three years, finally a birthday personal! Good luck on finals and Happy Birthday. Love, Cassy. (151)

ALL YOU foxes "Down-Under," Scott, Jimmy and Darla—Thanks for all the great memories—you guys are "too cool!" Sorry if I've been bucky sometimes—just remember I love you all!! "Smelly" P.S. Sorry the rent's late! (151)

WADGAFS: AS little sisters you've made it a great year for us. Thanks for being so magnarvelous! Love ya'll, Joan, Julie, Rachel, Theresa, Julie. (151)

PETE, GLAZE, Lynord, Ball and Deb. Hey, this year has been great! We still have more partying to do when Pete and Deb come back. Have a good one. Moritz. (151)

CLAIRE, WANTED to say it has been great getting to know you this year. Thanks for roadtrips, b-ball games, popcorn, writing papers, ice cream, bar sessions, cherry cheesecake, notes, talks, walking in the rain(?), etc. Seriously, how about summer? A Friend of Alice. (151)

ADPI DEE Dee—Just wanted to say thanks for all your help this year. Good luck on your finals. Bo. (151)

STEVE M.—Here's personal No. 2! I'm going to share my french fries with you 10 years from now, so be on guard. I love you. Karen. (151)

TEDDY BEAR—Here's your personal! How can I ever tell you howmuch you mean to me? This summer is going to be great, but you better be on your toes because I'm going to be around as much as possible. I love you very much. Maynard. (151)

PHI DELT Joe S.: Hey Rock Star—can I be your groupie? Saturday was a blast, jammin' in our jammies. Knowing you is a blast—your "weirdness" totally intrigues me! Your days are numbered at KSU—are we talking summer road trips? N'oublier pas-vous etes mon chouchou et je pense a vous. Best of luck after graduation and hey—get psyched for the Kinks! Hot pour vous, Weird Pammy. (151)

HEY HUFFORD, Barger, Bogue, Coslett, and Sloan! (or is it Scarbeni?) Has this semester been a blast or what? (Especially our K.A. campout!) Just wanted to say thanks for everything and I love you all—Weber. (151)

KAPPA SIGMAS—You guys made my year special, I'm looking forward to many more. Good luck on finals, and have a great summer. Love, Laura. (151)

PI PHI Becky: It's really hard to believe that this year is over. I shall never forget all the great memories that we have shared. I'm really going to miss you next year—don't forget the ADPi house is right down the street. Take care and remember your roomie loves you! Shep. (151)

PAM DABROWSKI: Here's to a year of vendo runs, crying in the shower, hangovers and solid gold dancing. I'll miss you next year! You've been a great roomie. Love you, BZ. (151)

TO ALL the guys in George's afternoon studio—Thanks for the fun times! Have an excellent summer! Marie, Pam, and Lisa. (151)

TO THE best buddies on this campus—who went overboard making a fuss, for my departure from this great place, though next year you'll see lots of my face. I'm really going to miss you all, but I won't hesitate to call, and find out what you've been up to. Don't forget—I love all of you. Carrie. (151)

RACHEL VINING—It's your birthday, so let's have a beer, what a magnarvelous way to finish our year. Happy 19th! Love ya, Julie, Lisa, Joan, Theresa, Julie. (151)

Book Buy-Back

Here are some answers to often asked questions:

Question: How does the Union Bookstore determine how much your books are worth when you sell them back?

Answer: If the Bookstore has notification from the instructor that the books are to be re-adopted for use the next semester, and if the Bookstore does not already have a sufficient stock on hand, then you will be offered 60% of the publisher's current list price.

For example: if a book sells for $10 new and it meets the requirements noted above, the book would be bought from you for $6.

If the Bookstore has not received notice that the book will be used again, or if it already has a sufficient stock on hand, the book would be worth the current wholesale price as indicated by one of the nation's largest jobbers of used textbooks.

If you have any questions about the price being paid for a textbook, the buyer will be happy to answer any questions which you may have regarding the price paid.

Question: Is 60% the usual price paid for textbooks around the country?

Answer: Definitely not. Most stores in the United States pay only 50% for books being used again. The Union Bookstore is one of the few stores which pays 60%. And remember, we pay cash. You don't have to take your money out in trade.

Question: What about paperbacks? Does the 60% policy apply to them too?

Answer: Yes. The Union Bookstore does not penalize you on paperbacks. If they are being used again, and if the bookstore needs them, you will receive 60% of the publisher's list price.

Question: If the publisher's price has gone up since I bought my books, will I receive the benefit of that price increase?

Answer: Yes. For instance, if you bought your book for $9 and the publisher's list price is now $10, you will get $6, not $5.40.

We Will Buy Books:

May 3rd through 6th	8:15 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.
May 7th	10:15 a.m. to 3:45 p.m.
May 9th through 11th	8:15 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.
May 12th	8:15 a.m. to 1 p.m.

MEChA member contends budget hearing 'unfair'

By JANICE CARLTON
Collegian Reporter

Although the Student Senate budget allocations for campus organizations have been described as "tight" by both senators and students alike, Eliezer "Eddie" Rodriguez, sophomore in pre-law and theatre and president of MEChA, said he believes his group was treated unfairly in the budgeting process.

"It bothers me that somebody can make a decision without full knowledge of the situation," Rodriguez said. Many senators failed to review the booklet he provided concerning the activities and expenditures of MEChA, a hispanic student organization, he said.

"Out of 40 senators I contacted, only four had looked at the book," Rodriguez said, adding that the senators' lack of responsibility led to unfair treatment of MEChA at the allocation hearing.

"I AM ONE of the few that probably turned in the book," he said. "They voted on something they didn't even look at. They're supposed to be leaders."

When MEChA came up for the first allocation hearing in April, the organization requested $789.29. However, senate voted to cut that amount to $557.50. Rodriguez said the senators asked questions about the group's expenditures which were totally unrelated to the budget request.

"It wasn't like we were going up for funding; it was like we were on trial," he said.

Raul Guevara, Outreach coordinator and adviser to MEChA, said senate had no right questioning activities which were unrelated to the budget request.

"It's really none of their business," Guevara said, adding that senate questioned MEChA about the monies generated from a basketball tournament held off-campus last fall.

"WE BARELY BROKE even," Guevara said. The purpose of the tournament, he said, was to attract hispanic students to K-State, not to make money.

Lori Leu, senate chairwoman, agreed that MEChA wasn't treated well during the hearing.

"There may have been some remarks said about them that were uncalled for," Leu said.

Rodriguez said that at the first hearing the senators also asked for justification of the conferences MEChA members attended, subsequently cutting their travel budget.

"They couldn't see them as necessary," Rodriguez said. "If they had taken the time to look at the book, they would have seen what MEChA and the conferences are all about."

LEU SAID senate had no clear-cut guidelines which determine the conferences that organizations should attend, but added senate was trying to cut all budgets.

"There really are no guidelines that determine which conferences they should go to," she said.

After the first hearing, Rodriguez spoke to senators and arranged a re-hearing during which senators raised the budget for MEChA to $648.50, still lower than the original amount approved by the finance committee.

MEChA members were also denied the use of state vehicles to travel to conferences.

"They (senators) felt they were helping them out by doing that," Leu said, adding that the cost of travel in private cars is lower than state vehicles.

Guevara said there are perennial problems with budget allocations to minority groups.

"IF YOU LOOK at who was cut, it was pretty obvious. There are so many people who aren't aware of the many contributions that hispanics have made to this campus," he said.

According to Guevara, there are 283 hispanic students at K-State. He said the hispanic percentage at the University is far lower than the national average.

"They (hispanics) are not being adequately represented in student government," Guevara said. "Somebody's got to realize that we're here."

Both Guevara and Rodriguez agreed senate failed to review the materials provided by MEChA which explained the purpose of the group.

"Our purpose is to show our cultural heritage and tradition," Rodriguez said. "We want to make people proud of where they're coming from as well as to excel academically."

Rodriguez said MEChA attempts to raise most of its funding from within by sponsoring salsa jams, spanish films, and co-sponsoring events with other campus organizations.

"We got more from other organizations than we got from SGA as a whole," Rodriguez said.

Leu said MEChA wasn't the only group that failed to receive the amount requested.

"They tried to cut every group as much as possible," she said. "It has been a tight year for everyone."

Motorcyclists to be repaid $10 for permit overcharge

A rebate program for those motorcyclists who were inadvertently overcharged $10 in parking permit fees is expected to be approved by the Kansas Board of Regents at its meeting May 20, said Gene Cross, vice president for University Facilities.

The error was made in the redrafting of K-State's proposed traffic regulations sent to the regents last year. The intended increase was to be 100 percent over existing permit fees which were $10 for faculty/staff and $5 for students.

In the redraft of the traffic regulations, faculty/staff and student motorcycle permits were both erroneously increased to $20.

"I expect for the refunds to be passed by the board," Cross said.

If they are approved, the 346 overcharged students will be contacted by the Department of Security and Traffic so they can return in person to receive a cash refund.

The second option, according to Cross, would be for the students, after being contacted, to get in touch with Security and Traffic by mail and verify their correct name, address and social security number.

"As soon as we found out about the problem, we tried to correct it. I personally have had only two complaints about the error," Cross said.

Parking permits for motorcycles will be reduced to $10 in July.

U.S. to consider Soviet proposal on nuclear arms

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said Wednesday the United States would give "serious consideration" to the latest Soviet proposal to reduce medium-range nuclear weapons in Europe.

Asked whether the proposal, advanced by Soviet leader Yuri Andropov on Tuesday, was "positive," Reagan said "yes."

The president said this was so because the Soviets had offered to reduce weapons numbers to those of the NATO forces by counting warheads as well as missiles and airplanes.

"We're going to give this serious consideration," Reagan said in an interview with six reporters. "This is what we should be negotiating," he said.

Reagan declined lengthy comment on the ratification by the U.S. Roman Catholic bishops of a pastoral letter calling upon the nation's Catholics to help eliminate nuclear weapons from the world.

Much of the debate on the letter focused on whether it would call for a "curb" or "halt" to the arms race, and the president said too much attention was paid to the two words.

"Their proposal is the same as ours," he said of the bishops' work. "They're looking for a way...toward promoting world peace."

Reagan said the House Intelligence Committee vote on Monday denying the use of funds for covert military action in

Durland, Ackert lots to be refurbished, closed for summer

Campus parking lots between Ackert and Durland halls (A28E and A28W) will close for the summer on May 15 for refurbishing and redesigning, Gene Cross, vice president for University facilities, said.

Students, faculty and staff who normally park in those lots will be allowed to use the south lot of Goodnow Hall (Lot D-2) as alternate parking.

Two of the three Denison Street entrances to the lots were closed April 13 for starting the improvements. Art Stone, director of Security and Traffic, said that although the lots will be completely redone, the number of parking spaces available will remain at 400. However, he said additional motorcycle parking spaces will be provided.

Stone said the improvements are being made to "give better access to the area." The improvements are expected to be completed August 20.

Former faculty member to speak at May 14 graduation ceremony

A University of Oklahoma professor and a former K-State faculty member will speak at commencement exercises Saturday, May 14.

Murlin Hodgell, professor of architecture and regional and city planning at OU, will return to his alma mater, where he taught from 1957 to 1963. As associate professor at K-State, he established the Department of Regional and Community Planning and served as its head.

Hodgell will also be presented with the Distinguished Service Award given by K-State each year.

While at K-State, Hodgell also served as director of planning for the city of Manhattan.

In 1959, Hodgell was named Kansas' Outstanding Young Man by the state Jaycees for his "accomplishments in community and industrial development in dozens of Kansas communities," Bernd Foerster, dean of the College of Architecture and Design and commencement arrangments chairman, said.

Hodgell, who earned a bachelor's degree in architecture in 1949 from K-State, was listed as one of America's 100 Outstanding Young Men in 1960 by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

He joined the OU faculty in 1969 as director of the School of Architecture and dean-designate of the College of Environmental Design. Hodgell served as dean of the OU college, established in 1970, and directed its architecture school until resigning in 1982.

Hodgell continues to serve as professor of architecture and regional and city planning at OU.

Before going to Oklahoma, Hodgell served as chairman of Rutgers University's Department of City and Regional Planning from 1963 to 1964 and was director of the University of Nebraska's School of Architecture from 1964 to 1969.

The author of five books or monographs, he also has published more than 50 papers and has been the architect for about $80 million in new construction projects.

KSDB-FM offers 24-hour format throughout finals

For the fourth year, the University radio station, KSDB-FM 88.1, will be on the air for 24 hours throughout finals.

The broadcasting will be interruption free with the exception of National Public Radio programs.

Brian O'Neill, assistant adviser of KSDB, said public service announcements and newscasts will be dropped from the program schedule beginning Friday.

O'Neill said the 24-hour programming will begin at 6 a.m. Friday and will sign off the air for the semester at 6:30 p.m. Wednesday.

The station will be broadcasting virtually solid music as a service to students for finals week — so they will have distraction-free music to study by, O'Neill said.

"Everybody else is pulling all-nighters, so we figure someone's got to pull it with them.

"With other radio stations, there are distractions with news and ads. We're acting as a stereo, but students won't have to change the records every 15 minutes," he said.

KSDB is normally off the air from 1 to 6 a.m. O'Neill said the disc jockeys have been very cooperative in volunteering for late-night shifts. If they have finals during their shift, they get a temporary replacement.

O'Neill said their cooperativeness is probably due to the DJs getting to play a lot more music with the 24-hour format.

Next fall, KSDB will expand its services with a new remote radio transmitter. The remote pickup unit will enable the announcers to do "live" broadcasts from bars with live bands, broadcasts live from registration and allow the station to cover breaking news, such as fires, on the spot, O'Neill said.

KSDB will resume its programming sometime in June when summer school starts, he added.

Storm washes out premiere of giant artwork

MIAMI — Apprentices to the artist Christo surrounded one Biscayne Bay island with a giant plastic "lily pad" Wednesday night but a brief storm washed out the premiere of their ambitious giant artwork, "Surrounded Islands."

Five other islands were partly wrapped by mid-afternoon, when rain interrupted their efforts to float huge, flamingo-colored woven sheets around the islands.

The artist's army of 400 pink-shirted workers had been told at mid-afternoon to stop fighting the 14 mph wind that slowed their efforts for the $3.1 million "Surrounded Islands" project.

Christo, wary of logistical headaches and the approaching storm, had earlier scaled down the premiere, deciding to wrap six islands Wednesday and five on Thursday, instead of all 11 at once.

After clearing a court challenge and securing 10 environmental permits, the artist had originally hoped the 11 pine-studded islands would "bloom" simultaneously at sunset Wednesday into neon-pink lily pads, but he had decided that might be too ambitious.

Police discover three bodies in steel drums

SAN FRANCISCO — The decomposed bodies of a man and two women were found on Wednesday inside two cement-sealed steel drums that had been left in Golden Gate Park, police said.

Officials sliced into one barrel about 1:30 p.m. and discovered the clothed body of a black man, said Sgt. George Kowalski, head of the police department's homicide division.

Inside the second drum, opened three hours later, were the bodies of two nude, white women, he said. Autopsies on all three victims were scheduled for Thursday.

City Administrative Coroner Joseph Surdyka said the first body extracted from the drum "was in an advanced state of decomposition, dead over 72 hours for sure."

Kowalski said police have no idea who the victims are or who rolled the 55-gallon drums into Golden Gate Park. The drums were discovered Tuesday by a mounted police officer, and one began leaking blood as officials examined it.

Dr. Roger Brannian, veterinarian at the Kansas City Zoo, fitted Roo with a children's size 13 high-top sneaker after about 5 inches of her rear left foot was amputated last November because of an infection, possibly caused by a cut from a sharp object.

Brannian said it was the first time he had fitted a kangaroo, or any animal, with a shoe. But he said it seemed the simplest thing to do to protect the rest of the foot.

Roo, who has been in the zoo's hospital since her surgery, will be released to join the other kangaroos at the zoo after Brannian makes some final adjustments to the shoe to stop it from rubbing and irritating the skin.

Brannian said Roo probably will wear the shoe indefinitely.

Baltimore becomes first to cancel Johnny

BALTIMORE — The NBC affiliate here is replacing Johnny Carson's "Tonight" show with reruns of the comedy series "Soap" for the time being.

The decision makes Baltimore the first city in television's Top 20 market to cancel the long-running late-night entertainment program.

Station WMAR said "Soap" will replace Carson on May 30 and remain on the air until it begins showing the new syndicated comedy-variety show "Thicke of the Night."

Arnold Kleiner, WMAR general manager, cited the most recent ratings as the reason for the cancellation. Carson drew only 13 percent of the audience.

Carson may not disappear permanently from Baltimore's airwaves as a result, however. NBC is trying to move the program to Channel 45, an independent station, the Baltimore Sun reported Wednesday.

Would-be robbers have a change of mind

PHILADELPHIA — Two young toughs discovered they'd picked the wrong car to steal when they stepped in front of a woman's automobile, forcing her to stop, and then piled inside.

"Don't you know who I am?" she asked the intruders, one of whom poked something against her ribs.

"If you get caught, you won't spend a year in jail. You'll fry," she told them.

Mary Glancey, 54, then told the young men she was the wife of Joseph Glancey, president judge of the city municipal courts.

The information prompted the young men to make a detour from their original plans. They instructed Glancey, who had driven a short distance, to drive a bit farther, then ordered her to pull over and let them out.

"So long and good luck," they said as they left her with her car, her money, and her personal belongings.

Prayer day vital to nation's unity

Take five at 12.

Earlier this year, President Reagan proclaimed today, May 5, as the National Day of Prayer. The idea is for people of the United States to stop for five minutes at noon, bow their heads, and pray.

While many actions of the United States — a country once thought of as a Christian nation — are far from glorifying to God, the President should be commended for stressing participation in this event.

This action was supported on the state level by Gov. John Carlin, on the local level by Mayor Wanda Fateley, and on the university level by President Duane Acker. Although this marks the 31st consecutive National Day of Prayer, the involvement being sought after is greater this year than in the past.

This observance, according to the proclamation by Reagan, "has become a great unifying force for our citizens...Prayer unites people...heals, brings us together as a Nation and we pray it may one day bring renewed respect for God to all the people of the world."

The worst to be said of the effort is that it can't hurt. At best, it will unite the Christian community in a common effort, as well as cause some people to humble themselves in prayer with a realization that man has strayed from his maker. It will also convey to God that there are Americans who are looking beyond themselves for the answers to our national problems.

At noon today, church bells will ring across the country to remind people of the proclamation. On campus, the bells of Anderson Hall will play for five minutes. Gatherings will be held at the chapel throughout the day, as students, faculty and staff can get together and intercede for our leaders, as well as thanking God for the abundance we have in this country.

Take five at 12.

Coping, planning key to finals week

Tommorrow begins finals week.

For some, finals week will be pure torture. For others, it will be a struggle. A few may have a great time — if they don't have any finals.

The key to success this next week will be the ability to cope and planning ahead.

If you have two finals which conflict (scheduled to be taken at the same time), or more than two scheduled finals in one day, see your instructors. By University policy, only two finals may be taken on one day.

Both situations can be resolved by seeing the instructors involved. If this fails to solve the problem, then see the department head, and then the dean if all else fails.

These policies were implemented to serve you. You do have a recourse. Use it if necessary.

Study hard, but take some breaks. Plan a schedule which will show when you can study between finals. Be sure to include time to sleep and eat — one cannot live on all-nighters for a week.

Good luck.

Reading between the lines

If you want to learn more about where you are or who you're dealing with, you've got to learn to read between the lines — to read the writing on the wall, so to speak.

Hardly a profound statement, yet when you stop to think, it carries a great deal of truth. Take for example a recent scribbling on the bathroom wall: "I was apathetic until somebody told me it didn't matter."

That statement has stuck with me. No, not for the historical value or even for the underlying implications, but for the truth in describing the general atmosphere of this campus, and maybe even society in general.

People tend to shy away from the real issues. "I don't want to get involved," they say. "What good will it do to voice my opinion? No one listens anyway." Or how about the standard, "My one vote won't make any difference."

We've all heard statements such as these. The hard-to-swallow fact is that most of us are guilty of uttering them at one point or another in our lives. When there's no direct reward, the tendency is toward apathy.

WHY NOT? IT'S the easy thing to do. Besides, in a hustle-bustle world of today, who's got the time to care about things beyond his own small niche?

Well, the easy way is rarely the best way, and if you shield yourself from the "outside world" long enough, you'll find that the walls of reality soon close in more rapidly than was imaginable. You get squeezed out, or in, in this case.

People are most always willing to listen; after that, however, they tend to be apathetic. It's too easy to sit with one wheel in the sand and wonder why you never move forward, only in circles.

To make progress, you've got to be willing to listen to what others say, but also, you must speak your own mind when the time is appropriate. Too little and you're apathetic; too much and you're a radical.

It has been interesting to view the campus from the position I've had this past semester. It has given me a chance to come into contact with a little bit of everything, and a lot of apathy.

I LEARNED QUICKLY that there's no way to change the world, and there's really no way to do anything the "right" way, only your own way. You must take every opinion into account, take it for what it's worth, and do it your way. That's the only way to have any satisfaction in your job — and yourself.

Apathy is tough to understand — and to overcome. In a world filled with important issues, I have yet to understand how anyone could be apathetic -- yet we are too uncaring more often than not.

Take this campus as an example. During the semester, the city has talked about annexing the University, there have been further cuts in scholarship monies and student aid in general, proposals to increase both tuition and fees, talk of eliminating duplication of services among Kansas Board of Regents institutions...the list could go on. People have been willing to accept things such as these and have had little to say.

However, during the first half of the semester there were many who did rise in revolt. The issue? No, it wasn't Student Senate elections or funding for the University; it was a sketchy character called E.P. who caused all the ruckus. People were more up in arms about the comic strip in the Collegian then they were about their right to drink being taken away by the Kansas Legislature.

WHEN PRESIDENT DUANE ACKER quietly proposed a fee increase to the regents, nary a sole uttered a word. It didn't matter to the students how much they were going to pay. They couldn't do anything anyway.

And it wasn't until Student Senate passed a resolution supporting the Solomon Amendment that anyone really even took notice of how stupid an act it really was.

When the students joined together, their voices were heard, and the resolution was annulled.

If there's a message in this menagerie of words I've put down, I guess it's that students, and perhaps I should say people, need to stick together and work together.

There's hardly room for apathy; yet, I'm as guilty as the next person in not caring. However, unless we learn to pull together, to speak out and to care, the scribbling on the wall will be right — it really won't matter.

Bombing of embassy 'cowardly'

Editor,

Forty-seven Americans and Lebanese are dead and 130 injured in the wake of the bombing of the U.S. Embassy in Beirut. President Reagan consoled the bereaved families, saying: "These gallant Americans understood the dangers they faced. The act of unparalleled cowardice that took their lives was an attack on all of us. We would indeed fail them if we let that act deter us from carrying on our mission."

The evidence points to a pro-Khomeini Iranian terrorist organization Al Jihad al Islami (Islamic Holy War). The Jihad group has close links with several hundred Iranian revolutionary guards who came to Lebanon last summer. The organization is a sub-sect of the Amal group, which is extemely pro-Iranian, and will stop at nothing — including the bombing of undefended diplomatic targets — to further their goal. That goal is the removal of all foreigners, especially Americans, from the Middle East. I see it as a deliberate attempt to humiliate America — an attack on the U.S. presence in Lebanon and a further attempt to demolish American hopes for peace in the Middle East.

To anyone who supports the Khomeini government in Iran, I would like to offer President Reagan's words above and a few of my own. The bombing of the U.S. Embassy has added another bloody act to a long list of terrorism condoned by the Khomeini government. The cowardice of this gesture is proof of its inability to deal with international diplomatic matters with anything other than violence.

We Americans, collectively, will continue in our efforts for peace in the Middle East while Khomeini's government, wracked with war, isolated by its own international policies, surrounded on all sides by hostile countrymen, will continue on its way towards self-destruction.

K-State soccer needs recognition

Editor,

During the five years I have been at K-State, it has had an excellent soccer team which usually finishes in the top three in the Big Eight, and just three weeks ago, won the Big Eight championship. Also, during these years, the team has received little support, cooperation or effort from certain administration officials in regard to securing a facility for practicing, a place to play games and tournaments or efforts at fund raising.

We've been kicked around, given the "run around," flat out lied to and been denied the use of facilities — even when nobody is using that facility. We've been accused of many ridiculous things and have taken full blame for "tearing up the old stadium," and have been denied use of the field because of it, when groups of people are playing football on it, the track team uses it and the University holds concerts and bonfires on it. All along, we've played by their rules and have stayed off the wet fields, etc.; yet, it seems to get us nowhere.

The people I address know who they are. Your actions and attitudes need to change, as they are a disgrace to yourselves and the University, and are not consistent with the school's reputation as being "caring" and "helpful."

To those who have been helpful during the years, such as Raydon Robel, Don Kirkendall, Jim Dickey, Mark Bonjour, Charlie Hedgcoth, Art Davis, the Budweiser distributors and the Sports Fan-Attic, thank you. Your efforts are appreciated more than you know.

To the K-State Soccer Club, keep it up — you do a great job of representing the school.

Weber condition hinders progress

Editor,

In my concern about the renovation about a lot of buildings on campus, I feel Weber Hall needs immediate attention.

When Weber was completed in 1957, it was, according to livestock officials and industry professors, a "monument to optimism about the livestock and meat industry in Kansas," which are the Nos. 1 and 2 industries in Kansas.

Twenty-six years and several hundred students later, Weber is an embarrassment and a hindrance to teaching and research in the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry. Weber is a complex which primarily serves agriculture students, but it also holds a number of other activities, such as industry conventions and expositions.

Weber is a 1950s facility attempting to serve an industry of the 1980s. I submit to you this cannot be accomplished. We must start now, so we can keep up with the fast advancing world of agriculture.

Library to decrease cost of book

Editor,

Both the Department of Speech and the Farrell Library staff were somewhat upset to discover that the Union Bookstore was charging $3.95 for the Oral Communications Library Workbook. (There are 1,290 students in Oral Communications this semester.)

The library staff figured it could produce the same workbook for about half the price and simply sell it themselves. So they did. In the fall, the workbook will be sold in the library for approximately $2.

Someone is making an attempt to look out for the students. Here Here!

City to honor peace officers for law week

The first week in May has been designated as national law week — to honor all areas of law enforcement, including the courts, the police department, and the military to name a few.

"It's just a special time, nationally, that we try to honor them (those involved with the law)," Wendy Schiappa of the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, said.

In the past, the Chamber of Commerce has held a dinner in honor of law week, but this year they are uncertain about whether there will be a dinner because of the lack of money.

Although the annual dinner has been put on hold, the Chamber of Commerce is working on establishing a memorial award in honor of a police officer killed in the line of duty, Shiappa said.

The award is in memory of Don Harbour who was the senior officer of the Riley County Police Department.

Harbour had been a police officer for 22 years when, on the morning of Aug. 9, 1982, he was killed while on assignment in the Ogden patrol district.

"It won't be an annual award," Alvan Johnson, chief of RCPD, said. "It will be awarded whenever a citizen performs some outstanding act that further aids law enforcement."

Johnson said he did not want to get in the position of searching each year for a recipient of the award.

Official predicts stable summer enrollment; students gain from loan, grant cancellations

This summer should be like last summer, with about the same amount of students enrolling for summer school, a University official predicted.

William Feyerharm, assistant provost, predicted that this summer's enrollment to be about the same as last summer's. Enrollment for the period is down but the number of applications is up, he said.

"My guess is that finances have prevented some from coming and actually enrolling," Feyerharm said.

Students attend summer school for a variety of reasons and Don Hoyt, director of student development, said the bulk of the summer school students are teachers and students who are here for the summer.

"It's rather a different population (than during the spring and fall semesters)," he said.

The Office of the Registrar reported summer enrollment for 1982 was 6,430, down from 6,452 students in 1981.

Students give many reasons for going to summer school, including completing degree requirements, retaking classes for better grades, to get ahead, to take a prerequisite, the availability of financial aid and the opportunity of many full-time jobs in Manhattan.

"I'm going to summer school so I can graduate sooner plus I like being up here for the summer. I already have a job here," Penny Nichols, senior in management, said.

"I'm going because I can't graduate and get my degree without it," Sally Wampler, graduate in journalism and mass communications and Photography I instructor, said.

Robert Evans, director of student financial assistance, said there were 155 applications for National Direct Student Loans (NDSLs) submitted and 225 applicants for summer work-study. He said there were numerous applications already submitted for Guaranteed Student Loans (GSLs), adding that they keep coming in.

Applications for NDSLs and work-study were due April 21, but applications for GSLs will continue to be accepted through enrollment, Evans said.

Evans said that GSLs were the most common form of financial aid requested by students for the summer term.

He added that although there hasn't been an increase in the aid allotted due to the economy, there are many loan and grant cancellations.

"We have a lot of money left over from the school year to utilize. This is from cancellations from students who didn't spend their money in the spring.

"We're always getting more applications — everything is always on an upward movement," Evans said.

Begin Cabinet to decide on Israeli troop withdrawal

JERUSALEM (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz said Wednesday that Lebanon had made a "very forthcoming" proposal for an Israeli troop withdrawal, and Prime Minister Menachem Begin said he would call a Cabinet meeting soon to decide on a draft agreement for a pullout.

But Begin, standing beside Shultz, said there were still disputed issues and the Cabinet has "very important things to decide."

"I have to say again the matters are very serious, very important," Begin said. He did not say when the Cabinet would meet but said it would be "very soon."

Israel radio said the Cabinet was expected to meet Thursday, but Begin's personal secretary, Yehiel Kadishai, said the meeting could be held on Friday to give more time to study the document.

"Not everything is agreed yet," Begin said in Hebrew, using language that he did not repeat in English.

Shultz told reporters after an hour-long meeting with Begin that he gave the Israeli leader and his senior ministers "an overall summary report of the conclusions reached in Beirut."

Shultz was cautious about whether he could get a final agreement on an Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon by the time he is scheduled to leave for Paris this weekend, saying it "remains to be seen."

But he told reporters accompanying him on the flight from Beirut that he now "has a way of getting at" one key stumbling block to an agreement — the future rule of Israeli-backed militia leader Maj. Saad Haddad in southern Lebanon.

While Shultz did not say how he proposed to resolve the Haddad issue, a U.S. official said Haddad might be given a lesser rank than he wants while maintaining a key command role over Lebanese forces in southern Lebanon following an Israeli withdrawal.

Giving Haddad such a command would be a concession by Lebanon, which had sought to have the former Lebanese army major removed from the area.

Thanks for the extra effort. We're looking forward to working with you next year.

Number of minority courses declines

From Staff and CPS Reports

In the past decade there has been a decrease in the number of black studies courses taught in colleges and universities throughout the United States.

Little more than half the black study programs being taught in 1973 are currently being taught, Howard University Professor Mary Berry discovered by a recent study for the Urban League.

K-State is no exception.

Veryl Switzer, assistant vice president for student affairs and associate dean for minority affairs, said he believes the enrollment decline in these classes is due to the lack of publicity in the course outline catalog.

During the mid-1970s, as many as 13 classes were offered in minority studies. Now, however, only seven to nine classes are offered from time to time, Switzer said.

Students are not aware these classes are offered and encouragement to take the classes has not been adequately provided, Switzer said.

No specific black studies department exists, he said, and all of the courses are taken as electives. If a student wishes to enroll in one of these classes, he or she must get permission to enter the particular course.

Not knowing what to expect from these classes also may discourage students from taking them, Switzer said, because the students don't know what is in store for them. He said he believes the white student would feel like a minority in the class so he or she avoids taking it.

Funding for the classes is not much of a problem, Switzer said, but getting students interested enough to take them is. If classes were supported more by the administration, white students would take these courses, he said.

The courses are offered to give students a broader background of different minorities, he said.

Switzer emphasized the importance of minority studies courses to students entering the teaching profession because, at one time or another, teachers may encounter a situation in which their knowledge in minority backgrounds will help them.

As well as aiding future teachers, Switzer said, the courses would benefit others entering the working world.

There may be a time when a person finds himself working for a black individual or supervisor, he said, and having knowledge of that person's ethnic background would help him in understanding his boss.

Although some universities' racism may be a factor in the decline in the number of classes being taught, Switzer said he believes this isn't much of a problem here.

He said enrollment in minority studies courses will be encouraged more in the future.

Florida may withhold high school diplomas from '83 students failing standard skills tests

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Florida may deny high school diplomas to seniors who fail the state's functional literacy test, a federal judge declared Wednesday in ruling against black students who claimed the exam was discriminatory.

The decision means that more than 3,000 Florida high school seniors who failed the basic skills test won't receive diplomas this year, but will get certificates of completion instead. They are among more than 108,000 seniors who first took the exam as sophomores in April 1981.

"The state of Florida may deny diplomas to members of the class of 1983 who have not passed," U.S. District Judge George C. Carr said at the conclusion of a 30-page ruling.

It was the first federal court test of whether states can deny diplomas to those who fail a standard exam. Many states have adopted standardized competency tests in the past few years, although most do not prevent students from receiving diplomas if they fail.

Florida's test is a series of multiple choice questions, covering math, reading and writing.

Carr presided over two trials concerning the test, the latest of which wound up last month.

In 1980, he ruled that the test was not racially or culturally biased. But he said the state had to wait until this year to use it as a graduation requirement so that all students would have attended desegregated schools for 12 years.

"Applying this standard to the facts presented at the 1979 and 1983 trials, the court finds that the injunction should not be extended," Carr wrote.

Florida Education Commissioner Ralph Turlington hailed the decision as one that will improve the quality of the state's high school graduates.

A student takes the test the first time as a sophomore and has four more chances to pass before graduation.

The Florida Legislature mandated the test in 1976. It was first administered the following year and soon was bogged down in the courts.

Fueling the long-standing controversy was the fact that blacks consistently failed at a much higher rate than whites. Seventy-five percent of the blacks failed the first time the test was given. Today, more than 90 percent are passing.

But critics claim the black-white failure rate is a staggering 10-to-1, even though blacks account for only 21 percent to 22 percent of the student population.

Federal court rejects pay discrimination suit filed by med center

GREAT BEND (AP) — A federal appeals court has rejected the Central Kansas Medical Center's appeal of a decision requiring housekeepers to be paid the same wage as janitors.

The hospital is considering appealing the wage discrimination suit to the U.S. Supreme Court, Gerald Reisschneider, executive vice president, said Tuesday.

The hospital, which has fought the case since 1975, was ordered last week by the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver to give about $300,000 in back pay to 30 past and present housekeepers.

Housekeeper salaries had been increased from $4.49 an hour to $5.39 an hour two weeks ago as the hospital complied with a ruling from the U.S. District Court in Wichita, which ruled against the hospital in December.

The ruling, which will add $30,000 to the hospital's annual payroll, could force delays in equipment purchases and lead to increased patient fees and room rates, Reisschneider said.

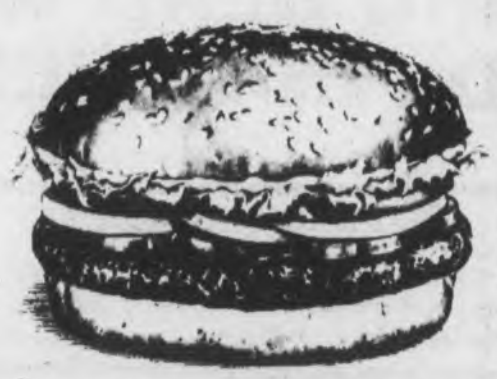
The government's suit contended housekeepers, who are responsible for cleaning patient rooms, do essentially the same work as janitors and must be paid the same wage.

The hospital said janitors deserve higher pay because they work at night and must use heavy equipment, such as floor scrubbers.

The court decisions also said the hospital discriminated on the basis of sex because all the housekeepers are women.

Reisschneider disputed the charge, pointing out that both men and women were janitors. He said men had been offered jobs as housekeepers, but none had accepted the positions.

The hospital has waged the lengthy legal battle, although it could have settled the case for $30,000 in 1975, Reisschneider said.



"We felt like we should do this on a matter of principle," Reisschneider said. "We felt like we should not roll over and give in to the government. It's a matter of principle."

Southwestern Bell to ask for record rate hike

TOPEKA (AP) — Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. officials announced Wednesday they will request a $213.7 million rate increase, the largest rate hike ever filed with the Kansas Corporation Commission by a utility.

If approved — and KCC officials fear federal law leaves little room to trim the request — it could nearly triple the cost of basic telephone service in Kansas. The formal request will be filed Thursday with the commission.

Ed Whitacre, vice president of the utility's Kansas operations, said the company is being forced to raise its rates because of "15-year series of decisions at the federal level of government aimed at restructuring the entire telecommunications industry in the United States."

"That policy encourages competition in the long distance and telephone equipment businesses," Whitacre told a news conference. "More than two-thirds of our total application is a result of changes in national policy."

Pete Loux, chairman of the corporation commission which regulates utilities in the state, responded angrily to the Bell rate hike announcement. He said it is now the responsibility of the KCC "to form a last line of defense against these dramatic increases in basic telephone rates."

"The KCC will go over the application and the company's operations extensively," Loux said in a prepared statement. He said the investigation will take six months and hearings will begin in October or November.

LOUX CRITICIZED Congress for caving in to "a multi-million dollar lobbying campaign by AT&T and its stockholders." Loux blamed the lobbying efforts for blocking legislation he said would "have protected consumers and softened the impact of the Bell-AT&T splitup."

He was referring to the court-ordered divestiture of American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and changes in Federal Communications Commission policy regarding what amounts telephone companies can claim for depreciation.

On Jan. 1, 1984, some 22 local AT&T companies will be broken up and regrouped into seven new regional companies. One of the new group will be Southwestern Bell which will continue to provide local, intrastate services and make connections with long distance networks.

"The new rules are designed to encourage competition in the long distance market and in the telephone equipment market — the two areas that have provided much of the subsidies to support local service," Whitacre said. He explained that artificially high long distance costs were charged to hold down the cost of local services.

"BUT THE ENTIRE complexion of the business has changed," he said. "What was revenue last year, such as long distance, we can't offer this year as a service."

Ownership and responsibility for telephones currently leased from Bell will be transfered to AT&T, along with repair services. Also, Southwestern Bell no longer will complete long distance calls from one area code to another. Instead, the company will provide access to long distance companies which will actually complete the calls.

"In Kansas today, we're allowed to charge customers less than half what it actually costs us to provide local telephone service," Whitacre said. "Since we will no longer have the long distance subsidies, local service will have to be priced to reflect its true cost."

He pointed out that federal regulations will prevent the commission from cutting much of the request. Only about $62.7 million of the total request is vulnerable to adjustment, Whitacre said, barring a court ruling which could change federal policy.

IF APPROVED, average monthly bills for basic telephone service in Kansas would jump from the current level of $8.80 to about $21. Loux also disputed statements by Whitacre that $52 million of the total $213.7 million request will not be paid by Kansas customers.

Here's how the rate hike request breaks down:

— $52 million for access costs to the access to the local telephone exhange networks.

— $58 million for increased depreciation costs caused by FCC decisions to allow companies to recover the cost of equipment investment and compensate for shorter equipment life with faster depreciation schedules.

— $41 million for access to local and long distance telephone networks paid in the past by subsidiaries from long distance charges.

— $62.7 million for increases locally in the cost of business.

Southwestern Bell set the state record for rate increase requests in 1981 when it asked for a jump of $80.5 million. The KCC granted $46.7 million of that request. The rate increase sought by the company now is three times higher than the previous record.

Bell is the largest public utility in Kansas serving about 784,000 customers in 177 cities including Wichita, Topeka, Kansas City, Hutchinson, Manhattan, Salina, Lawrence, Emporia, Hays, Parsons and Pittsburg.

House passes 'nonbinding' arms resolution tying nuclear weapons freeze to reduction

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House on Wednesday passed, 278-149, the long-debated resolution calling for a "mutual and verifiable" nuclear weapons freeze, but only after President Reagan's forces won a key concession tying a freeze to a reduction in weapons.

The vote came after GOP leaders seized on the announcement of a new Soviet arms reduction proposal in a successful effort to water down the freeze resolution. They said the Soviet offer showed the need for giving the president more flexibility in negotiating a halt to the arms race.

The freeze resolution, which is nonbinding and largely symbolic, now goes to the Republican-controlled Senate, where its fate is uncertain.

Final passage came shortly after freeze advocates suffered a major setback with the House's 221-203 approval of the administration-supported amendment by Reps. Henry Hyde, R-Ill, and Elliot H. Levitas, D-Ga., making a freeze and arms reductions a package deal.

"It takes the guts out of it," said freeze supporter Rep. Tony Coelho, D-Calif.

BOTH SIDES SOUGHT to claim victory over the wording, with opponents claiming it was a major step away from the straightforward freeze first advocated and sponsors claiming the modification at least retained the central principle of having a weapons freeze.

"It retains as its first priority a freeze," said Rep. Clement Zablocki, D-Wis., chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee and a key sponsor of the freeze measure.

And Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., told the House: "The freeze comes first. Priorities have not been altered."

Minority leader Robert H. Michel, R-Ill., argued that the modification made the freeze resolution "infinitely better now than when we first started. Make no mistake about it, the pure freeze has lost. Nothing anyone can say will change that."

The Reagan administration has insisted that reductions in weapons be negotiated before a freeze. Until Wednesday's vote, the freeze proposal would have encouraged reductions — but only after the freeze was in place.

THE CHANGE ENABLED the proposal to pick up widespread bipartisan support, propelling it to passage after a debate that has stretched over two months. Republicans, seizing the momentum, withdrew more than 30 pending amendments to allow a prompt vote on the overall measure.

The resolution urges that an immediate freeze on the production and deployment of all nuclear weapons be a major objective of arms talks now under way between the two superpowers in Geneva.

Sixty-six Democrats joined 155 Republicans in voting for the Hyde-Levitas amendment.

Levitas told reporters his amendment won passage because "it made sense ... and it caught proponents by surprise."

The Hyde-Levitas amendment adopted by the House is a middle ground between the original freeze proposal and the administration position.

THE PRESIDENT HAS argued that this country is already behind the Soviets in the arms race, particulary in land-based missiles, and that a freeze without accompanying reductions would lock the United States into this position of inferiority.

A loud cheer went up from the Republican side of the House chamber with adoption of the Hyde-Levitas proposal.

Under the modificaction, the weapons reductions would have to be achieved "within a reasonable, specified period of time, as determined by negotiations."

Earlier, on a 270-149 procedural vote, the House went along with a Democratic leadership plan to limit remaining debate on the long-considered bill to 14 hours. That set the stage for a final vote — and anticipated passage — on Thursday.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., a supporter of the resolution calling for a U.S.-Soviet "mutual and verifiable" freeze on the production and deployment of nuclear weapons, renewed an earlier prediction that the measure would pass by a 50-100 vote margin.

Sponsors have claimed all along that they have the votes to prevail, but administration allies have managed to delay that final vote for nearly two months — largely through the filing of dozens of amendments.

Study says health hazard minimal from exposure to cigarette smoke

BOSTON (AP) — Nonsmokers who ride in the smoking sections on long, overseas plane trips inhale the equivalent of one cigarette, but this does not produce enough nicotine or carbon monoxide to be a health hazard, a study shows.

However, the study did not try to determine whether this low level of smoke caused lung irritation.

The researchers measured amounts of the two substances absorbed by flight attendants who worked in the smoking section on an eight-hour flight from Tokyo to San Francisco.

They found that the women, all nonsmokers, had no increase in their blood levels of carbon monoxide. Their nicotine levels rose about the amount that would be absorbed from smoking a single cigarette.

"It actually surprised us, because we thought that people would have much more exposure than this over eight hours," Dr. Neil L. Benowitz, one of the researchers, said in an interview. "In the sense that they're not heavily exposed, 'it is reassuring."

Benowitz conducted the study with Drs. Donna Foliart and Charles E. Becker, all of San Francisco General Hospital Medical Center. Their research was published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

"We concluded that there is passive absorption of nicotine from tobacco smoke by flight attendants during a transoceanic flight," they wrote, "but that the quantity consumed (equivalent to one cigarette) is relatively small compared with that consumed by cigarette smokers, and the concentrations achieved are unlikely to have physiologic effects."

Benowitz said the researchers conducted the experiment on the Pacific flight, "because we thought that if we were going to find a substantial effect, it would be on a long, transoceanic flight."

Concerns have been raised about the potential health effects of "passive smoking," especially in such public places as airplanes and restaurants.

However, carbon monoxide and nicotine are not the only potential hazards of breathing other people's smoke. Foes of public smoking also contend that it may damage nonsmokers' lungs in other ways.

"Our study does not address other possible health risks, such as impairment of pulmonary function or kinds of lung cancer that have been attributed to passive smoking but which are unrelated to nicotine or carbon monoxide exposure," Benowitz said.

The Civil Aeronautics Board requires airlines to provide separate sections for nonsmokers, but recently a federal court ruled that the regulations do not pay enough attention to drifting smoke. As a result, the board proposed new rules last month that would require airlines to ban smoking if their planes lack adequate ventilation.

Teamster trustees to repay $6 million in suit settlement

WASHINGTON (AP) — Trustees of two Teamster union benefit plans have agreed to repay more than $6 million to settle a government suit over alleged abuse of union assets, administration sources said Wednesday night.

The settlement, which is to be announced Thursday by Labor Secretary Raymond J. Donovan, will end one of a number of government suits against the trustees of the $2.4 billion Central States Pension Fund and a separate welfare fund, said sources who declined to be identified.

It will be the largest settlement the Labor Department has ever obtained in its enforcement of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, which places strict limits on the investment use of pension and welfare assets of union members.

Federal judges in Illinois and Florida still must approve the accord.

Teamster officials could not immediately be reached for comment. There was no answer at the home of Duke Zeller, the union's spokesman.

Michael Volpe, a spokesman for Donovan, said only that the Labor Department planned an announcement Thursday.

One administration official, who agreed to talk only on the grounds that he remain anonymous, said the settlement was agreed to by lawyers for the trustees of the two Teamster funds.

Under the settlement, Teamster pension and welfare trustess are to reimburse the two plans for money improperly spent on things like the purchase of an airplane, aquisition of undeveloped land in Florida and the payment of legal fees for past fund trustees named as defendants in a civil suit first brought by the Carter administration against the Central States Pension Fund, the source said.

Student attorney search continues

The Student Attorney Search Committee is still in the process of looking for a student attorney and hopes to make a decision as quickly as possible, according to Lori Leu, Student Senate chairwoman.

Leu said the committee is comprised of herself, Jerry Katlin, student body president; Diane Murphy, chairwoman of Personnel Selections Committee; Sally Routson, coordinator of Student Activities; and Pat Bosco, assistant vice president for Student Affairs.

The committee will meet next week to consider five applicants who have come to K-State for interviews.

Leu said there are no major issues coming up in which a student attorney's input is required, but the search committee wants to make a selection as soon as possible in order to reduce any inconvenience to students.

Jenny Johnston, Student Governing Association secretary, indicated that 90 percent of the questions students have had concern the Landlord-Tenant Act.

"The Consumer Relations Board has been able to handle all of that," Johnston said.

"We definitely would like to have one by June," Leu said, "because that would give them time to learn the position over the summer." But she added that the committee would not rush into making a decision if it was not satisfied with the available candidates.

Swedish navy explodes two mines to thwart alien submarine escape

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Naval forces hunting an alien submarine late Wednesday detonated two seabottom mines in a narrow channel where spotters saw the periscope of a mini-sub that was trying to escape, the search command said.

Spokesman Bertil Daggfeldt said anti-submarine helicopters sweeping the dark waters with searchlights had turned up nothing, "but that does not mean that it is not lying on the bottom."

Command leaders told a news conference that mine station operators detonated two seabottom mines at 8:20 p.m. in the narrow strait between Alno Island and the mainland, 252 miles north of Stockholm. Cmdr. Daggfeldt said the search for the intruder, which began last week, would continue through Thursday.

"It can be that the submarine is not able to come up to the surface," he said. Earlier on a television newscast, he said: "We don't know yet what effect the explosions had."

A television reporter in the area said he saw what appeared to be an oil slick after the mines went off.

Daggfeldt said the armed forces commander, Gen. Lennart Ljung, authorized the mines set off in the Alno Strait after military units made "optical observations of what was undoubtedly a mini-submarine showing the periscope."

He said the sub was seen heading north through the strait to get into Sundsvall Bay, where the sub hunt began last week. The search command concluded the mini-sub was trying to sneak away, he said.

"The submarine could have gotten away," he added. "You cannot be completely sure until you get the submarine up."

TV reporter Hakan Nilsson, who lives on Alno, reported "three or four powerful explosions" went off just before 8.30 p.m. in the bay to the northeast of the island. He said he saw what appeared to be an oil slick on the surface afterward.

The hunt has been on since civilians in the area first reported seeing an unidentified foreign vessel off Sundsvall last week. Monday night the navy said it had made contact with at least one foreign sub.

The Swedish government protested last month to the Soviet government that at least six Soviet submarines violated its territorial waters last fall. The Swedes warned that any more intruders would be destroyed. Moscow denied the intrusions.

Students camp out in barns to monitor pregnant mares

By LISA LEISTER
Contributing Writer

Learning about horses is more than a classroom experience for students enrolled in Horse Science. They assist with bringing a new life into the world by keeping watch on mares which are ready to foal.

When foaling time nears, students camp out at the Horse Teaching and Research Center north of campus.

Watching the pregnant mares is a requirement for the course taught by Dennis Sigler, assistant professor of animal sciences and industry. For the "assignment," students divide into groups, each group taking responsibility for one University mare which is due to foal.

For horses, gestation period, or pregnancy term, is 340 days. Beginning 14 days before the mare's predicted foaling date, students from the group check on the mother-to-be every two days.

Seven days before the foal is due to arrive, students check the mare daily. The mare's weight and pre-foaling measurements are also taken.

WHEN THE MARE shows evidence of nearing foaling time, students check her every 10 to 15 minutes during the night, attempting not to disturb her. Mares tend to foal during the night when they are by themselves.

When the student who is watching the mare sees the first signs of labor, he or she contacts other students in the group so they can crawl out of bed and come witness the event.

When giving birth, the mares are put into a paddock, a small outside enclosure, or a foaling stall if the weather is poor.

The foaling process lasts an average of 10 to 20 minutes. If the mare does not foal within 30 minutes, a complication is likely. A close watch is needed so that if a complication does occur, it can be corrected.

After the foal is born and the naval cord breaks, students clear the foal's nostrils if it does not occur naturally. In addition, they treat its naval stump with an iodine solution.

THE FOAL is usually up on wobbly legs just a few minutes after birth.

After it stands, the hungry foal's first steps are toward its mother as it searches for nourishment.

If the foal does not stand within two hours, students help the foal to its feet and guide it to its mother's udder.

After about 30 minutes, the typical foal is in full swing, testing its new legs by running and jumping.

For 24 to 36 hours, the mare produces colostrum, or first milk, a laxative which contains antibodies to build up the foal's resistance to disease.

Tom Buckley, senior in pre-veterinary medicine and animal sciences and industry, said he thinks it is a good idea for students to learn pre-parturition duties, such as how to take pulse and respiration rates. Students also weigh the foal after it is born.

"I think it was a good experience, particularly for the people who have never seen anything like that before and haven't been around horses," he said.

Printing service director recalls past

Eaton to leave after 27 years at University

Staff/Scott Williams

George Eaton... director of K-State Printing Services, to retire June 1.

By SUSAN DENZON
Collegian Reporter

Taking a 30-minute break from his usual hectic day in the printing shop, George Eaton sat comfortably in his brown vinyl chair. With elbows on the armchair and his right hand on his chin, as if in contemplation, Eaton, director of K-State Printing Services, talked about his work, people and life itself.

"How swiftly time flies," he said. "It seemed like the time I came to K-State till the time I leave has been short, yet challenging. There never has been a dull moment, for the work is never ending."

As director of printing services, Eaton has found his niche in life through his job. He came to K-State from South Dakota in December 1955. Ralph Lashbrook, former head of the Department of Journalism and Mass Communications, hired him. Since then, until his retirement June 1, Eaton has been in charge of the printing service.

He is an eyewitness to its development — from gross earnings of $324,000 in 1967, to $1.2 million in 1982. The presses average 500 jobs a month — from a 20-minute job to one which takes a month to complete. That he's the man behind the services' success is an understatement.

"THE PRINTING PRESS is self-supporting. We don't get appropriations," he said. "We must earn enough for salaries of the 34 workers, repair and purchase of equipment and supplies. It's like running a business."

He likes dealing with customers and suppliers and contacting people. From his contacts, he has not only won patrons, but more importantly, friends.

Bill Brown, associate professor of journalism and mass communications, said whenever he and Eaton are in the Union for a cup of coffee, friends and acquaintances always come around their table to talk with Eaton.

"Because nearly every department does business with the printing service, George is probably known by more people on campus than any other service head," Brown said. "People have always something to say to George."

Robert Bontrager, associate professor of journalism and mass communications, has the same observation.

"WHEREVER HE GOES, he seems to find people or people just find him," Bontrager said. "He's such a cheerful, friendly personality with a lot of stories to tell."

Eaton said he would like to be of some help to people, in order to help them get as much value for their money as he can. He also wants, as much as possible, all printing orders done on time and to the customers' satisfaction.

Lashbrook's impression of Eaton is deep and lasting.

"George has that positive attitude toward everything," Lashbrook said, remembering his working relationship with Eaton. "But what impressed me most was his versatility and ability to wear several hats. He had excellent technical skills, was an excellent teacher and was excellent in dealing with everybody — the faculty, employees and customers.

"He had the ability to communicate with them, and seemed to have that charisma of bringing customers in and winning friends. He was good at explaining things and provided advice and suggestions to customers, which was an educational process for the inexperienced," Lashbrook added.

Delbert Long, supervisor of printing services, said Eaton runs the shop as if it were his own.

"HE IS CAREFUL in buying machinery and equipment, neither does he waste (money) on useless things," Long said. "He's fair and 'a good Joe.' One thing, though, he's not a real hard boss. He doesn't get angry when somebody messes up his job."

To Eaton, no day is "typical." Everyday, he said, brings different challenges and these challenges make each day different and interesting.

He regularly comes to the shop at 7:30 a.m. Before the 8 o'clock rush, he has the time to unlock doors, answer calls from sick personnel, read the morning paper or have shoptalk with those who arrive early.

During the course of his busy day, he still finds the time to sort out the mail at Kedzie Hall and bring it in to the three offices there: Student Publications, journalism and mass communications and printing. He enjoys being a mailman, for it gives him the chance to see, talk or say "Hi!" to his colleagues upstairs.

"George is always bright and cheery," said Dave Adams, associate professor of journalism and mass communications and director of Student Publications. "He cheers up everybody's day by making jokes or telling stories. He's really a good chap downstairs, and is a colorful personality. Everybody has a strong respect for him."

CHEERFULNESS IS EATON'S trademark. He spreads his cheerfulness to others.

"When George leaves, I'll miss his whistling," Brown said. "I know when he comes down the hall because of his whistling. And I like what he wears everyday — and that's his smile. He has a broad smile, even on days when he has problems."

But Eaton is still human. In his job, he strongly dislikes customers who set deadlines, but don't follow them. An example is when a customer makes a printing order on a short notice but fails to pick it up on time.

"I like people who are professional, who know what they want," Eaton said. "We usually work it out together."

When he isn't working, Eaton indulges in golf — with a passion. He has been playing golf since he was 8 years old, when an old army colonel gave him five wooden clubs. He started playing on the golf course of Alcester, S.D., his hometown. Now he is good at it, as his friends, colleagues and himself admit.

AFTER HE RETIRES, when not doing a part-time job, he wants to head to the golf course.

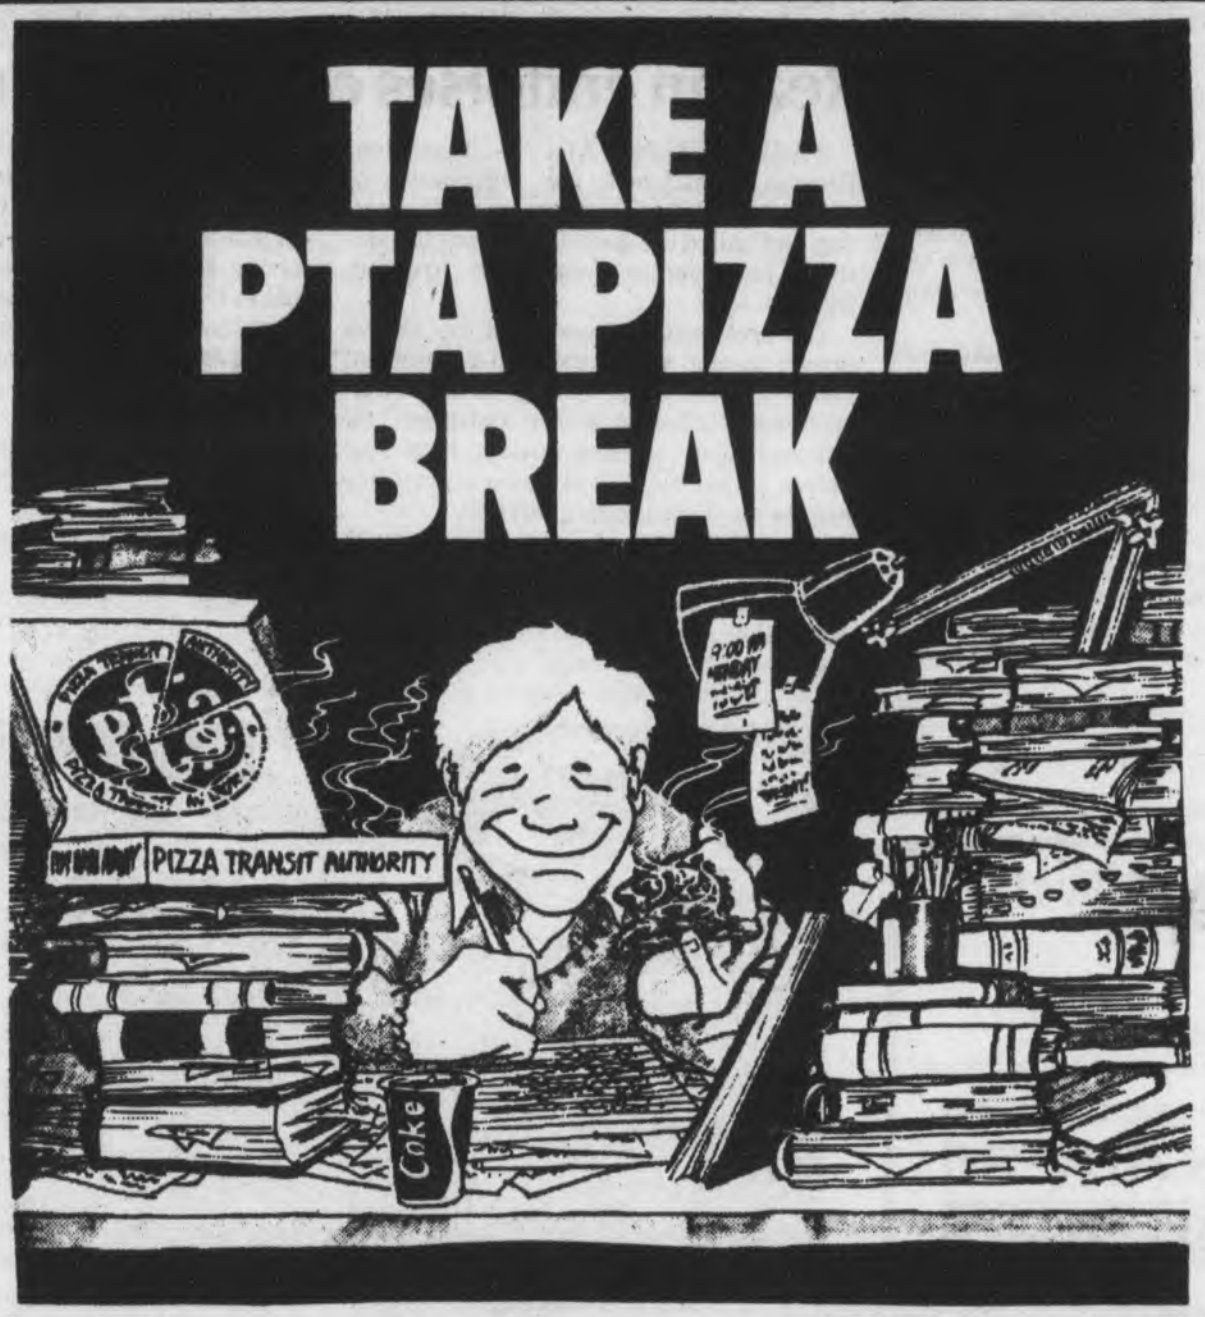
Before a heart attack in 1962, Eaton used to go hunting every fall with friends. They hunted quail and pheasant. Now, he misses hunting and some other physical activities he once enjoyed.

"I can't be as active as I once was," he said. "I've learned to get by not doing strenuous work.

"After the attack, I learned some certain values. There were things before which I thought mattered a lot, but not anymore. I think the most important thing for me now is to be healthy and be alive."

As one grows older, Eaton said, one realizes the value of family and friends.

"Not living for oneself alone and consideration for the other person is important to me," he said. "And I always remember that."



And Eaton has no qualms about spending the best and most fruitful years of his life at K-State.

Reagan

Nicaragua had an element of "partisanship" in it. The 9-5 vote was along party lines.

"I don't think this reflects the thinking of a great many Democrats," he said.

As he did Monday night, he said the committee action was "very irresponsible," and stated: "It literally was taking away the ability of the executive branch to carry out its responsibilities."

He said that the only assistance the United States could give to rebels fighting the Sandinista government in Nicaragua would have to go through other governments in the region.

"I don't know (that) that's an effective thing," the president said.

Reagan made the comments while being interviewed in the Oval Office. His statements were carried live to other reporters in the White House press room on a public address system.

Asked to evaluate his foreign policy, Reagan said, "I think we've made great progress." Specifically, he said Beirut is not under constant bombardment now, and that negotiations are under way for withdrawal of foreign forces from Lebanon,

On the Middle East, Reagan said his administration was building on the Camp David agreement between Egypt and Israel, and that "We are the ones who have gone a step beyond that with regard to trying to have an overall peace in the entire area."

Asked if Middle East nations should move ahead with peas without the participation of the Palestine Liberation Organization, Reagan said, "This would require, of course, the agreement of ... the Arab states.

"Since the negotiations we are trying to bring about are between the Arab states and Israel for peace in the region, we have to recognize their position with regard to this.

"It would take them agreeing to go forward in negotiations without the PLO," said Reagan.

Europe reacts cautiously to arms proposal

LONDON (AP) — Western European governments reacted cautiously Wednesday to the new Soviet arms proposal. Some welcomed the inclusion of warheads in measuring nuclear forces, but Britain and France said they won't go along with counting their missiles as part of the NATO arsenal.

Most Western comments on Soviet leader Yuri V. Andropov's offer took into account that it was only a broad outline that has yet to be placed on the table at the intermediate-range arms reduction talks in Geneva. The recessed talks are to resume May 17.

The Soviet Union said previously that it was willing to cut the number of missiles aimed at Western Europe. But Andropov's proposal, made Tuesday during a Kremlin speech, suggested for the first time a mutual ceiling on warheads as well as missiles deployed on land and in submarines and airplanes.

President Reagan and the U.S. allies have made similar proposals, but Andropov also said that British and French nuclear weapons must be taken into account in any overall reduction, and the Western allies firmly oppose such a plan.

The British Foreign Office gave a typical reaction, saying the Andropov proposal "is a step in the right direction and is to be welcomed if, as we hope, it is a signal that the Russians will now begin to negotiate seriously at Geneva."

The Foreign Office added, however, that Andropov's "assertion that British and French nuclear weapons must be counted in the negotiations remains completely unacceptable to us and to our allies."

In Paris, the Foreign Ministry said France is "not a partner" in the Geneva talks, and it is "unacceptable for us that forces of a third party be taken into account."

But a French spokesman said it would "be useful to know the exact content" of Andropov's proposal.

Both Britain and France, supported by the United States, contend their nuclear forces are independent of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and are intended strictly to provide the minimum retaliatory force to deter an attack on their own territory.

Britain belongs to the NATO military command. France, although a NATO member, maintains a separate command structure.

The Western allies say they are willing to strike a deal with the Soviets on the number of nuclear missiles deployed on European soil, but only in terms of U.S. missiles scheduled for deployment later this year.

Reagan's latest proposal, the "interim solution," would have NATO scale back its plans to deploy 572 U.S.-built Pershing 2 and cruise missiles in Britain, West Germany, Italy, Belgium and the Netherlands in return for an equal Soviet cut in its arsenal of modern, multi-warhead SS-20 missiles.

West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, departing from a major policy speech Wednesday, said Andropov's statements "confirm our view that the Soviet leadership has not yet spoken its last word on the American proposal for an interim agreement."

But he also reaffirmed his support for the NATO deployment plan, should there be no agreement in Geneva.

Reagan endorses continued aid to Nicaraguan rebels

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan questioned the legitimacy of Nicaragua's leftist government on Wednesday and hailed the guerrillas trying to overthrow that country's regime as "freedom fighters."

The president also endorsed the idea of openly giving aid to the anti-government rebels in Nicaragua so long as no restrictions were attached to the assistance. He acknowledged — more directly than ever before — that the United States is providing help to the Nicaraguan guerrillas.

Reagan's statements, in an interview with reporters, went far beyond his earlier criticism of Sandinista regime, which he has accused of attempting to export revolution throughout Central America.

The president said Nicaragua's leaders have reneged on promises to promote democracy and to hold free elections.

"And what really — other than being in control of the capital, you might say, and having a handle on all the levers — what makes them any more a legitimate government than the people of Nicaragua who are asking for a chance to vote for the kind of government they want," Reagan questioned.

Reagan drew a sharp distinction between the guerrillas fighting in Nicaragua and those trying to topple the U.S.-backed government in neighboring El Salvador.

The difference, he said, "depends on what kind of government they are opposing."

"Now, I think the ones in El Salvador who are fighting against an elected government, they are guerrillas," said Reagan.

"But in reality, when we talk about Nicaragua and everyone says 'the government of Nicaragua,' well it was a government out of the barrel of a gun."

"And, true, we favored it before I got here," Reagan said. "We did not lift a hand for the existing government of Nicaragua, because we did not believe that it was treating its people fairly."

Of the guerrillas in El Salvador, Reagan said, "I don't call them freedom fighters because they've got freedom and they're fighting for something else. They're fighting for a restraint on freedom."

Reagan was interviewed a day after the House Intelligence Committee voted to ban and stop financing any U.S. involvement with guerrillas fighting the Nicaraguan government.

Service matches volunteers to needy agencies

By LORI RIFFEL
Collegian Reporter

In this fast-paced, no-time-for-anything world, there are some people who willingly lend a helping hand to others.

Yes, they volunteer themselves. No fast buck here — just a warm feeling of fellowship and a sense of accomplishment.

The Volunteer Clearing House (VCH), located in the University for Man house, is the Manhattan and Riley County connection for those who want to serve others.

VCH is an independently funded service organization, with the K-State Family Center and the United Way providing assistance.

In the current economic hard times, fewer social service agencies are hiring employees and asking more for volunteers.

"Part of the increase in the number of volunteers has been from the unemployed," Roxan Frankenburger, VCH director and graduate in family and child development, said. VCH was founded in June 1981.

"In 1980 a survey was conducted with agencies who use volunteer workers. It was found that there was a need for a volunteer service in this community and county," Frankenburger said.

Interested volunteers contact the VCH for work, submitting basic background information, type of work preferred and free time to work.

The choices of work vary and currently cover 20 areas, ranging from care of the handicapped to office work, physical labor to graphics.

WITH A LARGE CHART on the wall of the office, VCH keeps a day-to-day account of the 44 agencies currently needing volunteers. Manhattan has a total of 143 service agencies and organizations, and Riley County boasts approximately 1,000 volunteers.

VCH will accept any person wanting to contribute free time and don't usually turn away those who apply. Volunteers range between the ages of 17 and 52 and are mostly women, Frankenburger said.

"We've had military wives call up and want to do something and take part as a volunteer service worker," she said.

Frankenburger said she has also done recruiting at fraternities, sororities and residence halls, which often volunteer as part of their community service projects.

STUDENTS IN Introduction to Social Work also use VCH to fulfill a class requirement of 50 hours of volunteer work. Progress reports are turned in by the agencies every two weeks for the social work students and once a month for other volunteers.

"I let the agency know who the volunteer is, then the agency contacts the volunteer personally," Frankenburger said. "It is then called a match-up." Between June 1982 and April 1983, VCH helped complete 106 match-ups.

"After the VCH matches up the volunteer with an agency, it is the agency's responsibility and right to decide if the volunteer would be good for them. Only one or two haven't been satisfactory," she said.

THE PERIOD OF SERVICE each volunteer works varies, depending on the services the agency needs or the projects it needs completed.

On the first Sunday of each month, the Manhattan Mercury publishes a VCH bulletin of activities and agencies needing volunteers.

"A good response is felt when we let the public know the programs they can assist," Frankenburger said.

As an example of how the VCH matches volunteers, a recent bulletin advertised for workers for the Kansas Folklife Festival. Since volunteers were needed for making signs, setting up booths and helping during the festival, match-ups were made, using those information sheets indicating the desire to do graphics, physical labor and general help.

SOMETIMES THE HELP needed is seasonal. For instance, the Manhattan Recreation Commission asks for volunteers to be coaches and referees for summer baseball and the elderly need help in raking leaves. Sunset Zoo needs volunteers to fix meals for the animals and to clean cages and pens.

"People are willing to help, just ask them," Frankenburger said. "In the Parent to Parent program, volunteers meet once a week with parents that have stress problems. They offer communication in talking and listening and provide understanding.

"In the Big Brothers-Big Sisters program I needed people to conduct an evaluation over the phone. I just asked and they (the public) readily volunteered their time.

"Right now our goal is to get more people from the community and county to volunteer in relation to the number of student volunteers," Frankenburger said.

More funds are needed to support the VCH if it to continue serving the area.

"At the time we have an answering service many people may get when calling to get information on the VCH. We know this could be discouraging," she said. "United Way currently pays for our phone service. We cannot afford to pay someone else to personally answer the phone."

Frankenburger has two students who work free one day a week each at the VCH and she works at least 10 hours per week between classes.

"In the future we would like to see an office downtown or in the United Way office. To be at a better location, more visible and easier access, would increase our service to the community," Frankenburger said.

A Walk Through The Campus

"A Walk Through The Campus" is a composite of 83 drawings, by Dr. Emil C. Fischer, of existing and previously existing buildings on K-State's campus. From the 19th Century picturesque Anderson Hall to the new contemporary engineering building, Durland Hall, Fischer has caught the spirit of the ever growing K-State campus.

Dr. Emil C. Fischer, K-State's Architecture Department Head from 1955 to 1964, retired from college administrative duties in 1970.

"Professor Fischer, with the aid of pen and ink, was able to ignore concealing vines and interfering trees and record our campus buildings not only for the interest of students, faculty, alumni and friends, but also as a scholarly record."

Duane Acker, President

STUDENT LOANS

Available at Union National Bank!

We're ready and willing to help with a low interest student loan. Union National is a participating lender in the Higher Education Assistance Foundation (HEAF) to assist Kansas students in meeting the cost of attending college.

So if your son or daughter is serious about wanting to get more schooling and needs a loan to do it, here's what to do:

- Obtain an application from either Union National Bank or the school's financial aid office.
- Complete your part of the form and have the school complete its part determining eligibility.
- Bring the application to Union National for approval.

We'll be happy to discuss this program in complete detail with you without obligation.

Just come to the Main Bank, 8th and Poyntz and ask the receptionist to introduce you to one of our student loan counselors.

Ruckelshaus says EPA was victim of system abuse

WASHINGTON (AP) — William D. Ruckelshaus vowed Wednesday there would be "no hit lists ... no sweetheart deals" if he is confirmed to head the embattled Environmental Protection Agency.

Ruckelshaus — whose confirmation is virtually assured — told a Senate hearing considering his nomination that some of what's happened at the environmental agency has been "abuse of process."

"I think EPA's crippled. I think it's in trouble," Ruckelshaus said. "If I didn't believe that, I wouldn't be back here."

He said that under his leadership at the agency: "There will be no hit lists. There will be no 'big P' political decisions. There will be no sweetheart deals. That is the way I intend it to be and that is the way it will be."

Ruckelshaus' testimony before the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee was his first on Capitol Hill since he was named by President Reagan to succeed Anne McGill Burford, who resigned under fire in March. His confirmation hearing continues on Thursday.

Burford and a dozen of her top aides left under accusations of mismanagement and political manipulation of the agency. Congressional and FBI investigations are continuing, and Ruckelshaus declined to go further than his brief comment, saying people involved still might face civil or criminal penalties.

Ruckelshaus defended Reagan in the dispute, saying the president "has not supported any action that has occurred that is wrong, that is morally, legally or ethically wrong."

"My charge from the president is to faithfully administer the laws of the EPA, and that's precisely what I intend to do," Ruckelshaus said.

While Ruckelshaus' confirmation as EPA administrator is almost assured — Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., predicted it would be a unanimous Senate vote — he came under sharp questioning from committee members about whether his appointment marked a change in administration environmental policies.

Ruckelshaus told the committee that he has been promised independence in running the EPA, including a veto over other presidential appointees within the agency.

Anderson pitches 'Cats to win over Allen County

Staff/Jeff Taylor

Last hurrah... Janel Anderson, who holds all of K-State's pitching records, hurled her final game as a Wildcat Wednesday afternoon, striking out four batters enroute to her 16th victory of the season. The 'Cats defeated Allen County Community College 4-1.

By JEFF TAYLOR
Collegian Reporter

In the final games of the season, the K-State women's softball team split a twin-bill with Allen County Community College, winning the first game 4-1 and losing the second 5-6 Wednesday at CiCo Park.

The double-header ended the second best season ever for the team with an overall record of 17-15.

Janel Anderson, who holds all of K-State's pitching records, hurled the first game of the double-header, allowing only five hits. Amy Fisher, on the mound for the second contest, allowed seven hits and six runs to pick up the loss.

K-State's Pam Hentzler led off the first contest, reaching first on an error by the Allen County defense. Cathy Hinson followed with an attempted sacrifice bunt that was again mishandled by the Red Devil defense, allowing both players to reach base safely. Hentzler scored on a series of errors, but Allen County ended the scoring threat by getting the next three batters in consecutive order.

Allen County was able to contain the offensive activity of the Wildcats until the third when Hinson, who went two for two in the contest, doubled to left and scored on a one-out single by Kelly Scoles.

THE WILDCATS had back-to-back singles by Cindy Wassinger and Rachelle Borders to start the bottom half of the fourth inning, followed by a sacrifice bunt by the pitcher Anderson which advanced both runners.

Hentzler reached first on an error which allowed Wassinger to score, but Borders was thrown out at third on the play. Hentzler then stole second and scored on a single by Hinson, which concluded scoring in the contest for K-State.

Allen County's only run came in the sixth when Sherri Erickson hammered a two-out triple and scored on a double by Erin Hannagan.

Rhonda Tridle picked up the loss for Red Devils while Anderson racked up her 16th win of the season.

The second game was a series of errors by both teams. K-State summed up five, while Allen County totaled four.

ALLEN COUNTY scored in the first stanza when Robin Parodi reached base on a walk. Sherri Erickson followed with a sacrifice bunt, but an error allowed Parodi to go to third and Erickson to reach first safely.

Erin Hannagan hit a triple with no outs, scoring both base runners. She scored two outs later on a sacrifice fly by Vicki Stanley to conclude scoring in the top half of the first.

In the Wildcats' half of the first, Hinson hit a one-out double and scored when a ground ball by Annette Kirkham was misplayed. Kirkham went to second on a passed ball, advanced to third on a single by Scoles and scored the final run of the inning on a sacrifice fly by Pam Rufener.

Luanne Fox led off with a walk in the Wildcats' second inning followed by Amy Fisher, who hit a sacrifice bunt that was bobbled, allowing Fisher to reach first and Fox to advance to second. Leslie Taylor followed with a single to load the bases. The Allen County defense got the next two batters on pop outs before Scoles walked, forcing a run home. Rufener hit a shot by the third baseman, scoring two runs, before the Allen county defense could rally to retire the side.

THE RED DEVILS' lead-off hitter, Parodi, reached base again in the third inning on an error on K-State third baseman Borders. She scored on a double by Erickson for the only run of the inning.

Allen County, down 5-4, scored the tying run in the top of the seventh, when Parodi walked with one out, went to second on Erickson's single, and scored on the resulting error by K-State's Fox. Erickson advanced to third on an error by K-State and came home with the winning run on a single by Hannagan.

Fischer, 1-1, took the loss for K-State, although she allowed only two earned runs in seven innings, giving up seven hits. Ericksen pitched the game for Allen County, improving her record to 6-3. She also pitched a good game, giving up two earned runs on six hits.

Lady 'Cats sign Kansas standout to national letter

K-State women's basketball coach Lynn Hickey has announced the signing of Chaparral High School standout Susan Green to a national letter-of-intent.

Green, a 5-foot-8 point guard from Anthony, led the Roadrunners to a 17-4 record this season. She averaged 21 points, 9.4 rebounds, four steals and 3.5 assists per game. The Roadrunners have posted a glittering 62-9 overall record in her past three seasons, and as a sophomore Green helped guide Chaparral to a state championship.

"We are honored to be able to sign a first-rate athlete from the state and there's no doubt that Susan is one of the best guards in Kansas this year," Hickey said. "She has good basic skills and is a tremendously hard worker. Susan will help fill the guard spots which were thinned by graduation."

An all-league selection for three seasons, Green also garnered all-state, all-class honors by the Wichita Eagle-Beacon and Topeka Capital Journal. Additionally, she was named to the all-state 4A team picked by the Kansas City Star and the Wichita Eagle-Beacon. Her sophomore and junior campaigns Green was a member of the prestigious all-state tournament teams.

Green chose K-State over Kansas, Wichita State and Iowa State. She joins 6-2 Sue Leiding, Tulsa, Okla., and 5-10 Carlisa Thomas, Jacksonville, Fla,. as the Lady Cats' third signee.

Action intensifies in New York tennis meet

NEW YORK (AP) — Fifth-seeded Vitas Gerulaitis fought off six set points before grabbing a 12-10 first-set tiebreaker, then went on to defeat former champion Eddie Dibbs Wednesday and advance into the quarterfinals of the $500,000 Mercedes Tournament of Champions at the famed West Side Tennis Club.

John McEnroe, who is seeded second in this unique 40-player field, moved into the third round when his scheduled opponent, Jairo Velasco of Colombia, failed to show up. Both McEnroe and Velasco had received first-round byes in this champions-only event.

Third-seeded Guillermo Vilas, making his first appearance at Forest Hills since he won the U.S. Open in 1977 — the last time America's premiere tennis event was staged at the West Side club — fell behind 2-5 in the first set before ousting Van Winitsky 7-5, 6-2.

Gerulaitis, who won this event in 1980, eliminated Dibbs, the 1981 champion, 7-6, 6-4 when play got underway three hours late because of rain.

IN OTHER second-round matches Wednesday, Scott McCain upset sixth-seeded Wojtek Fibak of Poland 7-5, 7-5; No. 4 Kevin Curren of South Africa defeated Jaime Fillol of Chile 7-5, 0-6, 6-2; No. 8 Paul McNamee of Australia downed Larry Stefanki 6-2, 4-6, 6-4 and No. 13 Henri Leconte of France stopped Bolivia's Mario Martinez 6-4, 6-2.

Gerulaitis jumped out to a 4-0 lead in the opening set before Dibbs, a clay court specialist who has always done well here, battled back to knot the set at 5-5. The two then held serve to force the set into the tiebreaker.

Dibbs won six of the first nine points, holding triple set point, and reached set point three other times before Gerulaitis finally prevailed.

"It was a tough tiebreaker," Dibbs said afterward.

Gerulaitis broke Dibbs in the third and seventh games to build up a 5-2 advantage in the second set. And again Dibbs tried to come back, breaking Gerulaitis in the eighth game and holding serve to pull to 4-5.

BUT THIS TIME Gerulaitis didn't need a tiebreaker, holding serve at 15 in the 10th game to capture the match.

"It was a tough draw, to play (Argentina's Jose Luis) Clerc and to play Vitas," said Dibbs, who lost to Ivan Lendl in the T of C finals last year.

"For me to beat him on clay is pretty good for me," said Gerulaitis.

There were 10 service breaks in the Fibak-McCain match as neither player could cope with the swirling winds.

Fibak broke the Californian in the 10th game of the first set, but McCain broke right back, then held serve to close out the set. He also broke Fibak in the 11th game of the second set, then served out for the match.

K-State volleyball gets blue-chipper

Leesa Gross of Decatur, Ind., has signed a national letter-of-intent to play volleyball at K-State next fall, Wildcat coach Scott Nelson announced.

The 5-foot-9 outside attacker is a two-time all-conference and all-area (Fort Wayne) selection who captained the Bellmont High School team as a senior.

Gross was one of the select few to participate in the Junior National Volleyball Championships in Knoxville, Tenn., last summer, and was chosen to participate again this summer in California.

The three-sport star also was an all-conference basketball player and set the conference and sectional 100-meter hurdles record (14.5) as a state finalist last year.

"I'm very pleased to have attracted an athlete of her abilities to our program," Nelson said. "She simply is an outstanding athlete and a blue chip volleyball player. She will make an immediate impact with our team and in the Big Eight Conference. From the onset of our recruiting, she was one of our top choices. Signing Leesa solidifies our recruiting into a good year."

Gross is an honor roll student who plans to major in physical therapy at K-State and is the second Wildcat volleyball signee, joining Helen Bundy of Manhattan.

Sports nomad finds niche on track squad; decathlon requires variety of athletic skills

By STUART McKINNON
Collegian Reporter

Jim Thorpe, Bob Mathias, Rafer Johnson, Bill Toomey and Bruce Jenner. The list of American decathlon champions is long and prestigious.

It's an event where the competitors usually are only heard from every four years in the Olympic games.

Competition in the decathlon lasts two days — five events each day — pitting athletes against each other in tests of speed, strength and mental concentration.

Blair Benedict, senior in business administration, is representing K-State this year in this grueling event.

Benedict would seem perfectly suited for the decathlon because he is somewhat of a sports nomad.

Since transferring from Butler County Community College, he has seen action as a defensive back on the football team, played junior varsity basketball and has been a high jumper for the track team.

The 10 events in the decathlon can be broken down into the running events and the technical events.

Running events include the 100-, 400- and 1,500-meter runs. The technical events are the pole vault, jumps, throws and hurdles.

"THE TWO MOST difficult events to teach are the hurdles and the pole vault," K-State track coach Steve Miller said. "When training a decathlete you usually want to find someone who can already do these things.

"Benedict has some hurdling background but is just now learning to vault," Miller said.

While most track athletes are able to work on their specialty events, Benedict must work on 10.

"You can't stick everything in on one day," Miller said. "It's best to pick two events and work on those for a day. The secret is to work on your strengths heavily and modestly on other events."

While most people are still reading the paper over a bowl of Fruit Loops, Benedict starts his day with a workout in the swimming pool in Ahearn Field House.

THE SESSION IS monitored by sprint coach Jan Samuelson, who said, "The pool workouts are one way of building endurance. By fastening a ski vest to the athlete, we can also get a sprint workout through running in the pool. The purpose of the pool workout is to take the strain off the legs."

Benedict trains in this manner before classes start at least four times a week.

"Blair works very hard as many mornings as he can and is definitely making progress," Samuelson added.

Benedict's schedule takes different paths after his pool session depending on what day it is.

On Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, his day is filled with scholastic obligations. On Tuesdays and Thursdays, however, without morning classes, it is off to the track for either a sprint workout or hurdle practice. This lasts until approximately 10 a.m.

AFTER BENEDICT works on the track, he shifts his attention to the field events until noon.

"Assistant coach Greg Kraft is in charge of the field events, and along with Doug Lytle (pole vaulter) and Andy Gillam (shot putter), they teach me the proper techniques in the field events," Benedict said.

When afternoon classes are out of the way, he can be found five days a week in the weight room.

"I mainly work on squats, power cleans and the bench press. I do a lot of repetitions to keep my strength up and my weight down," Benedict said.

The day is topped off when he joins the sprinters for their 6 p.m. workout. If he happens to miss one of these workouts, he makes it up by running a few miles at night.

WITH COACHES having training sessions at different times and locations, Benedict usually has a hectic day.

"Blair must accommodate himself to our schedule," Miller said.

Even though Benedict is going through extensive training, he is still a student. He is juggling 19 hours this semester, which he needs to graduate.

"Most of my weekends are spent studying, and I try to get as much done as I can late at night," he said.

When he finally does hit the sack, he does so with the knowledge that he must get up and do the same things tomorrow.

"It's easy to lose your motivation, because gains are hard to see," Benedict said. "A national qualifying mark keeps me going."

HIS FIRST ATTEMPT at qualifying, in the Kansas Relays, was not a good experience, according to Miller. The athlete scored just over 6,000 points, placing 10th in a field of 12. Benedict's final chance will come at the Texas Relays in Austin May 21. He needs 7,450 points to qualify.

"Qualifying is definitely within my reach. The high 6,000s is the most I've ever scored, but I've never worked this hard before," Benedict said.

Benedict isn't the only one who thinks he has the potential to qualify.

"Blair is strong in nine out of 10 events, and he's working on the pole vault," Miller said. "His strength is in the jumps."

This is backed up by a personal best of 6-feet-9 in the high jump while attending Butler County.

"He concentrates well and is a competitive kid. He's going to do a great job for us. Blair definitely has the potential to qualify for the nationals," Miller said.

"His three chances come on consecutive weekends, therefore it would probably be unwise to compete in all three. Realistically, he has two chances to qualify," Miller added.

But if hard work is any indicator, his call to the national meet will be answered.

Contract pleases Elway, Broncos; some less happy

DENVER (AP) — If the predictions for him are even close to being realized, John Elway, obtained by the Denver Broncos in a whirlwind deal with the Baltimore Colts, will put an abrupt end to one of the sorriest quarterbacking legacies in the National Football League.

Elway, who threatened to play professional baseball rather than join the Colts after being the No. 1 selection in last week's NFL draft, signed a series of five one-year contracts with the Broncos Monday. Terms weren't disclosed, but Elway is believed to have signed for more than $1 million a year, which could make him the highest paid player in the NFL history.

To get the highly touted Stanford quarterback, the Broncos gave up second-string quarterback Mark Herrmann, offensive guard Chris Hinton — the fourth player taken in the draft — and their No. 1 draft choice in 1984.

What the Colts got for Elway was considerably less than the three No. 1 draft choices, or other combinations, offered by the San Diego Chargers and the Los Angeles Raiders prior to the draft. But it was better than nothing, which is what the Colts would have been left with if Elway had made good on his threat to play baseball.

DENVER COACH DAN REEVES, while obviously pleased with the deal, defended the Colts. "Trades are usually good for both teams or they wouldn't be made," he said. "We're certainly happy with our part of the deal, and I'm sure Baltimore is happy with what they got."

After the trade was announced Monday

Texas town of Marfa gains instant notoriety from Derby racehorse

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Late Saturday afternoon the town of Marfa, Texas, will switch its attention from doggies and cow ponies to a 3-year-old thoroughbred racehorse named Marfa.

At 4:38 p.m., Marfa, the colt, will race in the Kentucky Derby.

"Yes, there's definitely interest in the horse," said Bobby Martinez, 36, the $1-a-year mayor of the West Texas ranch town from which the colt gets his name.

"It's created a lot of national publicity," he said during a telephone interview Wednesday from Marfa, where he owns a food store. "Because of it, a lot of people are coming in for the celebration and we're full," he said, referring to the packed local motels and hotel.

The town and its 2,500 residents will begin a centennial celebration Friday. On Saturday, the big event will be a rodeo for ranch hands, but the competition will be halted so folks can watch the Derby on television.

"They're going to set up TV screens," said Shelley Gilbert-Allison, a staffer at the weekly Big Bend Sentinel newspaper. "Interest is very high. We've gotten calls from everywhere...from Los Angeles, Cincinnati, Lexington."

A CROWD in the neighborhood of 125,000 is expected at Churchill Downs Saturday to watch Marfa run in the Derby.

The colt was named by two of his three owners, Bob French, who owns a large ranch near Marfa, and Barry Beal, a Midland oilman. They also have named other horses after Texas towns.

Terlingua, a daughter of Secretariat who won important 2-year-old filly stakes in 1978, was named for a town about 100 miles southeast of Marfa, which is the site of an annual national chili contest.

Ft. Davis, another 3-year-old colt, trained by Wayne Lukas, who trains and also co-owns Marfa, is named for a town about 25 miles from Marfa.

Women's shot putter works on technique; Suggs' potential threatens K-State records

By STUART McKINNON
Collegian Reporter

"Pinkie is like a time bomb ready to explode."

It takes only a glance at the Wildcat shot putter to see what head track coach Steve Miller is talking about.

Pinkie Suggs, freshman in art therapy, already holds the K-State women's outdoor shot put record with a heave of 50-2, but Miller said he believes Suggs hasn't scratched the surface of her potential.

"Pinkie's kind of an enigma," Miller said. "She has great physical talent, all the physical tools.

"Being big isn't the most important thing in throwing the woman's shot, though," he said. "The woman's shot isn't that heavy — therefore, the most important things are speed and technique.

"Pinkie has excellent speed, and, as her technique improves, she'll become more explosive."

As a Manhattan High School trackster, Suggs was the dominant force in the women's shot, holding the Kansas all-time best high school throw of 49-3½. Since entering collegiate competition, she has had to make an adjustment to throwing against women of equal or better talent.

"IT'S BEEN HARD since I was used to being No. 1," Suggs said. "I've had to compete against women who throw better than I do. I now realize I have to work my way up like I did in high school.

"I just have to relax and not worry about what everyone else is doing," she added. "In the outdoor season I was watching the others, worrying about how far they were throwing and not concentrating on myself."

She has also had the added pressure of being an ex-Manhattan High star performing in her hometown.

"I considered attending Nebraska, Georgia or Texas, but decided to stay at home," Suggs said.

The pressure from family and friends was difficult for Suggs, especially when she was trying to adjust to some new circumstances.

"MY GRANDMOTHER and a lot of people were asking my mother how I was doing and why they hadn't read anything about me. I was kind of out of it for awhile with my injury and new technique," she said.

The injury, which she sustained in a pick-up football game, has healed and Suggs is becoming comfortable with her change of technique.

"At first it was tough to learn how to spin, but my glide wasn't that great," Suggs said. "I like the spin method better because it's simpler and will bring me better performance later on."

Her training regimen consists of lifting weights twice a week while working on her spin technique with assistant coach Greg Kraft.

Combine a school-record throw as a freshman with an abundance of untapped potential, and it seems as if the sky's the limit for Suggs.

"I WASN'T HAPPY with my performance in the beginning. As I was coming off my injury it was slow going," Suggs said. "I'm more at ease now and am trying to work myself back up."

Even with the past downfall, Suggs knows from past experience that she has the ability to go far.

Elway

night, however, several hitches developed at the Baltimore end of the deal.

Reportedly, Colts' owner Robert Irsay swung the deal on his own without consulting other team officials, including Coach Frank Kush. And Hinton's lawyer, Dick Lynn, said in Chicago that his client was "crushed" and would entertain an offer from the Chicago Blitz of the United State Football League, whom he had spurned last March, but Hinton told ABC radio sports that he has no particular objection to Baltimore.

"It's a 50-50 chance," he said. "May the best man win."

HOWEVER, THE TRADE was not contingent upon acceptance by Hinton or Herrmann accepting it. A Broncos spokesman said the deal stands regardless of whether those players refuse to report to Baltimore or join the USFL.

Meanwhile, Al Davis, managing general partner of the Raiders, charged that the league had intervened to block his team from making a deal to trade for Elway and hinted that the Raiders would take legal action. NFL officials denied Davis' allegation.

But everyone was smiling in Denver. "I'm glad to be playing in the NFL and glad to be playing for the Broncos," said Elway.

"We're delighted," said Broncos owner Edgar F. Kaiser Jr., who engineered the deal, making Irsay a tentative offer on draft day and following it up Monday. Within hours, the deal was consummated and Elway had signed a Denver contract.

Kentucky Derby horses vary in experience

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Current Hope and Play Fellow are two Kentucky Derby contenders who have approached the race within different time frames.

Current Hope has not raced since winning the 1 1/8-mile Florida Derby at Hialeah April 2. He arrived at Churchill Downs last week.

Play Fellow won the 1 1/8-mile Grass Stakes April 28 at Keeneland and didn't make the 90-minute trip from that Lexington track to Churchill Downs until Wednesday.

Neither trainer — Roger Laurin, with Current Hope, and Harvey Vanier, with Play Fellow — says they have any second-thoughts approach to the 1 1/4-mile Derby.

It didn't take the 59-year-old Vanier long to get caught in Derby Week excitement.

While Play Fellow was out for a gallop, another horse got loose on the track.

"He (Play Fellow) survived that. He didn't get shook up. I'm the one who almost came apart at the seams."

This is Vanier's second trip to the Derby. He saddled Admiral's Shield to finish sixth when Dust Commander beat 16 other 3-year-olds in 1970.

A full field of 20 is shaping up for Saturday's 109th running of the $250,000-added Derby. Other contenders include Sunny's Halo, Slew O' Gold, the Wayne Lukas-trained entry of Marfa, Balboa Native and Total Departure and the Woody Stephens-trained pair of Caveat and Chumming.

Laurin has not been to Churchill Downs since 1964, when he sent out Miss Cavendish to finish second in the Kentucky Oaks, the day before Northern Dancer won the Derby.

He watched on television when his father, Lucien, won the Derby with Riva Ridge in 1972 and Secretariat in 1973.

The only father-son combinations to win Derbies were Ben A. Jones (1938-41-48-49-52) and Jimmy Jones (1957-58) and James Rowe Sr. (1881, 1915) and James Jr. (1931).

Asked about the five-week layoff between the Derby and the Flamingo, which was Current Hope's third win in five starts this year, Laurin said:

"It was simply because his race in the Flamingo was four weeks from his race in Florida Derby and that worked out pretty well."

Current Hope, who won the Hutcheson and finished second in a division of the Fountain of Youth, finished seventh in the Florida Derby.

Current Hope, a son of Little Current who won the Preakness and Belmont Stakes after finishing fifth in the 1974 Derby, will be ridden by 17-year-old Alexis Solis. Jean Cruguet, who at 37 became the oldest jockey to win the Derby with Seattle Slew in 1977, will ride Play Fellow.

Play Fellow also raced in the Flamingo, finishing 10th. However, the colt was beaten only by a total of 3 1/4 lengths by Current Hope.

Suggs

"I think I'm the only one in the Big Eight who has thrown over 50 feet," she said.

Suggs' roots with the shot go back before her junior high days when her brother brought one home.

"I couldn't run or anything else so I tried the shot put," she said.

Like most every other quality track athlete, she thinks of the Olympic Games, but knows she must improve before she has a chance of making the U.S. team.

"THERE ARE a lot of women who can throw the shot better than I can right now," Suggs said. "The Olympics is a long way off and I'd really have to get down on it to go.

"I'll find out at nationals what it's all about."

Miller agreed that Suggs wants to do well, but said she needs more intensity before she can reach her potential.

He summarized Suggs' potential by saying, "She's the type that could jump from a 50-foot throw to a 56-foot throw in one day."

Marfa

Marfa's interest in Marfa began "about the Christmas holidays when a local fellow saw him race in California," said Martinez. Marfa finished second in a six-furlong maiden race at Santa Anita Jan. 1.

MARFA REALLY began following Marfa when the gray colt won the Jim Beam Spiral Stakes at Latonia and the Santa Anita Derby April 16.

In his last start, the Blue Grass Stakes April 28 at Keeneland, Marfa interfered with two horses and was disqualified from second to fourth.

But he remains a strong Derby contender and probably will be the favorite as part of a Lukas-trained entry with Balboa Native and Total Departure.

But he can't win it alone. Two million children have asthma and the American Lung Association wants to help each one of them fight against the sneaky Mr. I.M. Asthma. They've developed a fun, self-help kit called SUPERSTUFF that can help children with asthma feel better about themselves as well as learn to help control their asthma.

If you know a child with asthma and want to help, you can get a copy of SUPERSTUFF by contacting your local American Lung Association or writing to P.O. Box 596S, New York, NY 10001. A $10 contribution is suggested to cover printing and distribution.

Haitian ruler faces dissident party in June election

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — The short, pudgy man, stuffed this hot evening into a formal suit with orange ruffled shirt and bowtie, interrupted himself and glanced nervously out the window each time car headlights approached.

In between, Silvio Claude explained how he became Haiti's leading dissident whose political party will challenge President-for-Life Jean-Claude Duvalier's government in elections next month.

"I am not an intellectual. I am not a rich man," he says. "But I am the only one who is willing to raise his voice."

In four years, he has been jailed five times, beaten twice, tortured once, convicted twice of political crimes and exiled once. He has been free only 14 months in that time.

Last January, he escaped from house arrest, stunning a police force known for often brutal efficiency. The veteran police chief, whose men were under orders to shoot Claude if he tried to escape, was fired.

Claude doesn't strike an imposing figure or deliver inspiring speeches. But by surviving under a 26-year-old regime that has killed, imprisoned or exiled hundreds of its opponents, he has become a leader.

Now, after three months of rumors that he had fled the country or was hiding out in a foreign embassy, Claude is cautiously resuming his battle against the Duvalier government. Staying with friends and switching residences often, Claude has let his presence be known.

THE GOVERNMENT HASN'T reacted, leading him to believe that officials hope that he will stay quiet if they leave him alone.

But interviewed at a private residence here recently, Claude said his tiny Christian Democratic Party will field a candidate for mayor and possibly other offices when municipal elections are held this summer in Port-au-Prince and its suburbs, home of more than one-third of the country's estimated 5.5 million people.

"Jean-Claude has said these elections are honest and free," Claude explained. "We have thought about that and we're going to test him."

After years of pressure by the United States, which has given Haiti $245 million in 10 years, to move his dictatorial rule toward democracy, Duvalier last year pledged "free and honest" elections on the municipal level. They would be the first such elections since his father, Francois "Papa Doc" Duvalier, was elected in 1957.

THE FIRST ELECTIONS were on April 10 in the rural northwest where there were few issues and no opposition candidates. Six other of Haiti's nine "departments" will hold municipal elections on May 15. The Portau-Prince elections will take place sometime in June.

"Things are bad here," Claude explained, referring to water shortages and frequent power failures. "We feel that the people here are ready. If they have the opportunity, they will vote for us."

He knows he won't be allowed to run, and doubted he could make radio speeches or actively campaign.

"Our major worry is what will happen to our candidate. We want to make sure the one running for mayor is not persecuted," he said.

He suspects the government will let his party participate rather than undercut its own claims of instituting "democracy."

HIS PARTY REPRESENTS a vague, mixed bag of ideologies. He says it is both anti-Communist and anti-dictatorial. Mainly, it's against the status quo.

"The people want change," he said. "That I can take for granted."

Claude knows the risks of his return to activism.

The 49-year-old former accountant says Haitian justice sometimes requires little evidence for prosecution. He was first convicted in 1980 of plotting arson and of character assassination by reprinting in his party newspaper a Venezuelan poster featuring deposed dictators and a question mark over Duvalier.

He and 21 others — virtually the entire membership of his party — were sentenced to 15 years hard labor, but the conviction was overturned by appeals court. Last August, they were re-tried and re-convicted.

DUVALIER COMMUTED the sentence Sept. 23, 1982, but Claude was kept under house arrest, until his escape.

Claude stressed in the interview that he wants to work within the system to "establish an open dialogue.

"I don't want any violence," he said. "If we wanted violence, believe me, we could have violence."

Pierre Jeannot, executive secretary of the Haitian Human Rights Commission, a Duvalier-appointed organization which is monitoring the elections, said the Christian Democrats could participate, but added, "There may be some consternation about Silvio Claude if he becomes involved."

Illegal Guatemalan refugees get sanctuary in Concordia

CONCORDIA (AP) — Six Guatemalan refugees in the United States illegally are staying at Manna House of Prayer of the Sisters of St. Joseph.

The refugees, an extended family including two children, are the first at the Manna House since the Sisters of St. Joseph declared it a sanctuary last month.

"The U.S. Justice Department says they are here illegally," Sister Beatrice Zapata said Wednesday. "We believe they have a right to be here, to be free from repression."

The refugees fled Guatemala out of fear of political repression, Sister Zapata said.

"They are the victims of repression," Sister Zapata said. "Their village was wiped out and they have seen many people tortured and killed."

Sister Zapata said a law enacted in 1980 allows people who must leave their country for political reasons to enter the United States and apply for political status. Congress approved the law drafted in the United Nations.

The Justice Department has not established a policy for Central American refugees in the United States, said Ron Sanders, regional adminstrator of the U.S. Immigration Service in Kansas City.

"The attorney general is certainly aware of the problem and they are reviewing the situation," said Sanders, whose agency is a division of the Justice Department. "They are reviewing the question of what to do about these churches who are providing sanctuary to refugees."

Sanders said there are "several thousand" refugees from Central America in the United States.

Sister Zapata said the refugees at the Manna House entered the United States from Mexico and were brought to Kansas along an "underground railroad" from the Arizona desert. The Religious Task Force in Chicago coordinates movement of the refugees through various safe houses like the Manna House, Sister Zapata said.

The refugees will remain at the Manna House until they can be relocated somewhere in the United States, Sister Zapata said.

The two children among the refugees suffer from malaria, but their condition is improving with treatment by a Concordia doctor, Sister Zapata said.

Subliminal sex sells films

Horror shows attract campus viewers

From COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

It's no coincidence college campuses are entangled each year — particularly over the summer and fall months — in reels of celluloid slime people, killer tomatoes, crab monsters, sentient mushrooms and giant leeches.

This season, colleges across the country are again throwing horror movie festivals, fright night extravaganzas and other celebrations of blood and gore to draw students to campus box offices.

They're successful because they're sexual, one professor claimed.

Students go to the horror movies mostly because they offer a wealth of subliminal sexual lessons, at least according to University of Florida English Professor Jim Twitchell.

"Part of the reason people go to see this stuff is because they enjoy the thrill of being frightened.

"But part of it is because they are learning huge quantities of information about how they are capable of sexuality and reproduction," Twitchell said.

Twitchell, who teaches a horror film course and has written two books on the subject, became fascinated with this "creepy underculture" while studying the role of vampires in literature.

TWITCHELL SAID he now knows why horror tales such as Frankenstein, Dracula and the story of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde seem to have an ongoing fascination for young movie-goers.

"If you take a look at the stories that get told over and over again," he theorized, "you realize that people are learning some information from the buried part of the story."

Moreover, he said, "the sexual information in many of these myths has to do with family relationships."

In Dracula, for example, a dashing older man — who Twitchell contended is a father image — enthralls and mutilates a lusting young woman.

"What's really going on is a (subliminal) violation of the incest taboo," he said. "That's why it's a horror story."

IN "FRANKENSTEIN," the audience is led to believe Dr. Frankenstein's bride-to-be, Elizabeth, may well be his sister.

"It is more than passingly curious and important that the Frankenstein monster should attack Elizabeth, a girl whose relationship with the protagonist is that of a sister," Twitchell noted. "To allow this event to occur would be incestuous."

Twitchell contended that, although horror tales' authors never intended to convey such sexual messages and warnings, they are nonetheless important forces for transmitting social mores and unspoken taboos.

"THE AUDIENCE doesn't realize that's what the movie or play is saying, but when you look at these stories you realize that's what the myth carries in it: all these coded bits of prohibition that the culture definitely needs to transfer to keep balance."

"That's interesting," mused Elena Shapiro, a representative of Films Inc., a major distributor of films for college campuses. "Come to think of it, horror films do all have a sexual angle."

The popular "Halloween," she noted, is laced with teen-age sex scenes and frequently the Halloween killer attacks during, or just after, foreplay.

"There is definitely a connection" between the subliminal sexual messages and the popularity of horror films.

WHATEVER THE REASON, though, "next to comedy and sex films, horror movies are our biggest drawers," she said.

The coming months, through the summer and past Halloween, are the most popular time for horror flicks on campus.

Schools across the country are begging for the "Friday the Thirteenth" trilogy, se said, while movies like "Halloween" and the "Omen" series and the classic "Rocky Horror Picture Show" are also heavily requested by campus program boards.

The University of Michigan-Dearborn, Harper College and about a dozen others will be holding "World's Worst" festivals of horror films, Shapiro said.

Hollywood, though, isn't planning to release many new horror flicks the rest of this year, according to major film producers.

IN JUNE, Warner Brothers will come out with a new Stephen King film, called "Cujo," about a dog who goes insane and embarks on a killing rampage, a company spokeswoman said.

"That's the only major one I know about," added a spokeswoman with Millenium Productions, another major producer of horror films. "We have five pics in post-production and not one of them is a horror film."

Producers apparently believe the public has had its fill of horror and so-called "stalk and slash" films for now, she added.

Twitchell agreed the era of the "slash 'em up" movies, which he believes were a negative backlash to the women's movement, is passing.

"They are very conservative movies and they tell you 'Be sexual and you run the risk of meeting this Mr. Hyde.'"

Despite the demand for such films on the campus circuit, he added, "they are very simple-minded and stupid" movies.

Students' finance project halted by banking officials

EASTON, Mass. (AP) — A group of youngsters and a teacher who started a bank at school in Easton, Mass., were learning a lot about high finance when the state decided to teach them a lesson about the law — by shutting them down.

"The law is the law," said Robert Ledbetter, a state deputy banking commissioner, whose examiners closed the bank at Easton Middle School for not having a charter, among other things.

The bank was started as a learning tool, teaching the children the rudiments of finance by loaning out money for lunches and pocket cash.

Borrowers were charged 8 percent interest a week with a maximum credit line of $1.50, twice the price of a day's hot lunch.

But "the school has gone well beyond the (banking) statute," Ledbetter said. "Making loans at 8 percent runs about 400 percent per annum and that's in clear violation of the law. The bank was in violation."

Ann Hoyle, director of the school's program for high ability learners, known as HAL, said Wednesday she got the idea for the bank in January and the last thing on her mind was getting in trouble with the state.

In fact, trying to touch every base was her downfall.

Before opening the bank, Hoyle said she went to the president of the North Easton Savings Bank for advice and got formal approval for the project from her school board.

It was the bank visit that led to the end of her students' short careers at the HAL-Middle School Cooperative Bank.

"We were operating daily until the bank examiners came to the North Easton Savings Bank to audit the records" and found a copy of her proposal, she said.

"They asked if they could come and visit the students," she said. "I was very pleased and thought it was a once-in-a-lifetime experience."

She said all the 11-and 12-year-old student bankers — the chairman of the board, the president, the loan officers, the tellers and the bill collectors — came to the meeting with the examiners.

"After they told us what the responsibilities of a bank examiner were, they pulled out a yellow-lined pad and cited our violations," she said.

They included operating without a charter, which would cost $200,000, charging too much interest, collecting loans without a license and using the word "bank" in the title of a business without state authorization.

Hoyle said the examiners, Harold Norton and Richard Kelly, were polite toward the children, but insisted that the bank be closed.

"I asked for permission to collect our outstanding loans and we had a going-out-of-business sale," she said.

Sales of book increase as governor alleges libel

PIERRE, S.D. (AP) — Bookstore owners across South Dakota say sales of a book critical of Gov. Bill Janklow have risen sharply since he started telephoning dealers to ask that they pull the volume from their shelves.

"Since all the publicity, the book really started selling," said Wayland Mitchell, president of Dakota News in Sioux Falls, which sells books wholesale to book stores. "It never started selling until it hit the news."

Several stores serviced by Dakota News have sold out of "In The Spirit of Crazy Horse," and Mitchell has ordered another 100 copies, he said Wednesday. He previously distributed 75 copies.

Janklow made his appeal Friday, complaining that the book libeled him by unfairly accusing him of a rape. Since then sales have risen at all five Waldenbooks outlets in South Dakota, said Brad Elliot, a spokesman for the chain in Stamford, Conn. Elliot said two of the stores each have ordered an extra 50 copies.

"I think the whole reason for the success of the sales is the campaign by the governor," Elliot said. "Last week seemed to be the strongest week ever on the sales."

The Waldenbooks store in Pierre had sold only two copies in two months, but has sold 16 since Friday, manager Micki O'Day said.

Janklow said he would attempt to call every book store operator in South Dakota to persuade them to stop selling "In the Spirit of Crazy Horse," which he contends is libelous.

The book runs 628 pages and retails for $20.95. It was written by Peter Matthiessen and published by Viking Press.

Janklow filed a $10 million libel lawsuit against Newsweek magazine in February after it published an article containing the rape allegation. Janklow has refused to say if he will file a libel suit against Matthiessen or Viking.

Viking lawyer Martin Garbus said he will meet in Pierre with Janklow on May 14 to discuss the complaint.

"We said we wanted some kind of proof that the allegations in this book are untrue," Garbus said in a telephone interview from New York. "Until such time as we believe the book's inaccurate, this book's staying in the distribution channel."

"We feel we have presented both sides of the discussion, and the First Amendment protects our discussion of issues," Garbus said.

The allegation was made at a 1974 news conference by Jancita Eagle Deer Sheldahl, who said Janklow raped her on the Rosebud Sioux Indian Reservation in 1967. The woman later died in a car accident.

Janklow, then running for state attorney general, said it was a political attack and a "complete fabrication." He won the election.

'Sense of justice' motivates feminist

Approach lacks anger, bitterness

By NANCY MALIR
Collegian Reporter

Feminists are stereotyped as being bitter, tough, angry.

But this one sailed into the classroom wearing an earthy smile of excited anticipation underneath a brown felt hat.

In one swift and fluid movement, Sandra Coyner dropped her notes on the desk, swept off the hat, placed her hands on her hips and eagerly surveyed her Introduction to Women's Studies class.

No cynical, angry, jilted woman here. She looked fun — full of life.

As Director of Women's Studies, Coyner's duties are three-fold: teaching women's studies courses, doing research in women's studies and coordinating the women's studies program.

Sandra Coyner

"I've always been a feminist. When I was in the fifth grade, I was a feminist. My lifelong passion has always been justice.

"When I was in the fifth grade, my best friend's father would put down girls in general to tease me. I knew he was wrong because it was unjust," she said.

Coyner unhesitatingly credited her parents for instilling in her the strong sense of justice.

"My parents were committed to justice for poor people. They both had a strong religious commitment," she said. "As a child, I was always impressed with the stories of Jesus reaching out to the oppressed. My parents were fighters. I learned from them the proper role was to make things better."

THOUGH COYNER received degrees in history and social science from Rice University in Houston, Bryn Mawr (Pa.) and Rutgers University during the 1960s, she never felt men were intimidated by her — nor did she feel that scholarship had anything to do with feminism.

"It didn't dawn on me till I was teaching that feminism was related to scholarship."

It was after her first teaching job at Syracuse University in 1971 that she became aware of how her career could apply to the study of women.

"I taught history and social science. During that first year, some of my students came to me and said I didn't teach anything about women in my courses. 'Isn't this a sexual bias?' they asked."

SO COYNER WENT to the head of the Syracuse history department and told him that the study of women was overlooked.

"He told me if I didn't teach a course about women, no one would, since I was the only person in the department even interested in it," she said.

When the next year rolled around, Coyner found herself teaching a women's history course. Her teaching load eventually came to include two history and two social science courses dealing with women.

Coyner spoke vividly of the alienation she felt during her six years at Syracuse.

"I was the first woman history faculty member at Syracuse and the only one for a while. The men in the department were distant, and I didn't know how the academic profession worked. I didn't know it was common to ask other professors to read your writings.

"THE MEN WOULD go out and drink beers and they never invited me. They virtually never spoke to me."

But Coyner did receive support from women in other departments and later at Syracuse, Coyner founded a group called the Association of Faculty Women.

"This group was important to us because it was the only professional support we got."

After leaving Syracuse in 1977, Coyner did a brief stint at Ohio State University for six months before coming to K-State to assume the position of Women's Studies director in 1978.

A common misconception about feminists is that they're men-haters, but Coyner destroyed that stereotype by having many dates and male friends as far back as high school. And from these friends, she learned that guys weren't taking girls as seriously as they should.

"THEY'D TALK ABOUT girls like a football game. They'd talk about scoring and punting, and I'd tell them 'girls are people too.' What allowed me to do that was a commitment to justice," she explained. "I grew up knowing it shouldn't be the way it was, and I knew it didn't have to be that way because I had so many friends who were boys, who I interacted differently with from the role playing on dates."

For the most part, Coyner doesn't believe she intimidated boys in high school, but she did recall one particular episode in which the stereotyped sex role got in the way of a potential friendship.

"There was one boy who was almost as smart as I was. I decided I wanted to go out with him, so I flirted," she laughed. "My male friends told me to cool it. They told me if I didn't always beat him out on the math tests, he'd be interested in me. By the time I got to college, that had changed. There were a lot more men who found intelligence attractive. Intelligence is now an asset."

COYNER MARRIED in 1967, but the marriage ended seven years later.

"Marriage gave me some new experiences. One professor wouldn't put me on the job market because he said I'd just follow my husband's job."

Eventually, Coyner was placed on the job market, and while she was employed at Syracuse, her husband commuted by airplane, 250 miles, to New York City twice a week to teach in a university there.

"We tried to find jobs close to each other. He accepted the idea of feminism and was interested in an egalitarian relationship," she said.

But the marriage dissolved because, in Coyner's words, they married too young.

As for her views on feminism, Coyner said she sees no contradiction between being a feminist and not being angry or bitter.

"ONE CAN HAVE A profound commitment to justice and equality without being bitter, especially if you grew up privileged,

Reagan's college savings plan now 'dead issue'

From COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

President Ronald Reagan's proposed Education Savings Account (ESA) — introduced to encourage parents to save for their children's college education and initially hailed as a good idea by college lobbyists — apparently is now a dead issue.

The proposal is "going nowhere, and has no chance of ever going anywhere" in Congress now, according to higher education lobbyists in Washington.

The plan would have allowed people to put money away in a special college account and spare them taxes on the earnings from the money set aside for college.

"There's simply no real enthusiastic support for it among higher education groups," reported Eric Wentworth, vice president of the Council for the Advancement and Support of Education.

"Most people feel it offers little incentive, and that if it passed it could be used later by the Reagan administration to justify further reductions in financial aid," he added.

REAGAN PROPOSED the ESA in early February as part of his 1983-84 higher education budget. At that time, rumors around Washington had it that the ESA would essentially be a carbon copy of the popular Individual Retirement Account, which allows people to write off contributions to the account and earn tax-free interest on the money.

As it stands now, the administration's ESA would provide tax-free earnings, but no tax deductions for the amount contributed.

"The plan just isn't acceptable to most of the higher education community because, although the interest earned on the savings would not be taxed, the contributions would be fully taxed. That's just not enough incentive for most people," said Dennis Martin with the National Association of Student Financial Aid Advisors.

REAGAN'S ESA WOULD allow annual contributions of up to $1,000 per child, and the money could be used only toward tuition, room and board.

"But accounts could only be opened for children for use between the ages of 18 and 26," explained Charlie Saunders, legislative director for the American Council on Education (ACE).

"And the program cuts off at families whose income is over $50,000 to $60,000 a year," he added.

"That not only cuts off the people who would most likely be able to save, but it eliminates many older students who are going back to school. The range of people it would benefit is very narrow."

Thus, most higher education officials are waiting for a hybrid ESA that would offer more incentives for parents, and students themselves, especially since, once the program is in place, it could be used as a bargaining chip to reduce traditional financial aid programs.

"WE AND THE REST of the higher education community support the general concept of the ESA, as long as it in no way is construed as replacing other forms of financial aid," said Kathy Ozer, legislative director for the U.S. Student Association (USSA), a Washington-based student lobbying group.

"We might even see a viable proposal get somewhere in the next few years," Saunders speculated. "But not this fiscal year."

Coyner

as I have. To see oppression without being oppressed by it is a tremendous motivator. Because I am privileged, I have an increased responsibility to change the system so it doesn't batter more women.

"I've decided that I support radical feminist goals with moderate feminist means," she added.

Coyner reflected a positive attitude about men.

"I know a lot of non-threatened men out there — the older I've gotten the more I've met. I haven't known many men threatened by feminist energy. And I like feminist men a great deal. For a man to care for feminism, he has to care about justice because he is not acting out of self interest to be a feminist."

COYNER TALKED candidly about herself.

"If life as a feminist hadn't come along, I would have been very unhappy, because I wouldn't have been a housewife. The world has come closer to my way of thinking. That's a rare and wonderful experience — a surprise."

According to Coyner, some believe that to become a feminist, one must go through a state of anger.

"While I understand that anger, I don't think I've been angry. I've been hurt tough, many times. The bottom line for me is hurt."

Looking back, Coyner admitted, "I'm glad to have survived youth — sex roles are hard to figure out. I learned so much about myself between 25 and 30 and between 30 and 35. I learned how the world really is. I learned a lot by working and having more responsibility and experiencing changes and growth.

"WHAT'S FUN IS to look back on how much everything has changed and how much I've learned. That's what I like about birthdays — looking back and seeing how much I've changed."

Coyner is getting married again during finals week. "Minimal" is how she described her wedding plans.

"I just want to get married — I don't think of it as a wedding. For me, marriage is a public statement of a private fact. I don't believe in marriage, but being married is a truer statement of our relatioship than not being married, but neither statement is accurate.

"Marriage is a societal institution that troubles me a great deal because it's an unwritten contract with unknown provisions.

"We're two separate people who want to be together. We're not giving up our identity. We're a team, not a merged blob. And I don't fear becoming dependent, because I know I never will."

In addition to the sense of justice she attributed to her parents, Coyner said she learned a lot from her teachers, especially in college.

"I learned a lot about academic quality and I believe that I see no conflict between academic quality and my feminist goals — they go together. I don't think anyone can effectively make changes in socity without quality thinking."

PERSONAL

BART BENDER—:Thanks for the memorable semester. Let's get together in August! The '76 Orange Arrow. (152)

SUSAN JACKSON: To a sweet girl, Happy Birthday. Your Secret Admirer. (152)

THE ELIZABETH who sublet apartment #6 for summer—Please call Suzanne, 539-4608. (152)

BRUCE COOK: Last Saturday's afternoon party was fun but that night was indescribable with you. Let's do it again. "Cujy!" Love and Revolving Planets (You and me), Planet K. (152)

JULIE MOUSE Shilling: It's been a great, almost four months. Movies, Union dates at 3:45, burnt shirts and everything we've done together. Good luck on your finals. Nine more days and I've finally graduated, it couldn't have ended on a better note. Love you, Casey. (152)

MOM—THE year is coming to an end and I'm going to miss you. What am I going to do when I need help with the "Bare"? Or anything else for that matter? I hope you come to see me sometime and I'm sure I'll be up there (by one road or another) to see you. Think I can get there without getting another ticket in Florence, KS? I can't wait 'til next year. You can bet it will never be dull with me as a roomie! Take care and don't miss "Colorado" too much! Love you, your daughter. (152)

PAM—THE semester is almost over. We had a hard start but I'm really glad we stuck it out together. Thanks roomie, Trisha. (152)

C—IT'S been great living with you! Remember all the good times—I'm really going to miss you! Our friendship means a lot to me! Good luck in all you do. Love and friends always, S. (152)

KAY—I hope you know how lonely it's going to be over here on T. Road without you. You'll never know just how special a friend you are. Let's have a blast this summer! Lisa-Marie. (152)

K-STATERS, need a car? Well this here is Becky D. down at Eureka Car Sales and we've got a deal for you. (152)

CLUELESS, THANKS for the fun times this semester. Are you sure you learned about sleeping double in a single bed in sex class? Swell Guy. (152)

BECKY D.—(Alias Mrs. H.): Just wanted to let you know we'll miss you for the rest of the days of our lives. Will Marie shoot Liz or will Neil's lips get in the way? Who will get the wool, Liz or Marie? Too many obscene phone calls 'cause Eugene to toss his bow tie aside? Love me Tony (David?) Happy Day to you! From your friend Liz, Chandler, Cortney, Dimera, Craig (Curks). (152)

STAN—YOU are graduating! Congratulations! Looking forward to a great life after school. Love, Sandy. (152)

ATTENTION: AREBA roommates—Karen-Aron and Stacy-Acy: We want to wish you two drunk lushes a great summer. And just remember, no N.B.'s. Maybe you didn't hear us?! No N.B.'s until next spring break. Love, the Areba's down the hall, Nancilena and Sharlena. P.S.—We are truly sorry about our N.B.'s last weekend, but we know good one's when we see them, Ha Ha!! (152)

ED G.—Here it is, I didn't forget. I'm going to miss counting the beers (or was it 7-Up?) and especially my check-up calls. Good luck with your basketball endeavors. Keep in touch. (152)

PAUL—THE friendship we have is definitely one-of-a-kind. Thank you for being there! The last four years have been among the best, sharing the smiles with you as a friend. You're special! Good luck on your finals. I'm proud of you! "Cotton Top." (152)

KRAIG AND Tom—(Our foxy dates)—Surprise flowers, Schnapps and Scotch, Cinderella at Hardee's, and falling out of the car—The evening grand, ending too soon, All passing out, missing the shining moon. Saturday we did awake to know that our dates were the best to take! Love Pam and Lisa. (152)

GOODNOW FIVE—I leave K-State with lots of fond memories—You are 98 of them. Good luck always, Jill. (152)

TED B.—Thanks for making my last year so fun. We've been through our share of good times and bad—but looking forward to this summer together. Love you, Annie. (152)

K.S.—You are so very special. There will never be another quite like you! The times we have spent together will always be cherished and never forgotten. We must continue to take one day at a time and our feelings will continue to grow and get stronger. We will always have something not many have. It's alright! Love, M.B. (152)

K.K.S.—What a year it has been! From finger nail polish to the Derby Scoping Party! Congrats on your new job and good luck on your finals. See ya next year! Your Roomie. (152)

DANA'S JOHN: Thanks for the great last nine months, you've been the greatest. Guess how many more days of singlehood? Clue: 352 days. I love you. (152)

MIFFY, THANKS for always being there when I need a friend to talk to. Have a great summer and take care. Buffy. P.S. Get psyched for next year! (152)

JANA, ALICIA, Thanks for your friendship, geography notes, and the Crush Party date. Have a super summer and see you next yer. Cathy. (152)

JUL, ONLY 8 plus months and look how far we've come. Thanks for all the special times. Looking forward to the future. ILY Bradley. (152)

B.K.—I just wanted to tell you I always have and always will. Good luck on finals and will see you for that great dinner this summer. Your "Let's Play Dallas" Buddy. (152)

PAT D.—Thanks for a fun semester in Industrial Relations. See ya in Denver?! Barb. (152)

PAM LONG—Can't believe it's been nine years since I stepped on Kansas soil from the Rockies of Montana. May 14 is the end of a long road for us, but it's really only a beginning. Although we haven't seen much of each other lately, our friendship has remained with me always. Best of luck in all your tomorrows! Love, Barb. (152)

FORD HALL Staff: You made everyone on campus know what I've always known—you're the best hall at K.S.U. Thanks, Amy. (152)

H.N.A.: You've made the last four months the best time of my life. I've learned a lot and I hope to learn even more. From the introduction of Generics, to rugby photos, to twilight zoning in the Toyota, to the trauma of finals—It has been a great experience. You're in my heart always. Y.O.T.P. (152)

M.A.R.: Thanks for keeping my sanity. You will be missed more than you know. Love you! A.L.F. (152)

TO MY G·Phi Family; Jean, Sandi and Stacy — Good luck on finals. Have a super summer and don't forget to write! LMF (152)

BONES—BEEN boatin' lately? (152)

JANE WESTHUES, My hyperactive friend. This is only the beginning of more memories for us. Be prepared to come down and see me. Your friendship has kept me sane! Thanks for always being there. Joan. (152)

PATTY C.—It's only a true friend who would type an eight page "Tax" paper. Thanks for always going that extra mile. J.H. (152)

KKG'S KAREN and Jill: This last semester has been very special because of you both. I will always remember it no matter what happens next fall. Always know that you have never given me any reasons to leave, only reasons to return. L and L Frances. (152)

BERT AND Monte: Thanks for making my first year at KSU a great one. You are super Big Bro's. It's guys like you who make TKE great! Luv, Frances. (152)

CARL HERMRECK and Jeff Pearce—Behave next year when your loving mother is gone! Love ya, Kelli. (152)

JENNIFER ZANG and Gina Ross—Remember the Waldo Way! I'll miss you!! Love, Mom. (152)

MARY SHANNAN: Thanks for all the good times this year, but most of all for just being a friend. Don't forget to come visit us next year (maybe around dinner time?) and have a great summer. Love, K.D. (152)

AXO—SUE B.—Good luck on finals. Hope to see more of you in the future. Marc. (152)

ANN—HERE'S to friends forever, forever friends. Subeys, M and C, 606 Mariatt, Padre, Mom's, Our Gang, "Party? Me? Nah!", receptionists, "I'm not here!" APO, and keeping count-up to 10? "I never!" But whatever the future holds in store, always remember that I care, even if I don't always show it. I know you'll succeed at everything you do. Good luck! Love—Alana. (152)

DEB—CONGRATS on making Pridette. You'll be super! Love, your dot, Nanette. (152)

BETH SANDERS—Way to go! I can't believe I had to wake you up for our final. You're a riot! Nanette. (152)

SPINDLE-BUTT: Here's the Personal you've been hunting for. Sorry it's late! Congratulations on vet school! Is H. still Randy? If so, E.M. ILY—S. Baboo. (152)

DAVE KOHL—Good luck on finals and have a great summer. Love, Mom. (152)

LISA CRABTREE—You're a sweet dot. Good luck on finals. I'm gonna miss you. Love, Kim. (152)

SUSIE RENO: Did you really drink all those Washburn Phi Deltas under the table? Here's to the last two years of studying and classes together, long walks and talks, and tons of fun. I can't really say what's been the most fun: baseball or football players, Sig Ep or Pike Parties. You and your family have made me feel like one of the family. I can never be as good of a friend to you as you have been to me. You've been the stronger half of me—most of all you've been my best friend. This is not to say good-bye, but just to let you know how much I think of you. Love, Kim. (152)

BAD WOMAN Thomson (alias Sue Dafart)—Before you leave for the land of stimulation bumps, Gulf stations, and dinosaurs, just want to say I won't forget KU game, elevator rides, or the past two years together. Take it easy on San Antonio, honey! LAB. (152)

BEAN—I'LL miss you more than you'll ever know, but we'll always be close at heart. Remember—you're only a phone call away. I love you tons, Carla. P.S. Happy 20 months!! (152)

DON: FINALLY this goodbye leaves us no more choices. I'll never forget you or our special times together. No words could express what you have meant to me. Remember that "time can't erase the love we've shared . . ." I love you, Paige. (152)

P.S., AMOS, Niter—The semester is close to being over and we all made it (even through the wild midnight runs to JC for tacos!) I have had alot of fun and wouldn't trade this last semester for anything. I hope you all have a super fun summer. Love ya. (152)

TAMBO—HAPPY birthday to a very special friend. Let's make this day one we'll never forget!! Love you, Carla. (152)

JULE W.—Goodbye and good luck in the next couple years. I'm gonna miss you. Alan. (152)

SONDRA—WELL it's been one hell of a year! Through thick and thin, roadtrips, Kite's, Dark Horse, football parties, formal?, functions, but we're almost through. Good luck on finals and the next couple of years. I'm gonna miss ya tons. Love ya, Goose. (152)

CARLA M.—Good luck on your finals. Have a nice summer. I will miss you tons. Love you, Bean. (152)

DETROIT TEDDY Bear: First Fantasy Island, then phone calls, pizza and a movie, Walmart, trading cars, the zoo and prairie dogs, formals, Grand Island and horses, Omaha, Lincoln and the long way home, gin and the championship of the entire free world. Thanx for making me laugh the last two months. The Scot. (152)

BOYD 2 Vator, RA—Thanks for your sincerity, laughs, openness, and yummy goodies, very much appreciated! Good luck. The Girls in 221. (152)

LAURA, DEANNA: Thanks for being such terrific roommates. Remember all our wild and crazy times, especially formal. Take care and see you this summer in K.C. Cathy. (152)

DWIGHT M.E. Schwarz—Thanks for a very special year. Love, Tammy. P.S. I thought your middle name was Lance. (152)

GOODNOW 2—Thanks for the good times, it's been a real blast. Can't wait til next year. Cruiser. (152)

JIM, HANK and 1982-1983 Football Training Staff—Thanks alot for your help—it's been a good year! Matt, Randy, and Jeff. (152)

BECKEREKERY—THANKS, can't wait 'til August! Jefereferee. (152)

SAL—FROM roadtrips to KU to ladies' nights and "better cheddars," this year has been "just super" with you as a roomie. I will definitely miss you next year! Luv ya, Nancy. (152)

EGGBERT—JUST thought I'd let you know this past semester has been lots of fun! Have a great summer in Texas. C.D. (152)

JOAN S.—It's been quite a year. Have a fantastic summer and jam on those finals . . . hope to see ya up here next fall!! Love ya, Bob. (152)

LINDA FUNK—Once in a lifetime, a person meets someone like you!!! I love you for who you are . . . and what you are . . . Linda Funk . . . and my best friend!!! You may be leaving, but a part of you will be with me forever! Good Luck in the future! Mary Ann. (152)

CHAR—CONGRATULATIONS, your first personal in the last Collegian. Thanks for the ski trip, golfing, drinks and a fun two years on RP. Cut your hair and get a real job. Good Luck. Jean. (152)

SHELLY HARTLEY, Thanks for the most enjoyable six months. We have done a lot of super things together. Hope your summer is a Super One. I'll be thinking of you! Love ya, Dave. (152)

RASTUS AND Garbonzo Bean Queen—From our first years on 2B West to graduation—here's to the celebration and "one for the road!" Love—Honeychild. (152)

SCHLOSKI SISTERS—Graduation's here, so Yellowstone bound a Biologist will be and who knows what that Chem E will see! Congratulations! Schloski love—RLB. (152)

DAYTIME FRIEND—Phineas, Maynard, and John—Peter just wanted me to say "Human, I've grown fond of you." —The Kid. (152)

AXO JEANNIE—This year has gone by fast—you've made motherhood a blast!!! Times ahead will be fun—cause with me you're #1! Luv ya—Sue B. (152)

BOYD HALL Floozies: Thanks for an excellent year. Have a super summer, I'll miss ya all.—Love, Kelli (Floozie pledge trainer) P.S. Get ready for the floozie reunion next fall. (152)

DEAR J.R.—I love you! No one is going to take you away from me. Thanks for everything! See ya in Bermuda! Love always, Chrissy. (152)

JEAN, JOLYNN and Kathy—You're the greatest and it's been a terrific year. I'll miss all of you—no one can replace the times we've had. Best of luck to each of ya. Roomie #4. (152)

HI SHERRI, let me know if you ever need a friend (or husband). I'll be there either way. Ich liebe dich, Tim. (152)

SURPRISE MOM this Mother's Day with bedding plants. On sale Thursday afternoon at the lower greenhouse, north of Justin. (152)

WANTED: BEAUTIFUL female test subjects for the study of wave motion on waterbeds. For more information call 776-9175. (Experience not required.) (152)

CHRISSY—WHAT can I say? How about C.C. and R.I.! I think they know. This summer will be tough. I'll miss you, but I'll be right there. Formal was great! How much time do you have? We'll see! Love, J.R. (152)

GLENN WELLS—Thanx for tons of fun times—from camping in a tornado to stealing fishbowls—(I never?!). Good luck on finals! Hope 'ya use the highway from Hutch to K.C. this summer! Love, Joan. (152)

DRU, SMELLEY—Thanks for being such special friends. I'll miss you tons this summer. Wat. (152)

ROSIE—ALIAS Happy Tan Mamma, Hope you have a happy birthday. See you on the shores of Montezuma. Bowman. (152)

LAURIE GREEN—Here's your last personal of your college "career." I know London will be great, but don't forget: Vista and Swannie's runs, jiffin', Sports Fan-attic rendezvous, shopping trips, Remington Steele, blowing off homework for a drink, or two, or three . . ., room and sign, Mardi Gras, nachos, Sunday morning "reports," amusing "novelty" notes, basketball benchwarming, Wabash, formal, and the Beach Boys at Mel's, just to name a few! Here's to more fun this summer! Your buddy, Sharon. (152)

1983-1984 ARH Exec: It's been great so far! Don't forget to mark July 10 and 11 on your calendar for two days of planning and partying! Good luck on finals! Sharon "M" (152)

GEORGE—HERE'S to my favorite sweetie who's made my college years the best. I'm a lucky gal—can't wait for what's ahead. LYBAB. Muffy. (152)

CONGRATULATIONS, LAURA Tracey: You've almost made it and so have we. Once you're gone there'll be nobody to make us stop studying, eat Grandma's Cookies with, give rug burns to, or take pictures in the bathroom. Before you graduate please leave us a copy of your book "How to pick up SSS's." Love, Lora and Becky. (152)

RANDY—CONGRATULATIONS on your graduation and on your new job! Even though I'll miss you, I know we'll have nothing to worry about. I'm looking forward to the day I will join you in Sun City. I love you, Cece. (152)

CHRISTEL SOS—Couldn't let you leave K-State without your very own personal. When you're soaking up those rays remember the good ole days in Kansas—purple shoes, flying beds, squeaking pigs, "no one would really care if you left," trekking to Swannies in the snow, choke, oh solo mingo, MTV and Hall and Oates! All I ask is a date with Tom when I come visit. Love, Bill. P.S. Konk Up or Konk Out. (152)

G-PHI Tammy—I need the survival kit after the bungle in the jungle. Have a great summer. Take care of the cat! Thanks, Guy. (152)

CUTIE—LUCKY me to have met you, it must be the chemistry. Here's hoping for many semesters like this one, MS. (152)

82, 90—there's no telling what you can do, you're so smart! So quit your beliyaching and start gunning or else a moratorium will be issued and we know we don't want that! (152)

TRIXIE: ONE year has come and gone but Trixie and Ruddles will still party on. Colorado (with the sausage) and parties we'll never forget, over worthless men we'll never again fret. And look out for a summer of party and games cause McCain Lane will never be the same. But seriously, your friendship has meant a great deal to me and I hope it will last forever—Ruddles. (152)

PAM F.—Hey kiddo it's been a fun year and I'm glad I've had this chance to know you. Best of luck with finals and don't worry, you haven't seen the last of me! Mom. (152)

HEY COUSIN Don D.—Finally! You're graduating from vet school—I knew you always belonged with the animals! Seriously, I'm going to miss you. You're a very special person, a very special cousin. Best of luck in Arizona—come back soon. Love, Amy. (152)

SHARON BAHR—alias Bahr Frack. We have "rolled with the changes" for four fantastic years, "been on the road again," and "partied like it's 1999. "What am I going to do when you're gone? These have been the best years of my life, spent with the best friend of my life. You will always be in my thoughts and always a part of my heart. Never say goodbye. Forever friends, Amy. (152)

LISA—I couldn't have asked for a better pledge mom. This year has been great and I will miss you so much next year. But we still have summer and roadtrips. ILY, Nancy. (152)

LIZ—IT'S been a wonderful semester for me since I met you. Spring Break in Texas, all those trips to the races, going out to Tuttle every day to practice, and having to put up with Don, too! And don't forget the formal—it was great! Even though you'll be gone next year, watch out for a certain couple of guys at Washburn—they gave me fits for thirteen years. I'll be thinking of you every day. Love, Jim. (152)

LORI PHILLIPS—Best of luck in the future. You will be missed more than you'll ever know! From a sister who can't tie bows, who will miss your clothes, and who will miss your shoulder to lean on! I love ya, Loribug! Me. (152)

DENISE, CINDY, and Mary: From taking pictures after the Station for the bulletin board to mattresses on the counter. It has been a great semester. Good luck on finals! One more year for Mary and Denise, do you think you'll make it? Cindy—congratulations. Good luck in the future. Thanks for being such great roomies!—"The Kid" (152)

SISTERS OF the Sphinx—Have a great summer and here's to a fantastic fall—Love, The Men of Delta Sigma Phi. (152)

TO OUR Fun-Loving Floozies Dates: Brian, Mark, Jon, Jack, Buff, Brian, Pat, Tom, Bruce—The formal is over, hangovers are hung. The memories are great, and you guys sure were fun. From formal dinner to party pics of your knees we sure picked our floozy dates to a tee. Thanks for making our last big bash an unforgettable smash. Love, Boyd Floozies. (152)

AMY FAUBION: Thanks for being the best roommate ever. Love you bunches, L.T. (152)

MARY—IT hasn't been the greatest of semesters, but I've enjoyed my time spent with you. I hope you do your very best on finals. Good luck. With love, John. (152)

WANDANOTA: HAPPY Twenty . . . It has been a pleasure for you, I mean for us (Je, Je!) to know you. During the last two years you have been more than a simple friend, our dearest "little" sister. We have taken time to build a great friendship that won't change a bit now that you are going to Minnesota. You take care of youself. Love you and ever will; Cuco and Pepo. (152)

BINGE GANG: NKP, JDH and SID—Here's to DQ, Ghetto Cruisin', E.T., Oskaloda, too queer, sorry if, sock hops, Amaretto Colada's, drinking Vodka, Hays, AM, "The Big Doberman Chase," Stood-up blind dates, cruising clucks in Colorado, Salina shopping spree's, Monday madness, eating, eating more and of course eating again! Too much champagne in Heaven, pink tennies, pledge sneak and so many more too numerous to mention. Thanx for all the memories and always being there to make this year super. You guys mean alot to me and I'll miss you this summer—We'll have to take a lot of roadtrips! Good luck on finals! Love ya, Di. (152)

Book Buy-Back

Here are some answers to often asked questions:

Question: How does the Union Bookstore determine how much your books are worth when you sell them back?

Answer: If the Bookstore has notification from the instructor that the books are to be re-adopted for use the next semester, and if the Bookstore does not already have a sufficient stock on hand, then you will be offered 60% of the publisher's current list price.

For example: if a book sells for $10 new and it meets the requirements noted above, the book would be bought from you for $6.

If the Bookstore has not received notice that the book will be used again, or if it already has a sufficient stock on hand, the book would be worth the current wholesale price as indicated by one of the nation's largest jobbers of used textbooks.

If you have any questions about the price being paid for a textbook, the buyer will be happy to answer any questions which you may have regarding the price paid.

Question: Is 60% the usual price paid for textbooks around the country?

Answer: Definitely not. Most stores in the United States pay only 50% for books being used again. The Union Bookstore is one of the few stores which pays 60%. And remember, we pay cash. You don't have to take your money out in trade.

Question: What about paperbacks? Does the 60% policy apply to them too?

Answer: Yes. The Union Bookstore does not penalize you on paperbacks. If they are being used again, and if the bookstore needs them, you will receive 60% of the publisher's list price.

Question: If the publisher's price has gone up since I bought my books, will I receive the benefit of that price increase?

Answer: Yes. For instance, If you bought your book for $9 and the publisher's list price is now $10, you will get $6, not $5.40.

We Will Buy Books:

May 3rd through 6th	8:15 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.
May 7th	10:15 a.m. to 3:45 p.m.
May 9th through 11th	8:15 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.
May 12th	8:15 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Uncle Duane announces plan for TV debut

By PRES E. DENT
Acker Editor

In a move to squelch earlier rumors, President Duane Acker announced Wednesday his plans to join Uncle Ed Muscarie on KSHB-TV's "All Night Live" program.

When asked what was the determining factor in choosing "All Night Live" over the "Whizzo the Clown" show to make his TV debut, Acker said it is because he's always liked cantaloupe and wanted to start a garden in his own back yard.

Ever since he was 10 years old, Acker said he's had a strange desire to appear in front of a television camera with his right hand raised, palm in.

"I've always had this strange desire to appear in front of a television camera with my left hand raised, palm in," Acker said. "It started out as a good way to check and see if there was any dirt in my fingernails and it kind of caught on. Pretty soon all the kids in the neighborhood started walking around with their hands raised, palm in. It was then that I knew that I was destined for more than just selling snowballs to eskimos."

Acker said his background in the University should provide "real good" material for the program, and he plans weekly features such as "Zap the Legislator" where electrodes will be hooked up to a guest from the Kansas Legislature and viewers can increase the intensity of the voltage by using a toll-free number flashed at the bottom of the screen. The voltage can be decreased by either calling from a pay phone located along San Andres Fault, or saying the secret word to a CIA agent in Nicaragua.

In an exclusive interview from the basement of Nichols Gymnasium, Acker said he would request no immediate revisions in the program with the exception of replacing Cafeinna the cat with Gene Cross, vice president for University Facilities.

"In our opinion, Mr. Cross is much more suited to curl up on a pillow than any stupid cat, and besides, his (Cross') claws are

Senate: Nix the buttons, beanie the students

In an unprecedented move, Student Senate on Wednesday rescinded the much-heralded "Button Bill" and replaced it with the "Beanie Weanie and Knickers too" law.

Senators said they were sick and tired of wearing the stupid buttons around and standing out in the crowd. They also said it was not their duty to identify themselves, it was the regular student slobs' responsibility to make themselves available to student senators.

In a resolution sponsored by John Kohler, ninth-year senior in pre-professional preppy identification, all students who do not consider themselves "Student Senators" will be required to wear knickers and a beanie, with propeller, on days of senate meetings.

Kohler said the purpose of the resolution is to avoid poking holes in his polo shirts when he wore his button and to let regular people know what it was like to feel humiliated.

The bill requires that all knickers be "wild plaid, striking slightly below the knee cap."

Beanies must be worn "above the eyebrows, so as to not hide the true identification of the individual. Propellers must not be larger that 7-feet wide and may not be used to buzz people in the Union Stateroom."

In a press conference in the basement of Nichols Gymnasium, Jerry Katlin, student body president, said the bill will "keep the students out of student government," and hold them up for ridicule before Student Senate and their country.

Anyone caught not wearing the ghastly uniforms on senate days will be locked up in a room with Kohler and will be forced to listen to him defend the Solomon Amendment for the entire day.

"It's for the good of those with lower intelligence to find out what it's like to be governed by those more fortunate than themselves," Kohler said. "Besides I was asked by the state organization to introduce such legislation so we can cop a feel of the

Regents approve 1984 tuition hike

By MICHELE SAUER
Government and Agriculture Editor

At its May 20 meeting, the Kansas Board of Regents approved a 9.8 increase in tuition charges for all regents schools effective for fiscal year 1985.

Tuition increases were recommended by the Fiscal Affairs Committee and the approved changes will become effective with the fall 1984 semester. Charges for part-time students will be adjusted proportionately.

The tuition increases will affect all regularly enrolled students in the regents system and are expected to generate $6.2 million in additional tuition income in fiscal year 1985, if the level of enrollment and student mix stays fairly constant.

Resident undergraduate students at K-State, the University of Kansas and Wichita State University will pay $450 for a semester's tuition, which is a $40 increase. Non-resident undergraduates will pay $90 more, for a semester tuition's charge of $1,290.

Graduate students at the three universities face increases of $80 per semester for residents and $215 per semester for non-residents. Graduate tuition will be $490 and $1,415, for residents and non-residents, respectively.

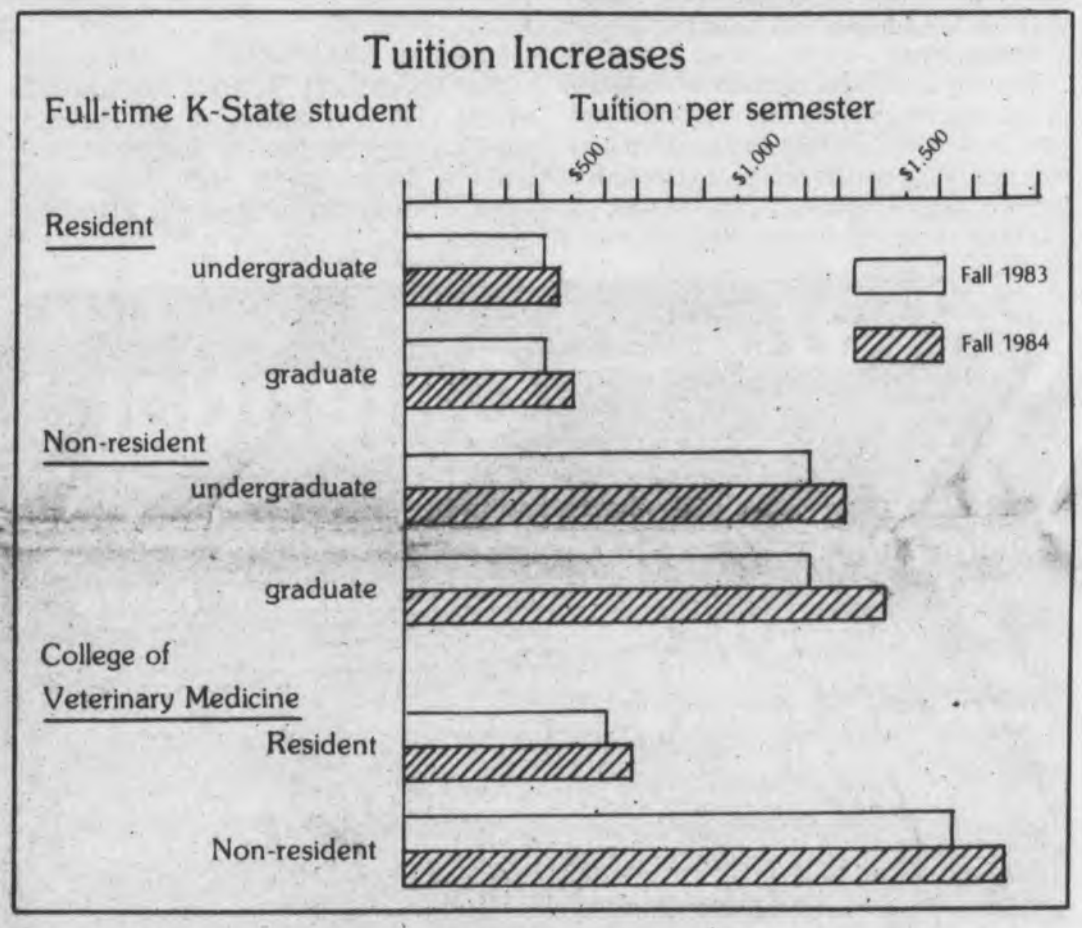
K-State veterinary medicine students will pay increases of $60 and $160, for residents and non-residents respectively. Tuition for the College of Veterinary Medicine will be $660 per semester for residents and $1,780 per semester for non-residents.

The regents also approved two new fees for K-State students. A $3 student services support fee to finance the renovation of Holton Hall and a $10 academic services fee to finance library acquisitions and computer needs were approved. The amendments to the fee schedule will be effective with the 1983 fall semester.

The Holton Hall renovation fee will be $3 during a regular semester for residents and non-residents. Students enrolled in six or fewer credit hours and staff will pay 20 cents per credit hour.

The new academic services fee will be $10 during a regular semester, and summer school students will pay $1.

Another amendment to the fee schedule increased the $1.95 special fee charged for summer school enrollment to $2.25. In addition, 20 cents will be allocated to the student services support fee.



In another matter, the regents approved an agreement for the Manhattan to provide fire protection for K-State. The regents also approved lighting for KSU Stadium.

The tuition fee hike for the smaller regents schools was not as large as that proposed for K-State.

Resident undergraduate students at Emporia State University, Pittsburg State University and Fort Hays State University will pay $33 more each semester with a tuition charge of $355. Graduate students at these universities will pay $395 after an increase of $73.

Kansas Technical Institute had the smallest tuition increase with $25 for residents and $46 for non-residents. Tuition at KTI will be $245 and $705.

KU Medical Center students face the largest tuition increase. Residents will be paying $2,415 per semester which includes a $219 increase. Non-residents will be paying $4,815, which includes a $423 increase.

Maranatha violates bylaws; UAB withholds registration

By SEAN REILLY
Staff Writer

Acting on the recommendation of the Student Organization Grievance Committee (SOGC), the University Activities Board voted unanimously May 11 to deny Maranatha Christian Assembly registration for the 1983-84 academic year.

MCA is appealing the decision, said Mike Godwin, MCA elder and campus minister.

During a closed hearing May 3, the committee found MCA guilty of violating three UAB bylaws.

MCA was found guilty of dishonesty in publicity and of failing to file notices about fund-raisers four weeks in advance.

In a grievance committee report, events cited as "lacking honesty in publicity" were the "Chariots of Fire" ticket sales, Greeks for God and the Rice Broocks "Change Your Life" seminar.

The report stated, "none of the advertisements for these events included the name of the sponsoring organization as is required (by the UAB bylaws)."

MCA filed a notice with UAB no more than "three or four days prior to the events," the report noted.

Godwin said, "I have gone through the records and found other groups that failed to file four weeks prior to their fund-raiser."

Godwin also said that when pamphlets for events were distributed, a MCA handout was inserted in them, clearly showing the association between MCA and the event.

The third charge MCA was found guilty of concerned a survey entitled "Forerunner" conducted at registration.

"No evidence was provided that the survey was a research tool, but rather a way to gather names and addresses for future contact with students," the report said.

The report also said the present faculty adviser to MCA is not aware "of all the organization activities, financial status of MCA, and does not provide continuity to the organization."

When Gary Johnson, associate professor of electrical engineering, was asked about his role as faculty adviser to MCA, he replied, "I have spent time trying to educate you people about MCA and you don't seem to understand. I don't care to answer any questions."

UAB also voted to develop a group to keep abreast of religious organizations on campus in the fall of 1983.

Although MCA will not be allowed to register on campus for the upcoming academic year, it can still pay to use the All-Faiths Chapel or the Union as an off-campus organization.

MCA filed an appeal with the Student Government Services office on the grounds "that the punishment is unjustly harsh," Godwin said. No date for the hearing has been set.

"We were willing to correct them (the problems) if someone showed us," Godwin said.

Charges against MCA began March 25 when Bob Tedford, senior in agricultural engineering, filed a formal written complaint with UAB.

Soviet leader, Arab officials try to mediate PLO dispute

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Soviet leader Yuri V. Andropov and top officials of two Arab states are trying to mediate a dispute in the PLO and quash a mutiny that threatens Yasser Arafat's leadership. A PLO official said Sunday the leaders realized they "cannot afford to lose" Arafat.

The mediation effort by the Soviet Union, Algeria and Saudi Arabia came on the eve of the first anniversary of Israel's invasion of Lebanon, where tens of thousands of Israeli, Syrian and Palestinian troops remain entrenched across a tense cease-fire line.

Israelis marked the event with memorials for some of the nearly 500 soldiers killed in the war, while Lebanese leftist groups planned a strike and a day of mourning for Monday, exactly one year after the Israeli army entered Lebanon.

Police and radio reports said there were scattered disturbances on the West Bank and in the northern Galilee region Sunday, which also was the anniversary of the start of the 1967 six-day war.

In an effort to defuse a PLO mutiny that began May 7, Andropov sent letters to Syrian President Hafez Assad and Arafat that were delivered over the weekend by Soviet Ambassador Vladimir Youkhine.

Diplomatic sources said Andropov told Assad he was "unhappy" about the split within the PLO and asked Syria to help end the crisis. The Palestinian news agency WAFA said Andropov told Arafat he had full Soviet backing.

Help for Arafat also came from President Chadli Ben Jedid of Algeria and Saudi Arabian Crown Prince Abdullah Bin Abdul Aziz, who flew to the Syrian capital of Damacus in hopes of mediating the dispute between the PLO chairman and dissident officers within his Fatah group, the largest PLO faction.

The Saudi prince came from a meeting in Tripoli with Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy, who has backed the rebels. Arafat supporters have blamed both Libya and Syria for instigating the rebellion.

"Arafat has become a symbol they cannot afford to lose," said one PLO official in Damascus, who would not permit his name to be used. "The collapse of his leadership would mean the rise of a radical PLO that would make a peaceful settlement to the Middle East conflict impossible and war more likely."

On Saturday, the mutiny erupted into open warfare as pro-Arafat groups clashed in eastern Lebanon with rebels led by PLO Col. Saeed Mousa. Lebanese police said seven were killed and 18 wounded in an hour-long battle with artillery and mortars, but the PLO said the report was exaggerated.

Committee chooses new attorney

Dianne Urban, former assistant Riley County attorney, has been selected by the Students' Attorney Search Committee to fill the position of students' attorney. Urban, a 1982 graduate of Washburn Law School, was selected from 22 applicants primarily on the basis of experience, according to Sally Routson, coordinator of student activities.

Experience in the areas of consumer and landlord-tenant relations was considered of special importance by the committee. Committee members were Diane Murphy, chairwoman of the Personnel Selections Committee and junior in radio and television; Jerry Katlin, student body president and senior in management; Lori Leu, Student Senate chairwoman and junior in interdisciplinary social sciences; Pat Bosco, assistant to the vice president for Student Affairs; and Routson.

As the students' attorney, Urban will function primarily in an advisory capacity. Although Urban may be consulted on any legal matter, she is not authorized to represent a student in litigation unless the case in question is determined to be in the general interest of the entire student body, according to a memo from Kathy Lungren, former students' attorney.

With the exception of this guideline, the activities of the office are, for the most part, determined by the attorney, Routson said.

Urban may advise students, make referrals for students in need of a private attorney, negotiate on behalf of a client as long as possible future litigation is not prejudiced, draft documents such as wills, contracts, and powers of attorney, and provide preventive legal education.

Urban said she is looking forward to exploring the educational aspect of the position, speaking to groups and organizations and expanding the public's legal knowledge. However, she will not do this at the expense of the individual student, she said.

"I think I'll enjoy working with people the age of people at K-State," she said.

Urban will assume her new post today and her office will officially open Wednesday. Students in need of legal help should call the Student Government Services office for an appointment, Routson said.

The services of the students' attorney are available free of charge to any currently enrolled K-State student. Urban will receive a yearly salary of $17,500 which was allocated by Student Senate.

Chicago power feud out of City Hall, in court

CHICAGO — The leader of a majority bloc of aldermen opposing Mayor Harold Washington and his allies says plans for further negotiations to end their feud over City Council control have been scrapped for now.

"Why should there be (talks)?" asked Edward Vrdolyak, who leads the 29-member faction that has battled Washington since he became Chicago's first black mayor in April.

"You know where we stand," Vrdolyak said Saturday, referring to his group's longstanding contention that Washington and his backers must accept a council reorganization made at a May 2 meeting.

Washington said the meeting and plan, which virtually shut his allies out of power, were illegal.

The reorganization was upheld by the Cook County Circuit Court, but Washington appealed to the Illinois Appellate Court, which is expected to rule Friday.

Seven negotiating sessions have been held in a search for a settlement of the dispute.

Mother, son, daughter reunite after 21 years

BATON ROUGE, La. — A brother and sister who were abandoned in a coin laundry 21 years ago have been reunited with their mother.

"I feel like this is just a chance to be able to stop some hurt that's been going on for a few years," David Matson, 23, said at the reunion at Metropolitan Airport on Friday.

Matson, of Baton Rouge, and his sister, Deborah Hale, a Houston police officer, were reunited earlier in April and set out to find their mother, who left them in diapers in a coin laundry in Baton Rouge on April 4, 1962. He was 2 and his sister was 11 months old.

Their mother, Ruby Lamb, came to the reunion and walked slowly to the daughter she had not seen since 1962. She hugged her tightly, tears streaming down her face.

"I'm just going to enjoy them while they're here," Mrs. Lamb said.

She said she didn't want to talk about the morning she abandoned the children. She and her husband, Clyde Ray Lamb, were unemployed and out of money at the time.

"I don't feel it was my place to judge her," Matson said of his mother's actions. "I don't care how bad a mistake someone makes, everybody's human."

Seniors gifts 'par-fect' for the golfing principal

APPLETON, Wis. — Principal Emmett Hoks has a lot of little reminders of the Appleton High School West Class of '83 to help him make his way through life's hazards and traps this summer.

Hoks, an avid golfer, was given a golf ball by each of the 400 graduating seniors as they received their diplomas and traditional handshakes at commencement exercises Thursday.

Hoks thinks the gesture was par for the class.

"It was a clever idea, just like the class," he said.

"I don't know whose idea it was," Hoks said. "I asked several students, but no one seemed to know. It was one of those ideas that just got started and spread."

Although he has no proof, Hoks links the golf ball giveaway to some seniors on the state championship girls' golf team.

Hoks said he had heard rumors about the plan, so he took a box to graduation to hold the balls.

She sells sunshine by the sunny seaside

OCEANSIDE, Calif. — At least one thing in California is free — the sunshine — but Sandy Zuckerman would like to change that.

The 42-year-old entrepreneur thinks people will pay $3.25 for a can with a label offering "guaranteed fresh" California Sunshine.

"I bought five cans of London Fog when I was in London, a bottle of Boise Air in Idaho and three Pet Rocks," she says. "Then I thought, what do we have here that we can sell?"

Mrs. Zuckerman, a part-time counselor and secretary for the Police Department's victim-aid program, as well as a reserve officer, explains with tongue firmly in cheek that she has "solar traps" set out to capture sunlight.

From the traps the "sunlight" goes into cans with a label that recommends the container be opened outdoors at high noon. "Guarantee is void if opened at night or in a dark area," it says.

The cans have only been on sale at four local stores for about a week and she says she hasn't the courage to check on how many have been purchased.

"I'll give it a couple weeks," she said. "I think it will hit big when the tourist season starts."

Weather

We've got some untypically cool Kansas weather for today. Partly cloudy with a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms, with clearing skies tonight and Tuesday. Highs around 70, lows around 50. Light northerly winds will prevail. Enjoy.

Collegian editorial policy

(Editor's note: This policy is taken from the editorial policy statement published in the June 7, 1982, Collegian. It has been amended to meet the needs of the University community.)

The Kansas State Collegian is the official newspaper of the student body of Kansas State University and as such holds a responsibility to this institution, the University community and to the people of the state of Kansas. In meeting this responsibility, the Collegian endeavors always to give an accurate and complete report of campus events and others that affect University community.

The Collegian will present news fairly and objectively, and will restrict all editorial comment to the editorial pages.

The Collegian is not, and never will be, a personal voice for the editor, his staff, the journalism faculty, the Board of Student Publications or the University administration. Neither will it not be a vehicle for transmitting specific views.

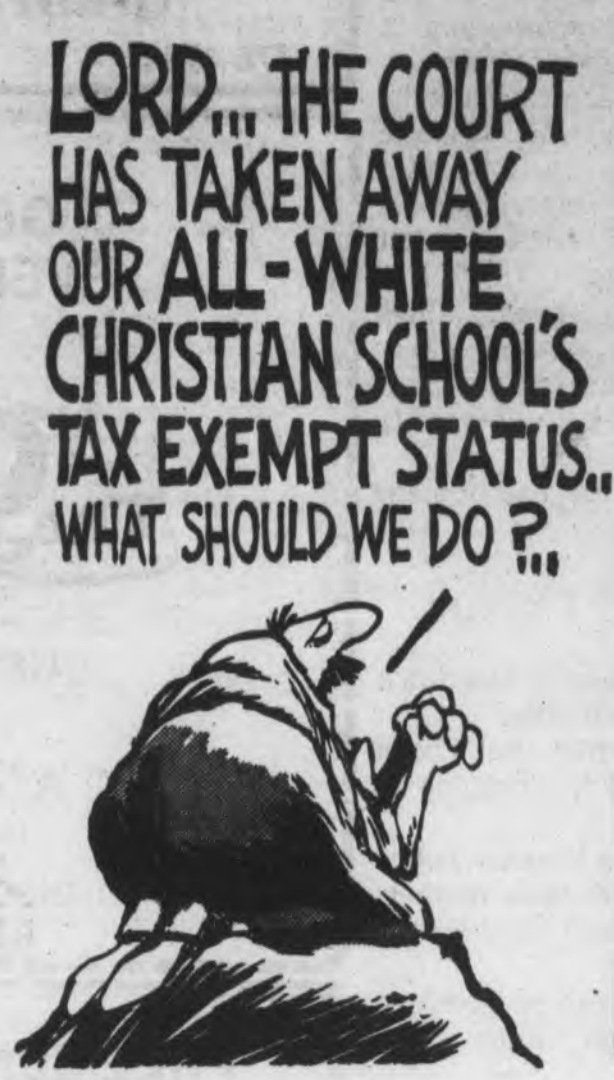
The Collegian will endeavor to be a friend and constructive critic of the University and to hold its good trust. The Collegian conceives freedom of the press to be a right of every student at Kansas State University. The right to read the truth is inherent and is not a special privilege of the editor or his staff to publish what he desires.

All matters of record are published on the basis of its news value. Reader interest is the primary consideration in the choice and display of news and editorial material. Names of sources will be used unless the nature of the story dictates otherwise. The use of confidential sources will ultimately be left up to the discretion of the editor.

The Collegian reserves the right to edit all advertisement copy and reject any advertisement which it deems objectionable.

Columns and editorials are to be interpreted as the sole opinion of the author. All columns and editorials will be signed by the author(s). While the opinions expressed in signed editorials and columns may be shared among a minority or majority of the Collegian staff, it is not always a consensus viewpoint of the entire staff.

In serving as a public forum for debate on matters of public interests, the Collegian welcomes and encourages letters to the editor addressing such matters. However, letters containing libelous or discriminatory material will not be published.



All letters must be signed by the author and cannot exceed 300 words. All letters must be signed. The author's major, classification or other identification and a telephone number where the author can be reached must be included. The author's name and major will be published. If more than one name is included with the letter, only the first name and major will be published with a notation indicating the number of additional names.

The Collegian reserves the right to ask for personal identification with each letter and reject all letters in which identification is refused or cannot be confirmed.

Guest columns will be accepted by the Collegian and will either appear either on or opposite the editorial page. Accepted columns should not be less than two double-spaced typewritten pages nor more than four. Guest columns may be submitted to the Collegian between noon and 5 p.m. Mondays through Fridays. Arrangements must be made with the staff to have a photograph taken to appear with the column.

The Collegian reserves the right to edit for style or spatial considerations and reject submitted material at the staff's discretion.

Continuity

Writing a column is usually easy for me. Those who have read past issues of the Collegian will probably remember seeing my earth-shattering columns on basketball, colds and how to spell my last name. I enjoy sharing with you my past experiences, because I believe it lets you know more about Brian La Rue, the person behind the byline.

However, instead of being a Collegian reporter or assistant opinions editor, I am now the editor of the Collegian. I am now the one to whom the letters to the editor are addressed. I am the person who will get the blame when something goes wrong. I am the person who must approve what goes into the paper. I am the person responsible for about everything that can go wrong.

I don't mean for this to sound as if being editor is a thankless job. Being editor means being responsible and responsive to your readers. It means I can decide design layouts. It means I get to say, "You know, we need more coverage of the arts. Get someone on it right away." It means I get to talk with various officials and have them listen to a representative of the students, instead of just some rabble-rouser.

SOMEWHERE BETWEEN being kicked around and having an ego power trip, there is a happy medium. That is what I am aiming for. I want the Collegian to be the best newspaper possible. We may "step on some toes" in getting a story, but as long as we are fair, objective and accurate, we will be doing our job.

I wish all we had to report is nothing but the good things which happen both on campus and in the outside world. Unfortunately, people make mistakes. By presenting the truth, mistakes can be corrected and avoided in the future. There is nothing dishonorable about being wrong; the dishonor comes when we don't learn from our mistakes.

This includes the Collegian staff. We are all students. We are also human, and prone to make errors, no matter how careful we are. We will strive to be as fair, accurate and objective as we can. Everyone makes mistakes — but ours are printed four days a week for everyone to see.

The staff is talented. It has former Collegian staff members and writers with no previous newspaper experience. There are journalism students on the staff, as well as non-journalism majors. As diversified as the staff is, its members have one thing in common: the willingness to write and learn. I chose the staff and I believe it can do the job.

The Collegian also is a learning tool. Reporting 2 students are Collegian reporters. The Collegian is their laboratory. Practical application is important in learning anything. Again, mistakes will be made. We will try to keep them to a minimum and correct our errors.

IF YOU'VE READ the Collegian in the past, you may not notice any drastic changes. It will still have "Peanuts" and "Garfield." The basic layout will remain the same. My philosophy is "if it ain't broke, don't fix it." The Collegian system works. I believe in continuity, and I'm going to leave the system alone until it needs fixing.

A criticism of the Collegian in the past has been "it doesn't cover the such-and-such club meeting, social event or whatever." Part of this is due to the size of the staff. There are more of you out there than there are staff members. We welcome all news tips. Give us a call (532-6556) or drop by the newsroom (Kedzie 116). I won't guarantee we'll use every tip, but at least we'll have something for an R2 to check out.

Letters to the editor and guest columns are welcomed and encouraged. This is your chance to speak out on issues of concern. The editorial policy covers the rules and guidelines for letters and columns. With the exception of Wednesdays, priority for page five will be given to letters and columns.

The Collegian is a student newspaper. There are no faculty members telling us what to do, what to cover and what to write. The journalism faculty is available for advice and ideas, but the ultimate responsibility for what is in the paper rests with the editor.

With all these things in mind, I accepted this job. I hope to learn a lot, have some fun and to publish the Collegian while keeping my sanity. It should be a good summer.

THE COLLEGIAN (USPS 291 020) is published by Student Publications, Inc., Kansas State University, daily except Fridays, Saturdays, Sundays, holidays and University vacation periods.

OFFICES are in the north wing of Kedzie Hall, phone 532-6555.

Student identifies arsonist, receives $1,500 for reward

By JUDY MILLS
Staff Writer

When Garry Cowan, senior in veterinary medicine, saw a familiar-looking man heading for the Manhattan Milling Co. on a bicycle Sept. 18, 1982, he had no idea that during the following May he would win a $1,500 reward for reporting that bit of information.

Cowan said he was looking at cars at a nearby car lot "when I saw the exact duplicate of Arlie Moss make a beeline down the road on a bike."

"The guy definitely had something in mind and he drove down to the mill," Cowan said.

Cowan said he asked a Manhattan firefighter who lives in his neighborhood if Arlie Moss, who was convicted and jailed for the Ramey Brothers Lumber Co. arson case had been released. Cowan said he later learned that the man riding the bicycle was Arlie Moss' brother, Carlie.

"I had no hesitation about reporting what I had seen once I figured out what was going on," Cowan said. "I'd heard on TV or read in the papers about people who get threatened when they report a crime, but I felt like I had to do it."

Cowan didn't have to testify in court because Carlie Moss pled guilty to the arson charge.

"The police asked me if I'd be willing to testify and I said I would if it came down to it. I guess there were a few other witnesses, too," Cowan said.

He reported the information in September. He was contacted in February by Assistant Fire Chief Larry Reese who asked him if he was willing to go public and allow his name to be nominated for the cash award given by the Kansas Committee on Arson Prevention.

"Reese told me that probably nothing would come of it and I kind of forgot about it, but the last week of April or first of May I was notifed that I had won," Cowan said. "I couldn't believe it. It paid off. I got an award.

"But there wasn't any intention on my part to get an award way back in September when I first reported what I had seen," he said.

Cowan has plans for the cash award that he received May 24.

"Right now the money is just sitting in the bank, but a good buddy of mine from high school is graduating from Northwestern University in Chicago on June 18 and we're going to go watch him graduate. The rest of the money I'm just going to save and use when I graduate in December to help out when I move and settle down," Cowan said.

The Kansas Committee on Arson Prevention is a coalition of fire and law enforcement officials and the Kansas property-liability insurance industry representatives. The committee offers up to $5,000 in rewards for those who aid in solving an arson case.

Lone man robs local bank

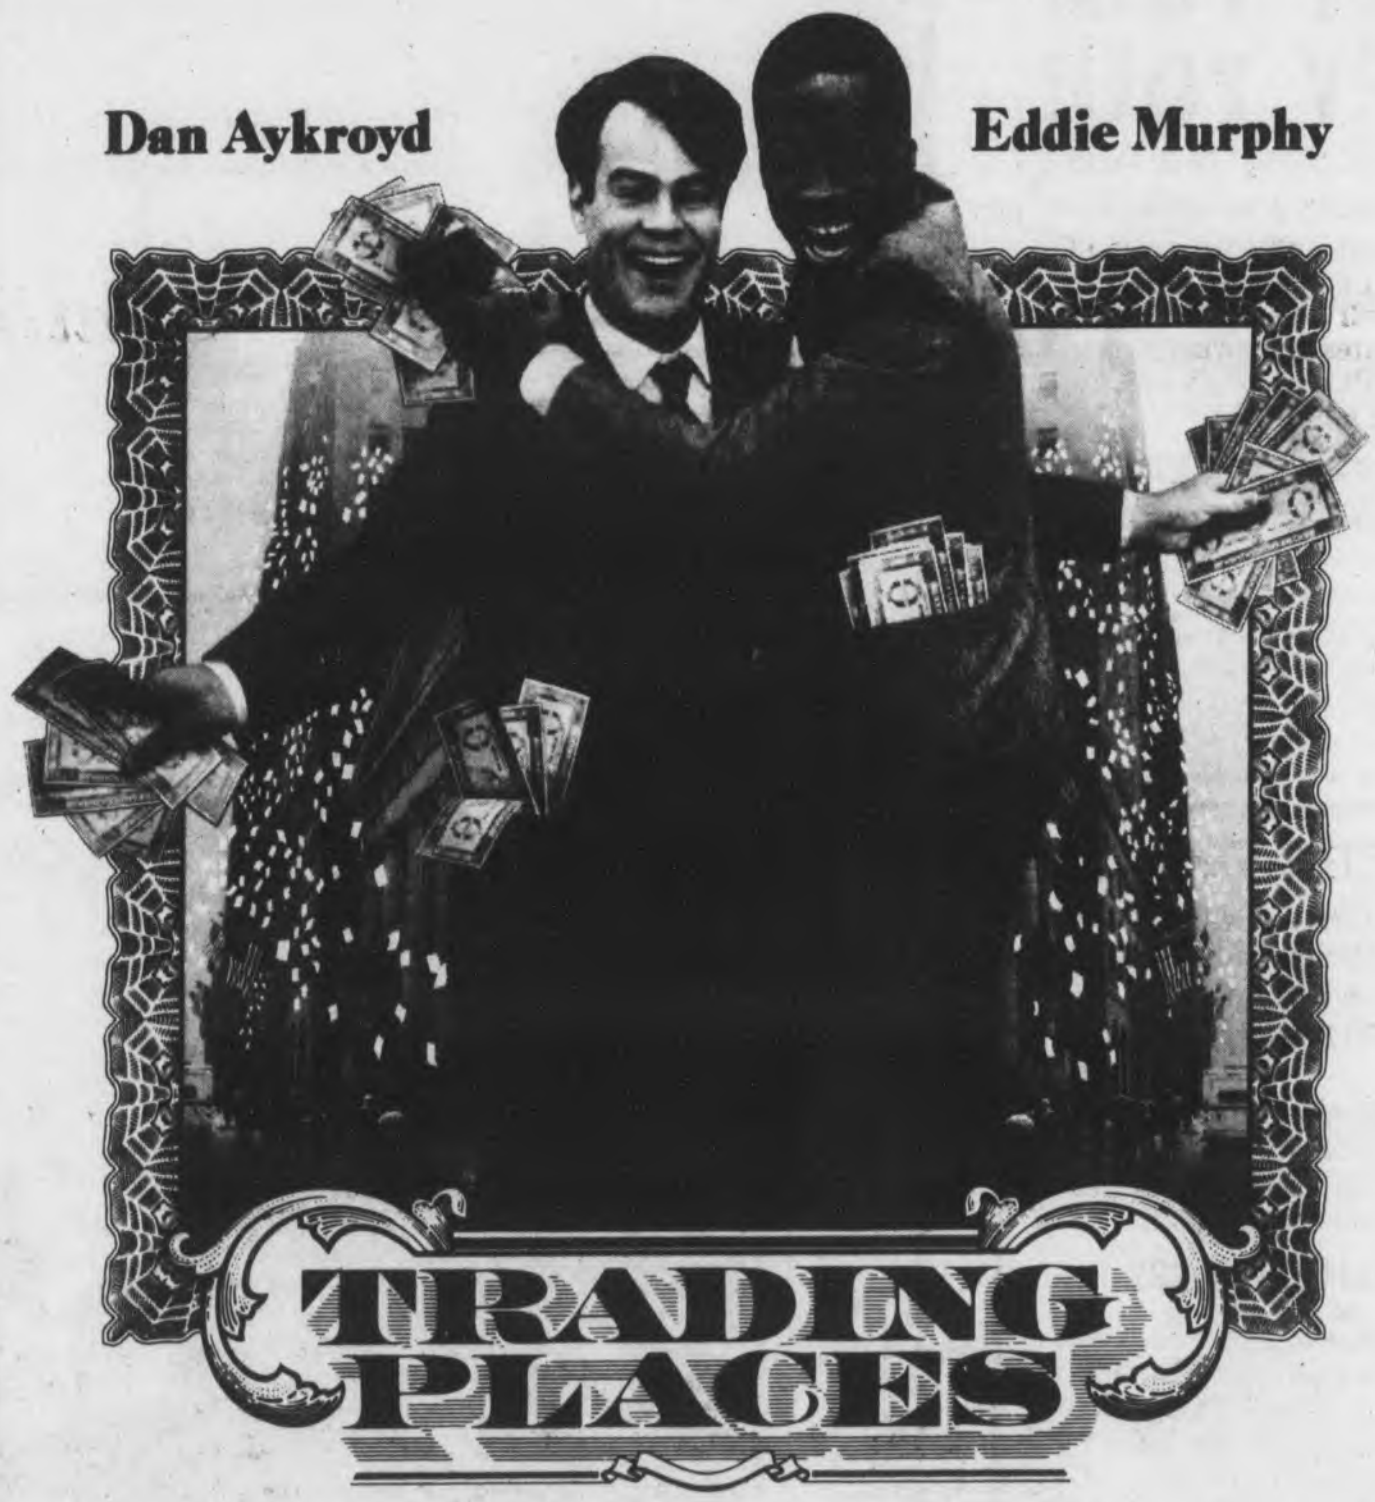
Surveillance photograph of robbery suspect leaving First National Bank's west branch.

A black male armed with a small chrome handgun robbed the First National Bank facility at Village Plaza in west Manhattan shortly before noon Saturday.

After confronting a bank teller and receiving several thousand dollars, the man left the bank on foot and fled north across Anderson Avenue running between Wendy's and Shorty's Fried Chicken and into a field, Riley County Police Inspector Al Riniker said.

The exact amount of money taken is not yet known, he said.



According to witnesses' reports, the man was wearing a blue hooded sweatshirt turned inside out, designer jeans and white tennis shoes with blue trim, Riniker said. The man, approximately 5 feet 5 inches tall and 150 to 160 pounds, had the sweatshirt hood pulled tightly around his face and was wearing reflective mirror-like sunglasses. He was estimated to be in his early- to mid-20s.

Photographs of the robber were taken by an automatically operated camera in the bank and will be distributed today. The Kansas Bureau of Investigation and the Federal Bureau of Investigation have been asked to assist in locating the robber. Police are asking anyone with information about the robbery to call 537-2112 or the Crime Stoppers number at 539-7777.

Fatal plane fire prompts concern over air safety

WASHINGTON (AP) — A fire that killed 23 people aboard an Air Canada DC-9 triggered renewed calls Friday for jetliner cabins to be equipped with better flame- and smoke-retardant materials, focusing on an issue that has been a subject of debate for nearly two decades.

While serious in-flight fires have been rare, federal air safety officials repeatedly have warned of the fire danger posed to modern jetliners whose cabin interiors are full of flammable items that quickly emit smoke and toxic fumes.

In the confined environs of an aircraft cabin, researchers have estimated, passengers often may have no more than a few minutes to escape before being overcome by smoke.

"Everything that isn't metal poses a problem — the rugs, seats, partitions, fuselage paneling," says an official of the National Transportation Safety Board.

SINCE THE MID-1960s, the safety board has issued more than three dozen recommendations dealing with interior cabin fires, many of them calling for the government to require manufacturers to develop materials for seats and interior walls that slow the spread of flames and limit the danger from toxic smoke.

In 1973 the board called for fire detectors in aircraft rest rooms, but 10 years later, there is no such requirement. Investigators said the fire aboard the Air Canada jet Thursday night, forcing an emergency landing in Cincinnati, was believed to have begun in a rear lavatory.

While research into the development of safer materials has been going on for years within both the government and industry, the last regulations on fire retardation of cabin equipment was issued more than a decade ago.

In 1972, the Federal Aviation Administration ordered that manufacturers equip their planes with material that reduces the spread of flames. Those same requirements, however, posed other dangers because the flame retardant itself caused toxic fumes and smoke.

"IT'S A CATCH-22 SITUATION," said FAA spokesman Fred Farrar.

But critics of the FAA disagree and argue that the agency has failed to push the industry into using the latest available fire and smoke retardation methods and materials.

"The present standards are totally inadequate and the federal regulations are far behind the state of the art," complained Rep. Elliott Levitas, D-Ga., on Friday. His subcommittee on investigations looked into the problem of cabin fires in 1979 and concluded that better cabin protection from fires is necessary.

The Air Line Pilots Association for years has been pushing for stronger government regulations to protect the crew and passengers against cabin fires. Like Levitas, the union argues that technologically the danger can be significantly lessened.

"There is material available" that will both restrict the spread of flames and reduce the danger of toxic fumes and smoke, declared John O'Brien, a safety specialist at the pilots union.

"The biggest inhibitor is cost," he added. Levitas agrees.

TO EQUIP THE NATION'S commercial fleet of more than 2,000 aircraft with the latest technology in flame retardant cabin materials would cost hundreds of millions of dollars, industry officials say.

"With the economic health of the industry right now ... it isn't going to happen," said one aviation industry source, who asked not to be identified. "The industry would fight it tooth and nail."

Aircraft manufacturers and airlines argue that the issue is complex and further studies are needed to determine what kind of materials should be used. They also note — and critics agree — that in the latest generation of aircraft interiors are equipped with improved fire retardants.

Nevertheless, the FAA has put its research into developing better fire protection in the aircraft cabins on slow speed. Instead the agency argues the focus should be on developing a fuel additive that reduces the likelihood of post-crash fires.

They note that the fire aboard the Air Canada jetliner Thursday was the first time an in-flight fire has resulted in fatalities aboard a major commercial carrier in the United States.

"THE REAL PROBLEM is the post-crash fire," said the FAA's Farrar, adding that the agency hopes to lesson that danger through development of an antimist kerosene that would keep engine or fuel line fires from spreading in a crash.

But safety experts argue that a fire almost identical to the one that engulfed the interior of Air Canada Flight 797, occurred aboard a Brazilian jetliner near Paris in July 1973.

The Paris fire, which began in a lavatory and spread through the cabin, resulted in the FAA prohibiting smoking in aircraft lavatories. James King, a former NTSB chairman, believes the agency should have gone much further.

Appearing before a congressional committee three years ago, King noted that the FAA after a 1961 crash of a United Airlines plane in Denver promised to deal with the dangers associated with toxic fumes from cabin fires.

Since then, he said, there had been other crashes involving fires in Chicago and Atlanta.

"Nineteen years after the Denver accident, seven years after the Chicago accident, and three years after the Atlanta accident, we have new promises of more study from the FAA with no timetable for completion," King said.

That was on June 3, 1980, almost three years to the day before the Air Canada tragedy in Cincinnati.

Kassebaum's success reassures GOP

WASHINGTON (AP) — She is, according to Sen. Bob Dole, "the most popular politician in Kansas." Dr. Bill Roy, her Democratic opponent in 1978, says it would be hard to find a better Republican for the job. And possible 1984 Democratic opponents are staying away in droves.

In short, Sen. Nancy Kassebaum has found a formula for political success that stands as a rare comfort to GOP strategists worried about whether their party can retain its Senate majority 16 months from now.

That formula is an undefinable mix of personal charm, a quiet studiousness on issues and a knack for soothing opponents. That mix has propelled the one-time Wichita homemaker, mother and businesswoman to the brink of a second six year Senate term. She also has begun to win attention as an expert on Central America, the nation's latest foreign relations hotspot.

"She's got a lot of strength," says Dole, her Kansas colleague with whom she is often contrasted. "You can do that in several ways. She does it by getting back to the state often, and avoiding controversy... She hasn't rankled a lot of people. She's accessible. And she's one of two women in the Senate — that's certainly not a minus."

It has proved to be a potent recipe.

AFTER POLLING THE STATE last year, Democratic Gov. John Carlin made it known that he would not try to unseat Kassebaum in 1984. The state's other most visible Democrat, Rep. Dan Glickman of Wichita, conceded he just couldn't get fired up to oppose someone he agrees with so much of the time.

While considered formidable, she is not without some gentle criticism.

Democrat Roy, who concedes Kassebaum has done little to open herself to attack, nonetheless questions her effectiveness. "The message I get is that her presence hasn't been greatly significant in the U.S. Senate, Roy says.

Others say she does not think well on her feet, but is at her most articulate when well prepared and organized on a subject. "When someone (on her staff) presents her with a position she disagrees with, but she can't marshal her arguments, she'll just say, 'Oh, pooh,' and walk away," one aide says.

"I'm not a good debater on the floor," Kasssebaum concedes. "I wish I were. But then again, I know that's not my strength. You have to go where your strength lies, and I think it is one on one with other people. You just have to be yourself here."

On that point she often is compared with Dole, the body's resident wit who can shoot from the hip with great accuracy. "I frequently yearn to be able to crack the jokes that Bob does and have the finesse that he does in debate," she says. "But can Kansas stand two Bob Doles? One of us has to be the straight man."

"I MARVEL AT MYSELF at times," says Kassebaum, 50, whose political career began in a pasture outside the family's house on the outskirts of Wichita, where she stood alone and decided — against the advice of some — to seek the Republican Senate nomination.

It would never have happened, says the gray-haired, 5-foot mother of four, had her 24-year marriage to Philip Kassebaum not broken up. And neither would it have happened, says a former close aide, if a Wichita restaurant venture had not fizzled.

But from what many regarded as a slow start, Kassebaum has in her fifth year in the Senate begun to attract some attention, and it is in an arena she regards as her strongest: foreign policy.

Last year she was selected by President Reagan to give the symbolic blessing of the United States to what U.S. officials say were El Salvador's first honest elections in decades. She since has become one of the Senate's most influential members on the subject of Central America, an issue expected to grow in importance as debate intensifies on U.S. involvement in fighting leftist influence there.

A sign of the respect given her came May 10, when a compromise economic and military aid package she had assembled won unanimous approval from the Senate Foreign Relations Committee — against the wishes of the White House.

She also has made a mark, although less heralded, in the Budget Committee, where she has been an advocate of cutting defense programs she regards as inefficient. And she recently became chairman — again without fanfare — of the Senate Military Reform Caucus.

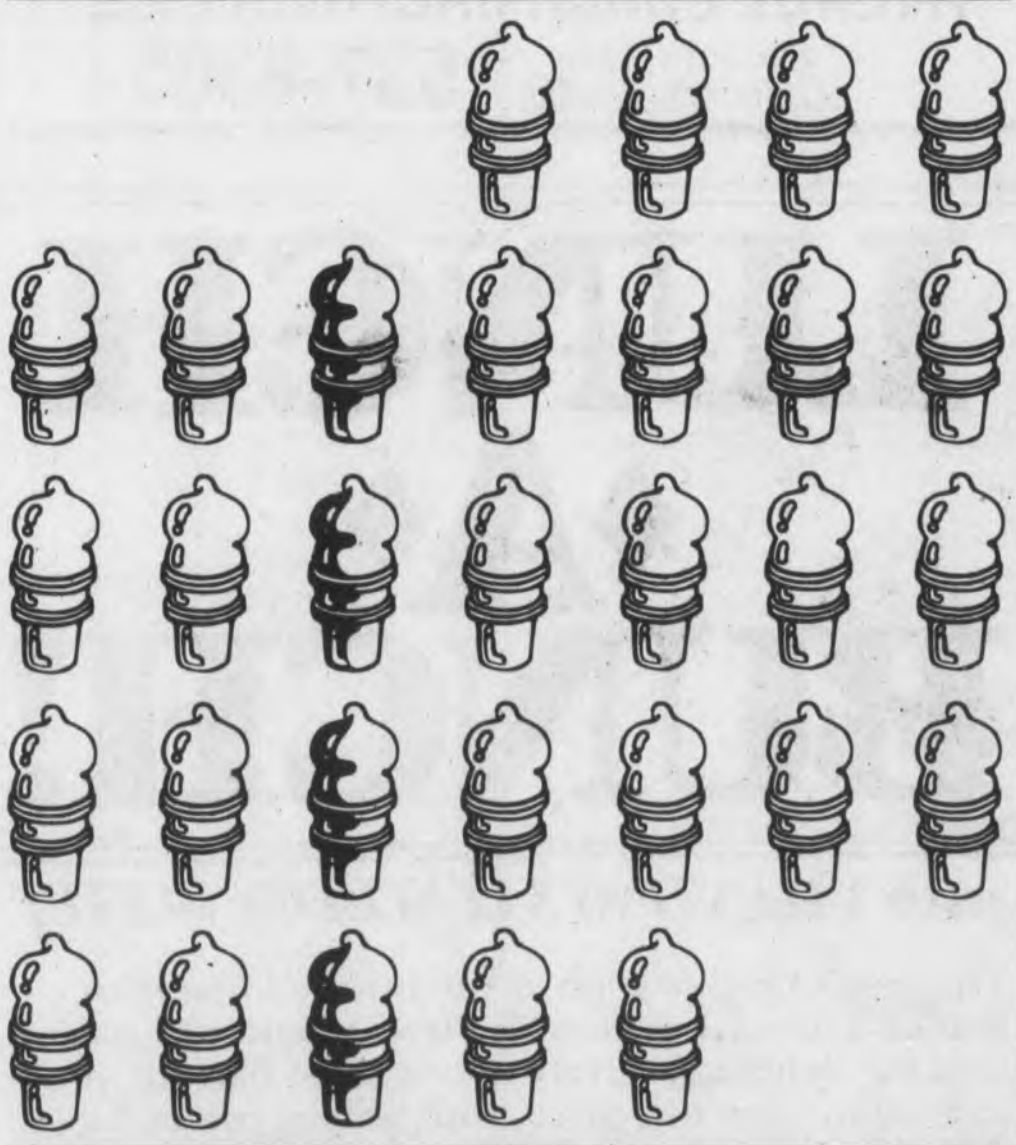
KASSEBAUM'S SLOW, DELIBERATE manner has brought criticism from those who thought her too cautious and who said her failure to move quickly on some issues made her ineffective. Only a small handful of bills she has introduced in her first four years has ultimately been signed into law, and one of those — providing help to former Rock Island Railroad workers — was largely struck down by the Supreme Court.

But she says passage of bills is not a good yardstick.

"I would rather work behind the scenes and see something constructive develop than have people view me as a lightning rod. There's a useful function sometimes to working behind the scenes. You also run the risk of people not knowing you do anything.

"You know, I constantly hear, 'She's diminutive and soft spoken and quiet, and does Nancy Kassebaum really count?' Well, sometimes I don't. But I also know that. And if one is aware of that, then you're also aware of where you can help shape a goal. I know that to my colleagues I do count, and that means a lot to me. Whether anyone else is aware of that is immaterial."

HER FAMOUS FATHER Alf Landon, 95, the former Kansas governor and unsuccessful Republican presidential nominee of 1936, says he wouldn't have it any other way.



"Her record of not indulging in any gimmicks designed to grab attention, or any claims of superior knowledge or ability, is to her credit," the Kansas GOP patriarch said in a recent interview. "I would say Nancy's great strength is in the frankness with which she discusses her positions on crucial national and international issues. When she differs with the president, she frankly expresses her distress, because she admires his record generally."

Kassebaum's style in her Capitol Hill office reflects the same studied approach. Staff members say she devours a stream of memos and articles about issues before the Senate, frequently wandering out of her office to debate with aides and challenge them on certain points.

Often she remains in the office until late evening reading and answering constituent mail. She has refused until recently to go to

Mexican law enforcement officials jail FALN fugitive and bomb expert

NEW YORK (AP) — He has stumps for hands. He is nearly blind in his left eye. His mouth is twisted in a perpetual grimace.

An explosion at a Queens bomb factory marked William Morales for life, but for four years — from the moment he escaped from a hospital's prison ward to his arrest last month in Mexico — he might as well have been invisible.

Morales' scarred face was on post office walls coast-to-coast. He was a premier fugitive — bomb expert for the Puerto Rican terrorist group FALN, and thus perhaps one of the most active bombers in recent U.S. history, say authorities. But he eluded law enforcement authorities entirely.

"We know absolutely nothing about where he has been," said Kenneth Walton, deputy assistant director of the FBI's New York office, in an interview last week. "Exactly nothing."

But Morales always has been a shadowy figure. When he was arrested after the July 1978 explosion, authorities did not know who he was. He had no fingers for fingerprints, and his face was so mutilated that he was beyond recognition.

DAYS PASSED BEFORE a positive identifiation could be made. In his hospital room, Morales sketched out words in the air with his toes to confess his role in the blast as well as ownership of the explosives and weapons.

But he did not admit to membership in the FALN — Fuerzas Armadas de Liberacion Nacional Puertoriquena, or Armed Forces of National Liberation for Puerto Rico. Even today he denies he is a member.

"He was never affiliated or associated with any organization that fought for Puerto Rican independence," asserted Suzanne Garcia, a spokeswoman for the National Committee to Free Puerto Rican Prisoners of War.

He was born in East Harlem on Feb. 7, 1950, the son of two laborers. He graduated from P.S. 121 in Harlem and then from Morris High School in the Bronx.

HIS SCHOLASTIC RECORD was a good one, his family says. He studied political science at the City College of New York for two years, and then attended the School of Visual Arts to study film editing.

He joined a group of Puerto Rican filmmakers, says Garcia, and at the time of the explosion and his arrest he and the other members of "Cine Puebla" — "People's Film" — were working on a documentary project on Puerto Rican life on the island and on the mainland.

He took a wife, Dylcia Pagan, later sentenced to 55 years in prison on conspiracy charges involving the FALN. They had a child.

"My son is a good boy, a good son, a good husband, a good father, a good student," said his mother, Lucy Morales.

"The man is not what he is painted to be. He's a serious, quiet man," said Garcia, whose group seeks Morales' release and the release of other reputed members of Puerto Rican terrorist groups.

The picture painted by authorities is very different. They say Morales joined the FALN at about the time that the organization was formed in 1974, with the aim of bringing independence to Puerto Rico.

In October of that year, five bombs went off in Manhattan banks. Two months later another blast injured a policeman. And on Jan. 24, 1975, a bomb at historic Fraunces Tavern in the Wall Street area killed four people and injured 50.

Since its start, authorities say, the FALN has claimed reponsibility for more than 100 bombings causing $3.5 million in damage and five deaths.

Morales' role is not clear. Walton says Morales was "one of several bomb experts." Others claim he had a more prominent role.

HE WAS MAKING A BOMB in the Queens apartment when it blew up in his face, authorities say. Nearby, they found 66 sticks of dynamite, more than 350 pounds of incendiary chemicals and powders, blasting caps, 1,000 pounds of ammunition, pipe bombs, a sawed-off shotgun and three other weapons and hundreds of bomb components.

"There's nothing to be sorry about...," Morales said, before he was sentenced to prison. "I will apologize if this country apologizes to my people."

"They're not going to hold me forever," he swore.

A month later, he escaped. In a document revealed last week, federal authorities alleged that his lawyer, Susan Tipograph, smuggled a bolt cutter to the convict in his room in Bellevue Hospital's prison ward. She denies it.

Apparently, authorities said, he used the tool to cut through a screen. Despite his handicap, he shimmied three stories down a rope of bandages.

AND THEN, SILENCE. Authorities are not the only ones who say they did not know where he was; his mother, too, claims she had no contact with her son. FALN bombings tapered off, until this past New Year's Eve when three policemen were injured in four blasts at government buildings.

The circumstances of his arrest in Puebla remain vague more than a week after it occurred. Three people died, including one police officer and a woman who was at first described as Morales' commonlaw wife.

Juan Manuel Ibarra, director of the Federal Judiciary Police in Mexico, said Morales and at least six others were plotting to bomb a meeting of American and Mexican legislators in Puebla.

He used the alias Ramon Ramirez Ayala and the nickname "Chucho."

Neighbor finds family, son slain in ranch house

CHINO, Calif. (AP) — The bodies of a man, a woman and two children were found in a blood-spattered ranch house in a remote area Sunday, victims of what authorities described as a "very brutal" stabbing. Another 8-year-old boy was in critical condition from the attack.

"It was not ritualistic at all, just very brutal," said San Bernardino County Sheriff Floyd Tidwell. "There was blood all over."

One deputy at the scene 35 miles east of Los Angeles described the murders as "Manson-style," referring to the 1969 slayings of pregnant actress Sharon Tate and four others by cult followers of Charles Manson at a Laurel Canyon house.

Tidwell said the dead were a father, mother, their 10-yearold daughter and a neighbor boy whose father came upon the bodies. The family and the boy were on an unspecified weekend outing Saturday and the boy had spent the night, Tidwell said.

The dead couple's 8-year-old son, also attacked in the house, was taken to Loma Linda University Hospital in critical condition.

"The boy in the hospital is doing well, although at one point they feared they would lose him," Tidwell said at a news conference on a rural crossroads near the scene. He added that authorities hoped to interview the child Monday morning.

Larry Lease, whose property adjoins the slain family's, said the bodies were found by the neighbor boy's father when he came to take his son to church about noon Sunday.

Deputies issued an all-points bulletin for a white 1977 Buick station wagon. They said three young men were believed driving it, possibly to Arizona.

T.S. Eliot's 'Cats' overwhelms field with seven Tonys

NEW YORK (AP) — "Cats," the English-made musical based on the late T.S. Eliot's feline poetry, won big as expected Sunday night at the 37th annual Tony awards show, getting seven awards, including best musical.

Two of its Tonys went to Eliot, who died in 1965 and whose widow accepted his awards for the season's best book and best score, the latter shared with Andrew Lloyd Webber, the musical's composer.

But the evening's surprise winner was "Torch Song Trilogy," a four-hour comedy about a homosexual who impersonates a female entertainer. It was named the season's best play.

Harvey Fierstein, the show's star and author, was all smiles as he described his play as a show that "we could not give a ticket away" to when it was struggling to survive off-Broadway.

"Torch Song," now a Broadway hit, hadn't been considered a strong contender for Broadway's top honor in pre-show speculation. Marsha Norman's Pulitzer-winning "'night, Mother," and David Hare's "Plenty" were thought the strongest nominees, with Lanford Wilson's "Angel's Fall" the fourth best-play nominee.

In the musical field, "Cats" had stiff competition from "My One and Only," whose star, Tommy Tune, and Thommie Walsh won best-choreography honors. Another performer in that show, veteran tap dancer Charles "Honi" Coles won as best supporting actor in a musical.

"Cats" director Trevor Nunn, a Tony winner last season for "Nicholas Nickleby," won as best director of a musical, with "Cats" co-star Betty Buckley winning in her supporting role.

Comedies to highlight summer theater program

By KYLA STOLFUS
Staff Writer

Sit back and relax, Little Apple, the Big Apple is coming to you, in the form of three contemporary comedies that have been Broadway and Off-Broadway hits.

The 1983 Summer Repertory Theatre program, sponsored by the Department of Speech and K-State Players, will present "Fifth of July," by Lanford Wilson; "Da," by Hugh Leonard; and "A Coupla White Chicks Sitting Around Talking," by John Ford Noonan.

Lew Shelton, artistic director, said the summer program is a "performing laboratory in a professional atmosphere for K-State students."

Nine actors, six technical assistants and one graduate student director form the company. For two months of theater production work, the students will receive academic credit and scholarships for living expenses.

According to Shelton, the comedies explore current foibles and attitudes about living today, and should be an educational experience for both the actors and audience.

"THEY PRESENT STRONG acting challenges for the company and intelligent entertainment for audiences," he said.

"Fifth of July" is part of a trilogy of plays concerning the Talley family of Lebanon, Mo. The second of these plays, "Talley's Folly," won a Pulitzer prize in 1982. Local audiences may recall the play was presented in McCain Auditorium by the Missouri Repertory Theatre in September 1981.

"Fifth of July" presents a witty view of the '60s generation search for re-dedication in the late '70s, according to Shelton.

Wilson explores the inner feelings of the second generation of Talleys as they try to cope with the bitterness and dashed dreams caused by the Vietnam War and changing values of the 1960s.

By contrast, Leonard's "Da" is a more sentimental comedy. The play's theme examines a man's relationship to his father in an unusual way. The son converses with his father's ghost when he returns home for his father's funeral.

The comedy is a beguiling play about a son's need to come to terms with his father — and himself — and it's also about paternity, adolescence, the varities of familial love and the tricks and distortions of memory, Shelton said.

COMEDY HAS won numerous awards including the 1978 Tony Award as Best Play.

With the zany title of "A Coupla White Chicks Sitting Around Talking," the other production is cast for two women. The play will be directed by Kevin Brown, graduate student in theater.

The play explores female friendship and liberation through the antics of two housewives who band together against their cheating husbands.

According to Shelton, the Summer Repertory Theatre will offer the acting company a chance to devote time to theater which they can not do during the regular season University productions. In order to get the most experience possible, the actors perform in at least two of the plays and were chosen with the plays' roles in mind.

To offset the female cast of "A Coupla White Chicks Sitting Around Talking," Shelton picked "Da" which has predominately male roles. The third play has equal casting of four males and four females.

Overseeing the summer theater program are John Uthoff,, scenic director; Lydia Aseneta, costume director; and Shelton. These three people originated the Summer Repertory Theatre in 1982 with a season of American plays.

Performances will be Tuesday through Saturday, June 28 through July 28 in the Purple Masque Theatre, East Stadium.

Promoter ready for US '84

DEVORE, Calif. (AP) — US Festival '83, a four-day music extravagnza that opened with a heavy-rock bang and was marked by arrests and injury, closed peacefully early Sunday on a country note.

Steve Wozniak, the Apple home computer designer who set up a corporation to produce the festivals, said the country segment drew 35,000 paying customers at most and said any profit would be made through sales of concert videotapes.

Wozniak said he's ready for a scaled-down US '84, but he's through funneling his personal millions into the mammoth outdoor music shows.

Next time, he said, UNUSON Corp., of which he owns 52 percent, will have to pay its bills with its revenue, plus whatever might be left over from this year's festival.

"I cannot put more of my own money into it, but UNU-SON has its own resources left from this show, plus the possibility of getting outside financing ... so I definitely think there's going to be more shows," Wozniak said. "It's just that no more money out of my pocket will go in this year."

The Fone Crisis Center will hold training Sat. & Sun. (June 18 & 19) from 8:30-5:00.
Breakfast and lunch will be provided.

Rock 'n' roll showdown

Shadybrook '83

Head East Black Frost Crosswind

Approximately 1,000 people attended Shadybrook Showdown '83.

Dan Odum, vocalist for Head East, hits one last note during an encore at the concert Saturday featuring Black Frost, Crosswind and Head East.

Shadybrook is a usually quiet community. Saturday was an exception. It was the day of the Shadybrook Showdown, an outdoor concert that attracted rock 'n' rollers from miles around.

The concert was located in a grassy field a few miles outside of Shadybrook, which is approximately 30 miles southwest of Junction City. The stage, the speakers and even the people looked out of place. A picture-perfect white church sat on the horizon behind the giant speaker stacks; a grain silo stood to the left of the stage.

The outdoor concert featured three bands — Black Frost, Crosswind and Head East.

Concerts aren't new to the area and, in fact, they are becoming customary to the area. Two were held there last year. This year's concert was the third.

Although the concert wasn't scheduled to begin until 6 p.m., people began showing up early in the afternoon to enjoy the sun and party. Stands were set up by vendors hoping to sell soft drinks, charcoal-grilled hamburgers and T-shirts to concert goers.

LATER IN THE AFTERNOON as the bands prepared to play, more and more people took blankets and coolers to the grass in front of the stage to stake out their claims. Frisbee, beer drinking and sleeping in hot sun seemed to be the most popular pastimes until the concert began. T-shirts, jeans, cut-offs and tattoos were the favored attire for the event.

Black Frost, a Manhattan-based band, started the show playing a blend of rock 'n' roll and reggae music. A Rolling Stones medley and the music of Jimi Hendrix drew some of the best crowd response for the band's performance.

Although Black Frost made an impression with the audience, their act was overshadowed by the wet T-shirt contest. The thing that made this event so popular with the audience, especially the men in the crowd, was that the wet T-shirt contest turned into a no T-shirt contest. Many were surprised at the actions of the nine women who entered the contest, but for those who were at the last Shadybrook Showdown, it was old hat.

"WHEN THEY ANNOUNCED the contest, I knew what was going to happen," one veteran Shadybrook fan said. "It always happens."

Crosswind, another Manhattan band, was the next to perform. Playing old rock 'n' roll and some original music, the band drew dancers and a lot of applause from the audience.

Even though both bands were popular with crowd, the main attraction was still to come and there was anticipation in the air as the stage crew began setting up equipment for the night's headlining band — Head East.

The area in front of the stage that had been filled only once before with spectators was suddenly packed with anxious Head East fans. Chanting and screaming, the fans cheered on the band as they took the stage. The crowd that didn't seem so large before now looked like a giant mob.

HEAD EAST PLAYED many of its old favorites that won them their fame, as well as several selections from their new album, Onward and Upward. The album was released in February under the Allegiance label. The band's last album release was in 1980.

"The album was released nationally. Since then we've just been looking for jobs," Dan (O.D.) Odum, lead singer for Head East said. "We've been playing in bars, concerts, everywhere. We're just playing everywhere because that's what we do."

The audience called Head East back for two encores before the band left the stage.

After the concert was over the crowd was welcomed to spend the night, the announcer said. There was only one stipulation — everyone had to be gone before services began at the little church on the hill Sunday morning.

Two bikers talk to a member of Crosswind before the show.

Royals salvage split

CHICAGO (AP) — White Sox lefthander Floyd Bannister probably is still wondering what went wrong, while teammate Tom Paciorek is puzzled by what didn't.

Bannister had a perfect game through six innings Sunday before the roof caved in against the Kansas City Royals. He yielded a pair of runs, and the Royals went on to win the opener of a doubleheader 7-5. Paciorek salvaged a split with a three-run double in the nightcap to give the White Sox a 5-2 decision.

"All I can say is I tried to do the best I can," said Bannister, who ended up without a stake in the outcome. "There's no question I wanted to keep pitching, but that's something that is out of my control and I have to abide by Tony's (White Sox manager LaRussa) decision."

The deciding blow in the opener was delivered by U.L. Washington, who smashed a three-run homer, his second of the year, off reliever Kevin Hickey, 0-2.

In the nightcap, Paciorek ripped his bases-clearing double off reliever Mike Armstrong and held his breath waiting for the ball to land.

"I think I'm about 0-for-15 or -16 career against Armstrong, and I was just praying for that thing to stay fair so I wouldn't have to go back to the plate with one strike on me," Paciorek said.

Paciorek's eighth double of the year erased a 2-1 lead and gave LaMarr Hoyt, 6-6, his fourth consecutive win. Mike Armstrong, 2-3, who relieved Kansas City starter Vida Blue to begin the seventh, took the loss.

Pinch-hitter Jerry Hairston began the winning rally with a single and Jerry Dybzinski sacrificed. Pinch-runner Scott Fletcher took third on a wild pitch and Rudy Law singled to tie it 2-2.

Tony Bernazard followed with a walk and, one out later, Armstrong also walked pinch-hitter Greg Walker to load the bases before Paciorek doubled down the left-field line.

In the first game, Kansas City scored its first two runs in the seventh inning after Willie Wilson's leadoff single broke up Floyd Bannister's bid for a perfect game.

In the eighth, with reliever Salome Barojas trying to protect a 3-2 lead, John Wathen tripled and scored when pinchhitter Willie Aikens singled off Kevin Hickey, 0-2.

Wilson then walked and Washington hit his second homer of the year, putting the Royals ahead 6-3. The victory went to Dan Quisenberry, 2-1.

Mercer nabs third in hurdles

The final four.

For K-State it was Greg Bartlett, Rita Graves, Pinkie Suggs and Julius Mercer — the last four Wildcats competing at the NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championships, held at Houston, Texas last week.

Mercer, K-State's premier hurdler, proved himself a definite national top-rate hurdler by placing third in the 400-meter intermediate hurdles. He sped through the hurdles with a time of 49.76, breaking the previous K-State record of 50.0, set by Mike Lee at the 1972 NCAA championship event.

Graves, a freshman, leaped 5-11¼ to finish seventh in the women's high jump.

With a throw of 51-0¼, Suggs, another freshman, finished eighth in the women's shot put.

CFA unanimously approves short-range football TV plan

DALLAS (AP) — Sentiment for some sort of television coalition between the College Football Association and the Big 10 and Pacific-10 conferences continued to grow Sunday as CFA members approved a one-year contingency TV plan for 1983 in the event it is needed.

The CFA, with 59 of its 60 members represented, unanimously approved a voluntary short-range TV plan that could be put into effect quickly if the NCAA fails to obtain a further stay of a court ruling that overturned its four-year, $281 million deal with ABC and CBS. That deal has three more years to run.

But Charles M. Neinas, executive director of the CFA, said a tie-up with some or all of the Big 10 and Pac-10 schools, which are the only major football universities not in the CFA, "seems to be the preferred position."

Neinas said the contingency plan, which features national doubleheaders each Saturday plus another game at night that schools and conferences could sell on their own, provides "a safety net that puts something in place for our members should the NCAA plan not be operative. The next logical step is to see if we can reach some agreement with the Big 10 and Pac-10 to form a federation. Our people are acceptable to it, and it's safe to say we're optimistic."

Gene Corrigan, athletic director at Notre Dame, has held two meetings with representatives of the Big 10 and Pac-10 "for the specific purpose of putting together a TV plan, which we'd like to have the NCAA monitor."

"The Pac-10 is interested in something that would embody a large number of schools. I can't say if the Big 10 is excited or not, but no one is reaching out to try and hug us. The Pac-10 has a very definite feeling that this would be a good thing."

The CFA said it would distribute to its members shortly a commitment form for the contingency TV plan. The form, if signed, would assign a school's football TV rights to the CFA for 1983.

UCLA women defend national championship

SMU narrowly wins NCAA outdoor track crown

HOUSTON (AP) — Southern Methodist University captured its first NCAA outdoor track and field championship with a come-from-behind fourth-place finish in the final event, the 1,600-meter relay.

"We're in the entertainment business, but that's about as much as I can handle," said SMU Coach Ted McLaughlin, the orchestrator of the Mustangs' first outdoor title, a heart-stopping two-point victory over Tennessee in the 62nd National Collegiate Athletic Association Outdoor Track and Field Championships.

"This is much sweeter than last year," said UCLA woman's Coach Scott Chisam after the Bruins had rallied to capture their second straight NCAA crown and fourth national championship since 1975.

SMU, also winner of its first title in the 19-year NCAA indoor meet in March, became the first Southwest Conference team to capture the outdoor title Saturday night.

Starting the eight-team relay, SMU was in second place, seven points behind Tennessee, which did not have a team in the race. Under the scoring system of 15-12-10-9-8-7-6-5-4-3-2-1, SMU needed a fifth-place finish or better to win the championship.

After the leadoff 400-meter leg, SMU's chances looked gloomy. Leslie Brooks, running with an injured leg, limped home in last place.

BUT RUSSELL CARTER closed the gap on the second leg, moving SMU into seventh place. Then Eric Josjo also did a fast quarter-mile, and had SMU in sixth place when he gave the baton to freshman Rod Jones.

Jones, a football cornerback, moved into fifth around the first turn, then when Baylor anchorman Willie Caldwell fell coming around the final curve, Jones was fourth.

He remained in that position until the end, giving SMU nine points and a total of 104 for the week-long meet in the University of Houston's Robertson Stadium.

"I just wanted to get that baton and get that fifth place," said the nervous Jones, who didn't learn until Friday night that he would be running the important anchor leg. Jones ran the fastest quarter-mile (44.3 seconds) of any of the 32 runners in the relay.

Tennessee settled for second place, followed by Alabama with 88 points, four-time defending champion Texas-El Paso with 84½, and favored Washington State with 66.

SMU got into position to win the title with the help of victories Saturday night by Michael Carter in the shot put at 68 feet, 7 inches, and Keith Connor of Britain in the triple jump at 56-7½.

THE MUSTANGS also got victories from Robert Weir of England in the hammer throw at 244-2 and Sven Nylander of Sweden in the 400-meter intermediate hurdles at 48.88 Friday night. The four winners were the most by any team in the meet.

UCLA had three winners in capturing the women's title with 116½ points, 8½ more than runner-up Florida State.

Just like the men, the women's championship was decided in the final event, but the circumstances weren't as dramatic.

Before that event, the long jump, Florida State had 108 points to 106½ for UCLA. Each team had one entrant in the long jump, but UCLA's Jackie Joyner was a far superior jumper than Florida State's Alice Bennett, and so the Bruins figured to win.

They did, as Joyner finished third at 21-7¼, while Bennett failed to make the 12-woman final from the 14-woman prelims.

Joyner was the individual standout. She won the heptathlon early in the week with a collegiate record 6,365 points, helped UCLA finish fifth in the 400-meter relay, sixth in the 1,600-meter relay and was eighth in the 100-meter high hurdles before climaxing her gruelling effort in the long jump.

In addition to Joyner, UCLA's champions were Florence Griffith in the 400 in 50.94 and Michele Bush in the 1,500 in 4:14.48, both meet records.

Summer intramurals offered

Summer intramurals? You bet!

The Washburn Recreational Complex is offering summer intramurals in softball, handball, racquetball, tennis, badminton, horseshoes, doubles volleyball, 3-on-3 basketball and a basketball tournament.

Along with these activities, a jazz exercise workout will continue through summer school on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday nights.

For those up at the crack of dawn, a 6:30 a.m. "rise-and-shine" conditioning program can provide that added boost on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday mornings.

Linda Verscheldon, graduate student in health and physical education, will lead the jazz exercise and early morning conditioning program.

She said the jazz exercise is "a mix between Jane Fonda and rhythmic aerobics. We use about a 50-50 mix of toning and aerobics."

Verscheldon expects mostly women faculty and staff to participate in the early morning conditioning program. Self conditioning, under the guidance of Verscheldon, is the ultimate goal of the program.

"We want you to set up what you want to do," she said. "We will work on trying to improve what you're doing in your own exercise program.

"First, we'll go through stretches, and then some type of aerobics. We may try to work on weights some for upper-body strength also, since women tend to neglect their upper body when exercising."

Registration for all intramural activities begins today and continues through 5 p.m. Friday at the Rec Complex. Those interested in the jazz exercise or conditioning programs are encouraged to come to the first scheduled session.

Nebraskans split on plan basing missiles in state

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — A newspaper poll published Sunday found Nebraska residents about evenly split on President Reagan's plan to base MX nuclear missiles in western Nebraska.

Of 602 people interviewed, 45 percent said they opposed the Reagan plan, 42 percent said they favored it and 13 percent said they were undecided, the Omaha World-Herald said in a copyright story.

Reagan has proposed placing 100 MX missiles, each with 10 nuclear warheads, in missile silos throughout an area from near Kimball in the Nebraska panhandle to Cheyenne, Wyo.

The telephone poll was conducted by SRI Research Center Inc. of Lincoln from May 15 through 20.

In the panhandle, 55 percent were opposed compared with 34 percent in favor. However, only 53 panhandle residents were interviewed.

SRI official John Sheehan said the smaller sampling had a potentially high error range and should not necessarily be viewed as an indication that the MX plan is opposed by a majority of the people there.

SRI said the poll was accurate within 4.5 percentage points.

Tripoli fears PLO move-in

TRIPOLI, Lebanon (AP) — Frequent visits here by PLO chief Yasser Arafat and efforts by his aides to rent office buildings are raising fears that the guerrilla organization would like to use this port city as a new power base.

Arafat has denied Lebanese newspaper reports that he intends to increase the presence of the Palestine Liberation Organization in Tripoli, but residents are wary.

They fear any PLO buildup would turn Lebanon's third largest city into the kind of anarchic gathering place for radicals that Beirut became before the Israeli invasion which began one year ago today led to the evacuation of an estimated 8,000 guerrillas.

On Arafat's latest visit to Tripoli, his guards fired a rifle propelled grenade and automatic weapons into the air to clear traffic for his bulletproof car.

"Why are they doing this?" asked a lawyer. "Just to clear the traffic? If they stay here, it will be like this all the time."

"The Palestinians have more guns than the Lebanese army. As long as they are here, and the Syrians, we can do nothing," said a local official.

"The Palestinians took my house away from me, and put my family in the street, because I was a Lebanese officer before," claimed another man. "They have done this to many. It is not Lebanon here. It belongs to the Palestinians and the Syrians."

All those who speak critically of the Palestinians and Syrians refuse to allow their names to be used, saying they fear retribution.

Tripoli, 40 miles north of Beirut, was the first Lebanese city taken over in 1976 by the Syrians, who moved in after 18 months of armed conflict between Lebanese Christians and Moslems backed by the PLO.

It has been the scene of recurrent outbreaks of fighting between local Sunni Moslems and pro-Syrian Alawite Moslems, at times spreading to battles involving the Syrian army itself.

Some PLO factions have supplied weapons and support quietly to the anti-Syrian movements, playing out their disputes with the Syrians through local proxies.

There are an estimated 70,000 Palestinian refugees in the Tripoli area, 30,000 of them in two large camps just outside the city. The presence of Arafat's Fatah, the largest guerrilla group under the PLO umbrella, is large in the camps.

The reported PLO planning to establish a headquarters here coincides with dissension in the Fatah ranks over Arafat's policies and leadership.

The rebellion began May 7 and on Saturday erupted in the first fighting between the rival factions, leaving seven reported dead.

Florida teachers denounce anti-communism instruction

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Florida high school students must be taught "the dangers of communism, the ways to fight communism, the evils of communism, the fallacies of communism, and the false doctrines of communism."

It's the law.

The 20-year-old law demanding the teaching of anti-communism in the classroom has been the catalyst for a long-standing debate in state eduation — but in the Legislature, not the schools.

Many teachers today insist the law is absurd and outdated and promotes a "good vs. evil" concept that's nothing more than plain propaganda.

The law says: "The public high schools shall teach a complete course of not less than 30 hours, to all students enrolled in said public high schools entitled 'Americanism versus Communism' ...

"Pure McCarthyism," complains Gus Jimenez of Tampa, supervisor of social studies for Hillsborough County, one of the largest school districts in the state with an enrollment of 112,000 students.

While the legislative arguments go on, teachers and schools find ways to skirt the issue. Many incorporate "Americanism vs. Communism" into umbrella courses such as "Problems of American Democracy," and drop what they consider propaganda.

It's the only course prescribed by Florida law. Yet the law doesn't say students have to pass it, merely take it.

"We've been living with this problem for the last 15 years," Jimenez said.

"There's a legislative push every year to eliminate it or replace it. But when it comes up, it's like motherhood and apple pie. Who would vote against it? That's considered a vote for communism."

Most years, bills to restructure the course never make it out of committee, and when they have they've been killed in debate. Last week, for instance, one reached the state House floor. And House members, declaring their determination to save America from communists, voted 89-26 to keep the course.

"Communism is trying to take over the world," warned Rep. Fran Carlton of Orlando. She suggested that the restructuring bill itself "might just be a communist plot."

Kassebaum

a computerized mailanswering system, a standard item in most congressional offices. Other personal touches, such as coming out to greet office visitors with appointments, seem to impress those who meet her.

"She was one of the nicest people I've met on the hill," said Kathy Hurwit, legislative coordinator for a labor-oriented energy group that teamed with Kassebaum on a natural gas bill this year. "It was so out of the ordinary that you went home and talked to people about it."

That disarming quality often helps rescue her from the consequences of what aides say is a tendency to express forthright opinions, even when the message is not popular. It has happened when she tells antiabortion groups that she favors federal funding for abortion in case of incest, rape or danger to the mother. It occurred when she told militant farmers she could not support a parity farm policy. And it happened when she spurned the politically popular balanced-budget constitutional amendment as meaningless.

"I have seen more than one person come into the office wanting to dispute something with her and leave a while later wondering why they ever were mad," says a former aide.

Kassebaum drives herself to the Capitol from her 2½-story brick home in Washington's fashionable embassy row. And when she attends parties, dinners and receptions, she usually goes alone, she says, because "it's easier." More often, she heads home in the evening and goes to a restaurant, dons jeans and putters in a postage-stamp-sized back yard or reads a mystery.

"I don't think the people back home have any idea the toll it takes on your personal life," she says.

She has no grand political aspirations beyond a second Senate term, other than perhaps to hold a party leadership post in the Senate. She once told someone she'd like to be majority leader, but now — after observing the frantic schedule of Majority Leader Howard Baker — says she wouldn't take the job if it were offered on a silver platter.

"I would like to be re-elected in 1984, and then I'm going home after that term is over," she says.

Schedule conflicts cause confusion during summer school registration

By JUDY MILLS
Staff Writer

Long lines snaking through the Union Ballroom during registration is a familiar sight to regular summer school goers, but the lines may have been longer than in previous summers because two differing copies of the enrollment schedule were published.

"We had some lines this morning and this afternoon there were no lines. The majority of students chose to enroll in the morning. Because they were there and due to the two schedules we couldn't keep them enrolling," Doug Hurley, assistant registrar, said.

Due to a communication problem in the registrar's office, two differing copies of the registration schedule were prepared by the office, according to Hurley. The schedule appearing in the class schedule conflicted with a summer school bulletin sent to high schools and various organizations.

"The summer class schedule goes to press in early February and in mid-February Don Foster (registrar) suffered a heart attack. Due to other various reasons there was a coordination problem in our office," Hurley said.

"The fee paying seems to be running slower than normal," William Waugh, assistant professor of political science, said. "At 11:30 there was a line running all through this room."

Waugh was one of several advisers that were required to authorize class assignments before students paid their fees.

Rob May, sophomore in business marketing who worked during registration, said, "The communication gap between each level is poor. The whole situation is poor. It took me a whole hour to get through. Some people have been through here six times. They had the wrong sheet or wrong card or something and had to start all over."

From the cashier's viewpoint this summer semester's registration went the same as last summer.

"We have our slow times and have our really busy times. The summer's always more difficult than the fall and spring semesters because in the summer everything's done at once. I like working the fall and spring semesters a lot better," said Rebecca Rice, cashier.

"It would be easier if we had a bigger room to work in," she added.

"The reason for not using the computer is that summer school registration is all done in one day. There is no early enrollment as done in the fall and spring semesters. The students need an opportunity to see an adviser. The department representatives are there to advise the students if they need it," Hurley said.

"At this point we have no sense of how many students have enrolled for the summer semester. Any number we get today or tommorrw will be only preliminary. We have no reason to believe that the number is significantly different than last year," Hurley said.

Nicaragua expels U.S. diplomats for 'conspiracy'

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The Sandinista government on Monday accused three U.S. diplomats of conspiring to assassinate top Nicaraguan leaders, and the leftist junta ordered the Americans expelled from the country.

U.S. Embassy spokesman Gilbert Callaway called the charges "absurd" and said the embassy protested the expulsions.

A Foreign Ministry communique — dated the night before but made public Monday — declared the three diplomats "personae non grata" and said they were given 24 hours to leave the country.

Relations between the United States and Nicaragua have deteriorated steadily in the three years since the Sandinista revolution and both governments accuse each other of threatening the peace of Central America. Foreign diplomats here said they would not be surprised if the two countries broke diplomatic relations as a result of the expulsions.

Callaway said the embassy received a note from the Foreign Ministry late Sunday night ordering the diplomats out, but that it was not clear at what time the government started counting the 24 hours. He said the embassy immediately sent a note to the Nicaraguan government denying the charges.

"These accusations are simply absurd and we are protesting energetically to Nicaragua about the expulsion of our three diplomats," Callaway told The Associated Press.

The communique identified the diplomats as Linda M. Pfeifel, an embassy counselor for political affairs; David Noble Greig, a first secretary, and Ermila Rodriguez Rodriguez, a second secretary.

The communique accused them of plotting "criminal activities" against Nicaragua, including attempts on the lives of Sandinista leaders, and of being involved in activities to "destabilize the Sandinista regime."

"The criminal actions that the diplomats were planning to carry out included the organization of attempts on the lives of leaders of the Sandinista revolution and of high-ranking officials of the Nicaraguan government," the communique said.

It claimed that investigations carried out by the Interior Ministry General Administration of State Security "demonstrated" that the diplomats met secretly with a number of prominent Nicaraguans, including Sandinista officials, "to recruit, train, and supply them with the necessary means for the execution of criminal projects."

Former governor enters hospital

SHAWNEE (AP) — Former Kansas Gov. Robert Docking has been hospitalized for treatment of emphysema at Shawnee Mission Medical Center, a hospital spokeswoman said Monday.

The 57-year-old Docking, who was listed in good condition, entered the hospital early last week, spokeswoman Lauren Fassbinder said. She said he was expected to go home later this week.

Docking, who served four two-year terms as governor from January 1967 until January 1975, has been in and out of the hospital several times since early May for treatment of emphysema and adjustment of his medicine, the spokeswoman said.

Docking, the only governor in Kansas history to serve four terms, retired in 1975.

Kassebaum: El Salvador another Vietnam?

WASHINGTON (AP) — Similarities between the El Salvador conflict and the Vietnam war are increasingly evident, and there is a "real risk" that war could engulf other countries in the region, a leading Senate expert on the region said Monday.

"The comparison to Vietnam has been used many times, and I have never felt comfortable with it," said Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan. "But the parallels seem to grow more striking as time goes on."

She raised the possibility that Salvadoran guerillas may be modeling their efforts on the successful guerilla war in Vietnam, including the tactic of drawing the United States into the conflict little by little until U.S. public opinion is split from government policy.

"Is it not possible that by gradually increasing our involvement we are responding in exactly the ways the guerillas want?" asked Kassebaum, a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee who was the architect of a compromise El Salvador aid package accepted unanimously by the panel last month.

The remarks came in a speech to the Overseas Education Fund, a private volunteer development group associated with the League of Women Voters. The group honored Kassebaum for her efforts in getting a $115,000 loan from the Inter-American Development Bank to help a small cooperative in El Castano, El Salvador, buy equipment for its ketchup-making plant.

The U.S. government, with a history of heavy-handed intervention in Central America alternating with long periods of neglect, has within the past year missed great opportunities to deal a "body blow" to the guerillas through land reform and humanitarian and economic aid, she said.

Now, with new indications of "outright terrorism" on the part of the guerillas — such as executions of a U.S. military adviser and of prisoners — and escalating U.S. involvement, the goal of peace faces "new and ominous barriers," she said.

Kassebaum called for a broad new debate on the long-term future of Central America.

"If our vision of the future is clouded, then our choices each day will be made in a fog," she said. "We will continue as we are right now — attempting to muddle through in El Salvador, much as we attempted to muddle through in Vietnam. I cannot overstate the danger of such a course."

Jury clears '60 Minutes' of slander accusation

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A jury decided Monday that CBS, its top-rated "60 Minutes" show and newsman Dan Rather did not slander a doctor who sued for $30 million after a segment linked him to an insurance fraud scheme.

The vote was 10-2 in favor of CBS. In civil trials in California, only nine jurors must agree in order to reach a verdict.

In a hushed, packed courtroom, Superior Court Judge Jack Swink asked jury foreman David Campbell, "Is this your verdict?"

"Yes," Campbell said, handing the verdict forms to court Clerk Annette Yonemura, who then read the verdict.

The jury of nine women and three men had deliberated 10 hours over three days since getting the case last week.

They had returned to the courtroom several times during their talks to view videotapes of the show as well as "outtakes," film that was used in preparing the segment but was never broadcast.

The suit was filed by Dr. Carl Galloway, who claimed he was never involved in any fraud and that "60 Minutes" failed to properly investigate before broadcasting the segment.

"We the jury ... find for the defendants, CBS Inc., Dan Rather and ("60 Minutes" producer) Steven Glauber and against the plaintiff, Carl A. Galloway," the verdict read.

The judge individually polled each juror at the request of Galloway's lawyer, Bruce Friedman. Each answered, "Yes," except for two women, who answered, "No" when asked if this was their verdict.

CBS News issued a statement in New York saying the network was "extremely pleased" by the verdict. "From the outset, were were convinced that a dispassionate examination of the evidence would demonstrate clearly that the broadcast was fair and accurate."

Asked whether he felt the trial had damaged CBS News in any way, Gene Mater, a CBS News executive, said, "No, we don't think so."

Rather was not in the courtroom when the verdict was announced. He was back at his New York anchor desk Monday evening and narrated a brief report on the verdict for the "CBS Evening News."

Galloway, who sat showing no emotion as the verdict was read, told reporters later: "I think incompetence has been vindicated."

Lot's renovation reduces amount of parking space

Although 400 campus parking spaces will be eliminated until August, summer parking problems should be minimal, said Art Stone, director of Security and Traffic. Spaces will be eliminated this summer due to the renovation of the Ackert lot.

At a cost of approximately $260,000, the physical layout of the lot will be completely changed, Doug Elcock, University Facilities accountant, said.

Stone said, "We are adding additional lighting, and there will be only two outlets to the lot. The lot will be divided in half; one half faculty/staff and one half student parking. The number of parking spaces won't be too much different."

Security and Traffic will "more or less allow open parking in parking lots (for those with permits). Students may park in areas designated as staff/faculty and vice versa, until we run into problems," Stone said.

He also said permits purchased last fall or spring will be valid through August. Summer parking permits, good through summer

Government to investigate Posse Comitatus

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The Posse Comitatus has been labeled a "domestic terrorist group" by the federal government, which is about to launch a major nationwide crackdown against it, The Kansas City Times reported Tuesday.

In a copyright story, The Times said federal authorities — including the FBI — have received permission from the Justice Department to conduct wide-ranging investigations of the right-wing organization of tax protesters and paramilitary survivalists.

The Times attributed the information to "well-placed federal law enforcement sources" who refused to be identified.

The death of Gordon Kahl, a Posse Comitatus member who died Friday in a shootout with authorities in Smithville, Ark., apparently cleared the way for broader action by federal authorities against the group, the newspaper said.

Weapon explosion injures 27 Army trainees

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — A light anti-tank weapon exploded during a demonstration for trainees Monday on a southern New Mexico military range, injuring 27 men, Army spokesman Ed Starnes said.

Twenty of the most seriously injured were flown in two military helicopters to William Beaumont Army Medical Center in nearby El Paso for emergency treatment.

There were no fatalities, Starnes said.

"We're in a crisis situation now. There's a lot injured," said a hospital spokesman, who hung up before identifying himself.

Seven other trainees from the 88th Training Brigade, including a West Point Military Academy cadet, were transported by ambulance to the El Paso military hospital.

Soviets report fatalities in passenger ship wreck

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union said Monday that a Volga River ship was "wrecked" the day before, killing an unspecified number of passengers.

The official news agency Tass said the diesel passenger ship Alexander Suvorov was wrecked on the Volga near the city of Ulyanovsk.

Transport accidents are rarely reported here, and Monday night's simultaneous reports by Tass and the evening television news were seen as possible indications of a major shipping accident that killed foreign passengers or high-level Soviet officials.

Watergate's Magruder ordained as minister

BURLINGAME, Calif. (AP) — Watergate conspirator Jeb Stuart Magruder, dressed in a black robe with hood, has been ordained a Presbyterian minister.

Magruder, 48, graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1981, eight years after the Watergate break-in that toppled the presidency of Richard Nixon. Magruder admitted helping plan the burglary while he was deputy director of Nixon's re-election campaign.

The father of four served seven months in prison after pleading guilty to conspiracy.

President Reagan refused to pardon him, but Magruder said he has been pardoned by Jesus Christ. He also credits his vocation in part to his imprisonment.

"Where does faith come from but out of pain?" Magruder said in a telephone interview after his ordination Sunday night at the First Presbyterian Church.

OSHA clears KP&L of blame in fatal explosion

WICHITA (AP) — The Occupational Safety and Health Administration has cleared Kansas Power & Light Co. of any blame in an underground explosion that killed one worker and severely injured another.

The OSHA review of the April 25 incident found no safety violations and concluded the utility's procedures were sound, said Jeff Spahn, OSHA director in Wichita.

Spahn said Monday the investigation concluded that the explosion occurred because of human error or an "isolated equipment incident."

A KP&L review of the incident concluded there was not a malfunction of company equipment, said spokesman Hal Hudson.

Spahn said two padlocks were removed from switches on circuits in an underground utility vault. The explosion occurred when one of the switches moved, leading to a sudden power surge in one of the circuits, Spahn said.

OSHA was not able to determine how the padlocks were removed, Spahn said.

Edwin Devader, a 34-year-old maintenance worker, was killed when he was sprayed with super-heated transformer oil in the explosion. The second worker, 37-year-old Terry Coward, is recovering and is expected to return to work soon, Hudson said.

Plane safety first; costs irrelevant

It is time for the airline industry to put safety above money.

As a result of a fire that killed 23 people aboard an Air Canada DC-9 in Cincinnati on June 2, calls were made for jetliner cabins to be equipped with better flame- and smoke-retardant materials.

The issue is not new. It has been the subject of debate for nearly two decades between federal air safety officials and the aviation industry.

Safety officials have repeatedly warned of the fire danger posed to modern airliners despite the rarity of in-flight fires. The officials claim the cabin interiors are full of flammable items which quickly emit smoke and toxic fumes.

For nearly two decades, the National Transportation Safety Board has issued more than three dozen recommendations dealing with interior cabin fires, but the recommendations have gone virtually unheeded.

Fire detectors in aircraft restrooms were called for by the board in 1973. Unfortunately, as the fire aboard the Air Canada jet showed the world 10 years later, there is no such requirement.

Of little avail were the board's calls for the government to require manufacturers to develop materials for interior walls, and seats which slow the spread of flames and limit the danger from toxic smoke.

The lack of regulations could be suggested by an FAA spokesman's claim that the manufacturers are in a Catch-22 situation: requirements to have the planes equipped with flame-retardant materials posed other dangers — because the flame retardant itself caused toxic fumes and smoke.

Critics of the FAA disagree. They argue the agency has failed to push the industry into using the latest available fire and smoke retardation materials and methods.

Whatever the case, John O'Brien, a safety specialist at the Air Line Pilots Association, said there are materials which will both restrict the spread of flames and reduce the danger of toxic fumes and smoke.

O'Brien thinks he has an explanation to why the airlines don't use these safer materials: "The biggest inhibitor is cost."

Aircraft manufacturers and airlines would agree, except they would obscure that fact by saying further studies are needed to determine what kind of materials should be used.

They say it would cost hundreds of millions of dollars to equip the nation's commercial fleet of more than 2,000 aircrafts with improved fire retardants.

With the airline industry's poor economic health, it's only logical to assume the industry would fight any recommendations or requirements which would be a financial burden.

If this is the case, then the safety of the airline crew and passengers will remain jeopardized.

The safety recommendations and the safer materials must be implemented immediately, despite the costs. The Air Canada tragedy must not happen again.

A gander at the 'Goose'

My apologies to airplane buffs as I regret to say I never knew the Spruce Goose existed — let alone hoped to see it.

But there I was, mingling among thousands of open-mouthed spectators who were on hand to take a gander at Southern California's hottest attraction, next to "Return of the Jedi."

The Spruce Goose is the world's largest aircraft which was commissioned by the late billionaire Howard Hughes during World War II.

It flew only once and then was hidden away — until it opened for public viewing on May 14, in Long Beach, Calif.

Fate worked in strange ways in providing me the opportunity to view the Spruce Goose.

It began when I decided to celebrate my graduation from K-State last May with a vacation to Taft, Calif., to visit my family.

LATER, WE VENTURED on to Long Beach — not to see the Spruce Goose — but rather to lend vocal support to the Taft College baseball team (of which my father is the coach) during its participation in the California Community College State Baseball Championships.

It was after the playoffs did the Spruce Goose literally came into the picture.

My mother showed me a newpaper clipping with a picture of the wide, wooden seaplane and asked if I would be interested in seeing it.

I hesitatingly said yes — simply because of the fact Disneyland and the beaches also were in the neighborhood.

Nevertheless, it happened.

Those who plan to visit the Spruce Goose should not worry about the rush on the California freeways. Instead, their concern should lie in surviving the lines of people waiting to buy tickets, which cost $6 for adults.

How long are these lines? Listen to what Gerry Huckaby, spokesman for Wrather Port Properties, which owns the plane and the adjacent Queen Mary yacht-hotel, had to say in a statement made during the plane's grand opening.

"WE WERE HOPING we would be so successful in terms of the crowd that we would regret it. There are so many people out there, it's almost impossible to keep ticket lines straight."

How true.

However, the waiting's worth it once you get inside the world's largest free-standing dome, which serves as a display hall for the plane and other attractions at several booths surrounding the plane.

The all-aluminum dome has a diameter of 415 feet and an above-ground height of 130 feet.

But the Spruce Goose...

"They're calling it the oh-my-God plane because everybody, when they first see it, says, 'Oh my God!'" Huckaby also was reported saying.

Spotlights of varying colors illuminate the Spruce Goose — giving it a concert-like atmosphere. Entertainment is provided for people waiting in another long line leading to the cockpit and the plane's interior.

THERE IS EVEN a Howard Hughes look-alike milling about greeting the visitors.

An epitome of Hughes' eccentricity may well be the jumbo plane he built and its storied past.

Henry J. Kaiser, a shipbuilder, and Hughes founded the Kaiser-Hughes Corp. and received an $18 million government contract to construct three prototype flying boats. Kaiser figured it would be the answer to avoid the menace of the Nazi submarine wolfpacks that were sinking many of his freighters in the North Atlantic.

It was stipulated that no metal would be used to build the plane, as it was in short supply and needed for existing wartime projects.

It is ironic that no spruce was used. Instead, mostly birch and plywood was used in building the 219-foot-long plane which has a wingspan of 319 feet. Its tail towers eight stories.

The name Spruce Goose (which Hughes despised) was coined by a senator during a 1947 congressional hearing who charged that "it was nothing but a spruce goose meant to funnel money into the Hughes Aircraft Co."

The eight-engine, 200-ton seaplane, officially named the Hercules H-4, was scoffed at by those who refused to believe such a huge wooden aircraft could fly.

Hughes was then determined to prove them wrong.

On Nov. 7, 1947, Hughes thundered the Spruce Goose down Long Beach Harbor on two taxi runs. On the third try, he launched the plane on a 60-second, 1,700-yard flight cruise 70 feet above the harbor — a flight which stands as one of the most memorable flights in aviation history.

The plane was then hidden away for 33 years in a special air-conditioned hangar when the government would not order it into production — simply because war ended.

When Summa Corp., Hughes' holding company, could no longer afford to preserve the plane, it leased it to the Wrather Corp. Wrather had but two months to move the plane, as the hangar was leased to another company.

On Oct. 29, 1980, the Spruce Goose was revealed as it was moved to another storage area for some time until its final move to the dome on Feb. 11, 1982.

Since it cost the Wrather Corp. $12 million to prepare the exhibit, one would have to wonder whether it was worth all the troubles and costs.

But having been overwhelmed by the sight of this majestic behemoth, I think such a display of aviation history is well-deserved.

Arts in the Park season debuts with new stage

Lights, camera, action! OK, roll 'em!

Although there will be no cameras or filming, the action begins tonight as Manhattan's Parks and Recreation Department launches the 10th season of Arts in the Park. Performances will be enhanced by the completion of a permanent stage in City Park, constructed solely for the summer program.

"Everything's going up and we've got to be ready to roll," said Tim Vanatta, director of the Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department.

Currently, the cedar and redwood structure is complete, with the exception of electrical wiring and sound equipment. The parks and recreation crews, who built the stage, are also responsible for the completion of the project, Vanatta said.

Plans for a permanent, more elaborate home for Arts in the Park performances have always been considered, but a way of building the structure in a cost-effective manner was only recently proposed.

The project, which began in February, cost approximately $8,000. According to Vanatta, a contractor's proposed price on a similar structure ranged near $25,000. Funding for the project was provided by the city.

The Parks and Recreation Department made a proposal to construct the stage and submitted a design to the city.

"It's (the stage) a little contemporary, but the cedar and redwood blend in well with our setting," Vanatta said.

Although the new stage will enhance Arts in the Park performances, the central location of the park itself benefits the project.

"The central location of City Park is very conducive for this type of program," Don Cukjati, supervisor of fine arts for the Parks and Recreation Department, said.

"I think there were 30,000 people that went through the program last year. The Trinidad Steel Band last year, I understand, had them (the audience) literally hanging from the trees.

"I don't think there is any town in Kansas with as extensive a program as Manhattan's," he added.

As more interest was generated in the community, the program's size and content increased.

"This year we tried to pick a variety of shows to please everybody," Cukjati said.

Included in the summer schedule are several performers from national tours, local bands, a local talent night, an arts and crafts festival and municipal band concerts each Tuesday night. More than 70 children of all ages — including high school students — will participate in the production of the Broadway play, "Guys and Dolls." Another feature for younger audiences includes a children's theater and movies offered every Wednesday.

Although admission to the shows will be free, artists are paid for performing, Cukjati said. National tour performers, which cost between $1,500 and $3,000 per show, are co-sponsored by the Department of Music, the Student Governing Association and the city.

Because the University aids in funding, national tour shows will be presented in the Union the same day the Arts in the Park performance is scheduled, Cukjati said.

Local performances are funded by the Local 169 of the American Federation of Musicians, Cukjati said.

Bengals sign Nebraska's Rimington

CINCINNATI (AP) — Nebraska center Dave Rimington, the only college football player to win the Outland Trophy two consecutive years, has signed a National Football League contract with the Cincinnati Bengals.

Neither Rimington nor Bengals General Manager Paul Brown would reveal any terms of the contract, which was announced Monday. But both said they were happy with the deal.

"I've tried to stay out of the negotiations," said Rimington, the Bengals' first-round pick and the 25th player taken in the college draft. "I probably would have taken anything they offered — that's the reason I stay away from it and have an agent.

"I'm just happy I have a chance to play in the NFL. I never really thought about the USFL seriously. I'm glad I'm a Cincinnati Bengal."

Brown said Rimington, at 6-foot-3 and 285 pounds, was impressive at the Bengals' minicamp last month. He would not say that Rimington has an edge on veteran Bengals center Blair Bush, but he made it clear he likes Rimington's size and muscle.

"We think of him (Rimington) as a center," Brown said, although Rimington said he has been told he might be asked to learn to play guard in some situations.

"He's about the fastest, quickest, biggest combination man we ever had. We have our hopes up that he's everything that we've seen, and I'm sure he is.

"This should solidify and help our offensive line. That's very important to us, because we have a very valuable quarterback (Ken Anderson) that we spend a lot of effort to protect."

Rimington said he was afraid his bargaining power was diminished when he wasn't picked sooner in the draft. Brown assured him the Bengals hold him in high regard.

"Dave, I should tell you that there is about one guy every year in the draft that this happens to, a tremendous player," Brown said. "It just happens...it's just the run of the luck.

"Don't feel for one minute that we don't respect you because you were the 25th guy taken; you were the first center."

Sherman shoots par, captures U.S. Open trials

PRAIRIE VILLAGE (AP) — Amateur John Sherman of Kansas City, Mo., shot even par and bested 33 other golfers to win U.S. Open sectional qualifying medalist honors Monday at Indian Hills Country Club.

Sherman, a 21-year-old member of the University of Missouri golf team, qualified for his first U.S. Open by shooting matching 70s on the 6,464-yard course.

Jeff Hunter, an unattached professional from St. Louis, finished one stroke behind at 141 and also qualified for the Open. He shot an opening-round 71, followed with a 70 over the final 18 holes and just missed medalist honors when Sherman birdied the final hole.

Royals choose top prep star

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The Kansas City Royals selected high school outfielder Gary Thurman of Indianapolis in the first round of the amateur free agent draft Monday.

It was the first time in five years that the American League team had not made a college player their No. 1 selection in the regular phase of the draft.

Thurman, an 18-year-old right-handed hitter, led North Central High School to a 23-1 record and a No. 1 ranking in Indiana this spring, batting .410 with 10 home runs and 25 stolen bases. He was the 21st player taken in the draft.

tion they were not identified for their own safety, said security agents arrested Enrique Sotelo Borgen, an opposition Democratic Conservative Party leader, at his Managua home at dawn Monday.

The sources said they did not know if the arrest was connected with the expulsion of the diplomats.

It was not immediately known whether the expulsions will affect a visit here Friday by U.S. presidential envoy Richard Stone. Stone was appointed by President Reagan to try negotiate peace between warring leftist and rightist factions in Central America.

school, will cost $5 for cars and motorcycles.

Various lots on campus will be closed throughout this week to re-paint lines.

The asphalt area of the West Stadium lot (D1 on parking lot maps) will be closed for striping on Wednesday. Gravel areas will be open for parking. On Thursday, parking lots east of Anderson Hall; east of Shellenberger Hall (A23); the Call Hall lot (B12); and the lot behind Seaton Hall (A24 and A25), are scheduled to be closed for striping.

"We hope that by the end of the week, we'll pretty much be done with striping," Stone said. "We're going to try to stripe all the parking lots and resident hall lots. We will be getting to those (resident hall lots) throughout the summer. Weather has a lot to do with how much we can get done."

Security and Traffic is also working on replacing signs in the lots.

"We're trying to make things more uniform and nicer to look at, so we've set a color scheme and format for the signs," Stone said. "Our first priority is the Ackert lot and after that, the signs."

Federal grand jury indicts former Kansas official

TOPEKA (AP) — A Topeka federal grand jury Tuesday indicted Donald R. Hoffman, former assistant Kansas attorney general, as an alleged participant in a kickback conspiracy involving reorganization of a failed Johnson County savings and loan association.

The two-count indictment, announced by U.S. Attorney Jim J. Marquez, alleges Hoffman and two others conspired to commit mail fraud in two Missouri real estate sales in 1976-78, and aided and abetted in the interstate transportion of money acquired by fraudulent means.

The six-page indictment alleges Hoffman, now in private law practice here, was to receive $15,000 of a $54,310 kickback from $217,240 in fraudulently-obtained real estate commissions on the sale of Liberty Farms in Clay County and the Valley Y Ranch in Barry County, both in Missouri.

Valley Y is a 4,000-acre cattle ranch near Cassville, Mo.

The indictment also alleges the $15,000 was destined for Hoffman's planned campaign for the Democratic nomination for attorney general in 1978. Hoffman never made that race, because his boss, Attorney General Curt T. Schneider, sought reelection after first considering a race for governor.

Also indicted were Jerold E. Berger, also an attorney in private practice here, and Robert H. Tanner, a Wichita accountant. All three indicted men are 39 years old.

Named as unindicted co-conspirators were William Craig Hutton, a former attorney who turned state's evidence in this case, and Edwin Gregory Thompson, a Kansas City realtor and former owner of the defunct Kansas City Scouts hockey team.

Hoffman, who served as an assistant attorney general under Schneider in 1975-79, tried unsuccessfully for the state Senate in 1980, losing a race against Republican Ron Hein of Topeka by a 2-to-1 margin.

"I have no comment," Hoffman said. "I will let my lawyers comment on it. I would say it is untrue and inaccurate."

Marquez, a Republican, said the indictments culminated a three-year investigation involving his office, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Kansas Bureau of Investigation and the Kansas attorney general's office, which Republican Robert T. Stephan won from Schneider in 1978.

The investigation began when James P. Buchele, a Topeka Democrat, was U.S. attorney for Kansas, Marquez said. Buchele is now a Shawnee County District Court judge.

The alleged conspiracy involved sale of the two properties owned by the financially troubled Kansas Savings and Loan Association of Roeland Park, Kan., which was reorganized and is now Century Savings Association of Kansas.

"The indictment does not involve anyone currently associated with Century Savings Association of Kansas, nor does it in any way reflect upon the solvency of the asssociation," Marquez said in announcing the indictments.

The indictment alleges that Hoffman and the others were involved in 21 overt acts in furthering an allegedly fraudulent scheme to obtain the $54,310 in kickbacks from the commissions on the sales of the two properties owned by Kansas Savings.

It alleges that Hoffman, as chief of litigation in the attorney general's office at the time, recommended that Jack Estes, then the Kansas banking commissioner, appoint Hutton first as trustee of the failing savings and loan and then as receiver. Estes did name Hutton.

It also alleges Hoffman and Hutton recommended that Berger be appointed to the board of directors of Kansas Savings and that Tanner be named as the outside, independent auditor for the troubled company.

It says that during late August or early September of 1977, Hoffman, Tanner and Hutton "met and discussed means to defraud Kansas Association including obtaining the services of a cooperating realtor."

It further says that Tanner recommended to Hoffman, Berger and Hutton that Thompson be employed as the realtor "to assist in the sale of certain real properties owned by Kansas Association."

Tanner, Hutton and Thompson met at a racquet club in Westwood, Kan., in September 1977, the indietment says, and agreed that Thompson "would receive commissions from the sales thereof, even though he would not negotiate or induce said sales, and would 'kick back' 25 percent of his commission to the defendants and his co-conspirator, William Craig Hutton."

It further alleges that in November 1977, February 1978 and June 1978, Thompson received three "partial unearned commission" payments totaling $217,240, "25 percent of which commission he kicked back to defendants and co-conspirator."

It says that during December 1977, the alleged conspirators "agreed that defendant Robert H. Tanner would, and Robert H. Tanner did, hold approximately $15,000 to be used for the benefit of the defendant Donald R. Hoffman in his planned campaign for attorney general of the state of Kansas."

The second count alleges that Hoffman,

Vet conference shows increase in attendance

By KAY HUNTER
Staff Writer

Change occurs every day in veterinary medicine. To keep up-to-date on changes and to acquire continuing education credits necessary for license recertification, 430 veterinarians and their spouses have been on campus attending an annual conference featuring respiratory diseases.

The conference officially began Monday at the College of Veterinary Medicine and continues through noon today. The number attending is 25 more than a year ago, going opposite the national trend, said Dr. Homer Caley, extension veterinarian and chairman of continuing education for veterinarians.

"In other states, the number of professionals attending meetings like this have dropped 10 to 40 percent, he said. "In the past four years our attendance has more than doubled.

"We attribute this increase to our new facility and the loyalty of our K-State graduates. Our veterinary students are closely associated with one another. Our faculty are friends, as well as colleagues. There are no professional walls between them as there are between some veterinarians in other states," Caley said.

Veterinarians practicing in Kansas must have at least 20 hours of continuing education conferences to have their license recertified.

"This amount varies from state to state," Caley explained. "Many of the veterinarians we have registered acquire more than 20 hours of credit. I'd say there are only maybe 5 percent of them who have just the minimum."

Computers are becoming more important in veterinary medicine. Dr. William Fortney, assistant professor of veterinary surgery and medicine, addressed the group on Monday about computer use. To be able to use a computer one must understand the language, Fortney said.

"A computer is like a car sitting in the driveway," he said. "There are an infinite number of things it can do, but it needs a driver.

(See CONFERENCE, p. 8)

Fleas and flea allergy... was one of the many topics being discussed as 430 veterinarians attended the annual veterinary conference Tuesday at the Veterinary Medicine Complex. According to Marvin Samuelson, professor of veterinary surgery and medicine, dusting one's pet with 5 percent Sevin or using a flea collar can be a good way of controlling flea problems.

United States retaliates, expels Nicaraguans

WASHINGTON (AP) — In swift and sweeping retaliation for the expulsion of three American diplomats from Nicaragua, the United States on Tuesday ordered 21 Nicaraguan diplomats to leave the country and closed six consulates it said had been used for spying.

"The Nicaraguan government's precipitate action in expelling U.S. officials, giving them an unreasonably short deadline for leaving the country, and then the public show staged (in Managua) on June 6, called in our opinion for a strong response," said Rush Taylor, a spokesman at the State Department.

"An important additional consideration was the Nicaraguan government's use of its consulates for intelligence operations," Taylor said.

Word of the U.S. action was passed to Nicaraguan Ambassador Antonio Jarquin during a chilly 15-minute interview with James H. Michel, acting assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs.

Taylor did not explain further the accusation that the consulates had been used for intelligence operations. Another official, who would not be identified, would say only that the consulates were "being used very actively" for intelligence gathering.

At the Nicaraguan embassy, Minister-Counselor Manuel Cordero, the deputy chief of mission, said the heads of all six regular Nicaraguan consulates, in New York, New Orleans, Miami, Houston, Los Angeles and San Francisco, had been given until 4 p.m. Wednesday to leave the country and the other officials and all dependents until Friday. All those expelled are consular officers, though some work at the embassy.

He said 50 to 60 Nicaraguans, including family members, would have to depart. That would leave active only the embassy in Washington, the U.N. mission in New York and honorary consuls in Santa Barbara and Santurce, Puerto Rico.

The three Americans — Linda M. Pfeifel, a counselor for political affairs at the U.S. Embassy in Managua; David Noble Greig, a first secretary; and Ermila Rodriguez, a second secretary — spent Monday night in Guatemala City, met reporters during a two-hour stopover in Miami and were driven off in government cars without speaking when they arrived in Washington at midafternoon.

Hoffman

Berger and Tanner "did unlawfully, willfully and feloniously transport and cause to be transported in interstate commerce from the state of Kansas to the state of Nevada" about $10,300, "knowing the same to have been taken by fraud."

During the period of the reorganization of the savings and loan, first Berger and then Hoffman served as chief attorney for Century Savings, the indictment says.

Marquez said the first count, conspiracy to commit mail fraud, carries possible maximum penalties of five years in prison and a $10,000 fine, while the second count carries possible maximums of 10 years in prison and a fine of $10,000.

The indictment requested that the trial for the three men be held in U.S. District Court in Kansas City, Kan.

Hutton pleaded guilty in May 1981 in Johnson County District Court to one count of theft by deception in a credit card theft case. He was placed on probation, agreed to make restitution and surrendered his license to practice law in Kansas. In return, he was granted immunity from further federal prosecution.

Homeowners petition city, request changes in parking

The Manhattan City Commission on Tuesday appointed a committee to handle a request from residents on Grandview Drive, immediately west of Sunset Avenue and south of Anderson Avenue, for parking regulation changes similar to those east of campus.

Currently, residents on the east end of campus, bounded by North Manhattan Avenue to North Ninth Street, and Bluemont Avenue to Claflin Avenue, must obtain permits from the property's owner or manager, who must obtain them from the city clerk's office. A permit is needed to park in that area from 2 a.m. until 9 a.m.

City Engineer Jerry Petty said a letter from the residents asked for the regulations. However, the regulations for east of campus were tailor-made to handle the long-term storage (parking) problem of students' cars, he said.

Commissioner Dave Fiser added that the regulation is having a "domino effect" because it worked in one area.

The commission also heard a request from Flinthills Breadbasket for $2,000 to purchase a new walk-in freezer. The group was started in April 1982 to receive and distribute food donations.

The request originated after an individual said he would donate $2,000 toward the purchase price of a walk-in freezer.

The reason given for needing the new freezer was lack of space. With produce coming in from Farmers' Market, private individuals and grocery stores, the three small freezers the organization is using now do not have enough capacity.

Commissioner Suzanne Lindamood moved the city match the private donation, which was seconded by Commissioner Gene Klingler, after an amendment to raise the amount to $2,500 was suggested. The amended motion passed.

Another item the commission dealt with concerned summer mosquito control. Tim Vanatta, parks and recreation director, said his staff, in working with the Department of Entomology, has become better educated in how to take larvae samples.

East German court sentences former SS officer

BERLIN — An East German court sentenced former Nazi SS officer Heinz Barth to life imprisonment Tuesday, calling him a "murderous riflemen" who helped massacre 734 villagers in France and Czechoslovakia during World War II.

The maximum penalty under East German law is death by firing squad, but the prosecution asked for a life term. Court officials declined to speculate on why the death sentence was not sought.

The Communist East German government could parole Barth after he serves a minimum 15 years. But chances of that appeared slim.

Blow from baseball kills Bonner Springs boy

BONNER SPRINGS — Teammates of an 11-year-old boy who died Monday, three days after a baseball hit him in the head during practice, say they want to win as many games as possible this season for their friend.

Jerry Bredwell, who coaches the Bonner Springs team, said after the death of Kerry Lee Roberts, "At first I wanted to quit...But the team talked about it, and they want to play the rest of the season and win as many games as they can — for Kerry."

The Bonner Springs boy was playing third base Friday night when a line drive ricocheted off the top of his glove and hit him above the right ear. Doctors said the youth died of a burst artery in his brain caused by the baseball's impact.

After the accident, "he slapped the dust out of his glove disgustedly, like he'd embarrassed himself in front of 12 or 13 other boys," said Bredwell, who is president of Commercial State Bank in Bonner Springs.

"It didn't knock him out. It didn't swell up," said the boy's father, Keith Roberts. He said he and his wife, Karen, took their son to a doctor after practice, but he could find nothing wrong.

However, about 9 p.m., nearly four hours after the accident, the father said he heard a thud and found his son lying unconscious on the floor. The boy never regained consciousness and died at Providence-St. Margaret Health Center in Kansas City, Kan. Doctors performed surgery on Kerry Roberts twice late Friday in an effort to stop the bleeding.

Elton John 'just another tourist' in China

PEKING — British musical superstar Elton John, wearing a two-carat diamond in his left ear, strolled anonymously through Mao Tse-tung's mausoleum Tuesday and observed, "He looks pink, but Lenin looks yellow."

John, who staged a concert in Moscow four years ago and was mobbed by fans, is just another tourist in China.

In this country of one billion people almost no one knows his music or his face. The masses are warned against decadent and corrupting Western music.

"It is so relaxing here," John said in an interview. "This is the only place I could possibly go without being hassled or asked for my autograph, except for the odd American or European.

House Democrats rally behind tax cut limit bill

WASHINGTON — Savoring the makings of a major issue for the 1984 elections, House Democrats rallied Tuesday behind a plan to limit this year's tax cut to a maximum of $700 per family. Republicans were quick to claim that middle-income Americans would be hurt the most.

The limit backed by Democrats would result in lowering the tax reduction for a typical family of four, with two wage earners, whose income is in the $50,000-a-year range, and for single people making a minimum of $32,000.

Calling President Reagan's tax cut program a boon for the rich, Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill said he expects the House to pass some kind of limitation within the next few days, despite Reagan's veto threat.

Because it's a question of fairness, O'Neill said after a closed Democratic caucus, it will be difficult for the Republican-led Senate to vote against the limit, especially because 18 GOP seats will be at stake in next year's elections.

ABC comes in first in race for Nielsen ratings

LOS ANGELES — ABC had only three shows in the Top 10, but edged ahead to win the Nielsen television ratings for the week ending June 5, when reruns filled the network schedule.

ABC had placed third last week in the television ratings. NBC, last week's winner, dropped back into the cellar. CBS finished second both weeks.

The top-rated show was ABC's "Hart to Hart." The comedy "9 to 5" tied for sixth place with NBC's "The A-Team," and the ABC Theatre production of "Ghost Dancing," starring Dorothy McGuire, tied for eighth.

NBC also had three shows in the Top 10 and CBS had four.

Weather

Time to head out to Tuttle — after classes, of course. The forecast — mostly sunny Wednesday, highs in the low to mid-80s and south winds 10 to 15 mph. It will be fair Wednesday night and Thursday with lows around 60 and highs 85 to 90.

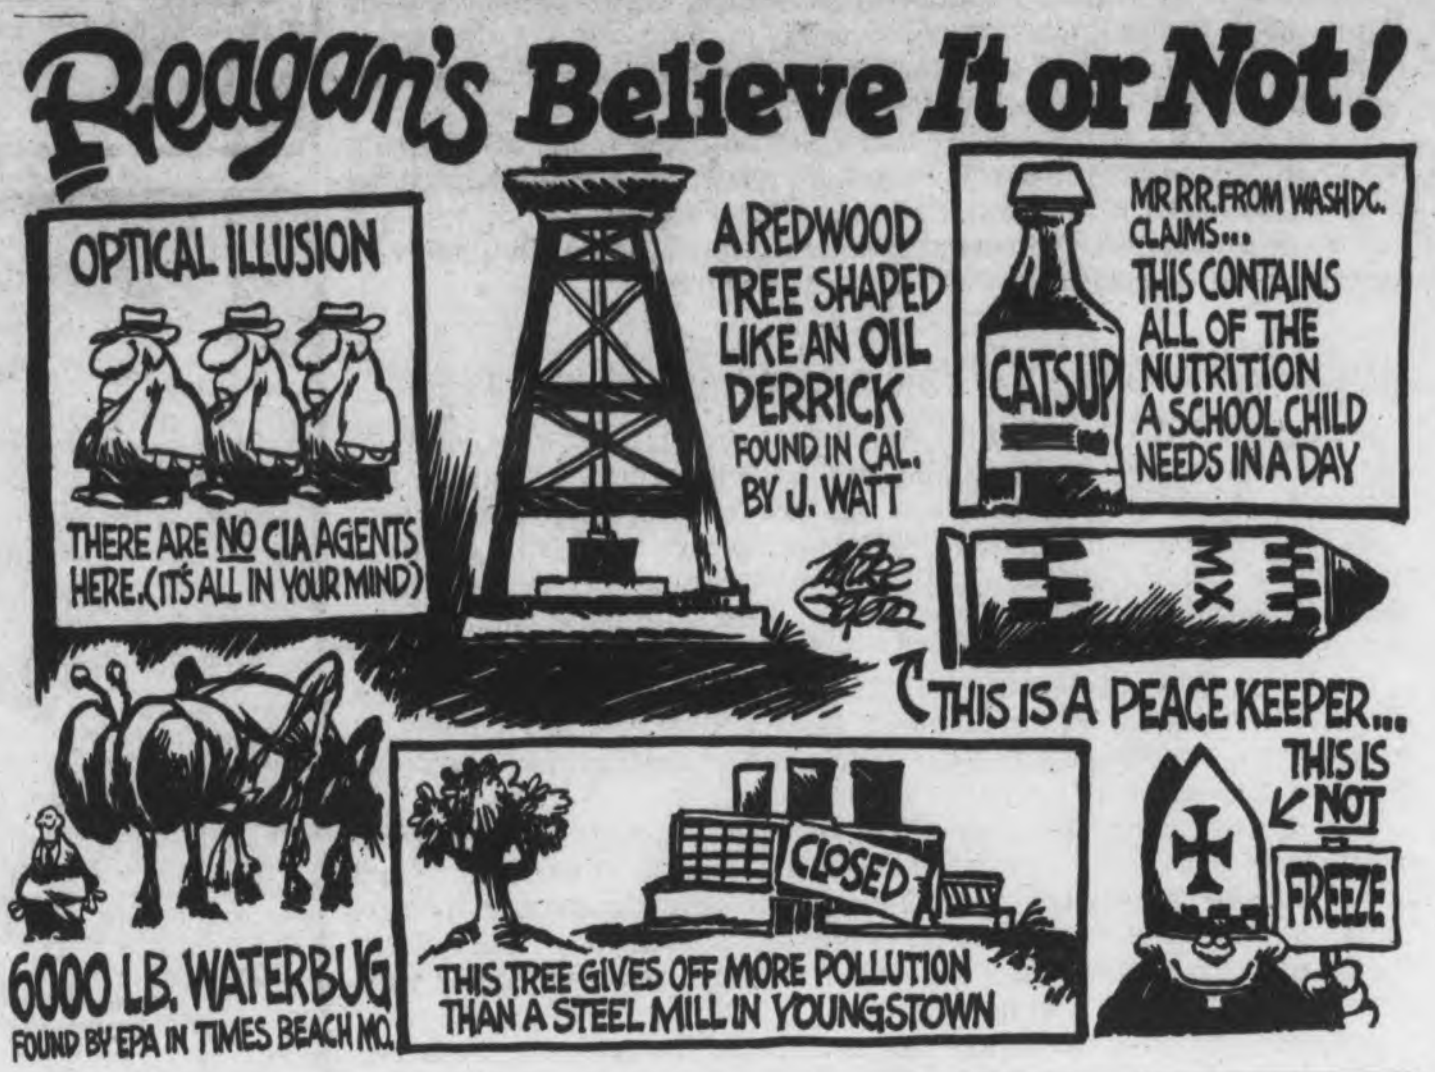
UAB action right; penalty warranted

The University Activities Board was correct in denying registration to Maranatha Christian Assembly for the 1983-84 school year.

The Student Organization Grievance Committee held a closed hearing May 3 to investigate a complaint against MCA. UAB voted May 11 to not register the group.

An organization not registered with UAB is considered an off-campus organization and must pay to use the All-Faiths Chapel or the Union.

MCA was found to be in violation of four UAB guidelines. These violations include: a lack of "honesty in publicity" in connection with a ticket sale for "Chariots of Fire" and a seminar by Rice Broocks; failing to file notices about fund-raisers with UAB four weeks in advance; and the use of a survey ("Forerunner") during registration in order to gather names and addresses of students.



These charges are serious, but the most serious charge filed against MCA was that its faculty adviser, Gary Johnson, associate professor of electrical engineering, "has failed to attend meetings, be cognizant of all organizational activities, be aware of the financial status of the organization and affirm that the organization meets specified membership and other requirements."

These four violations warrant the denial of registration. A faculty adviser must know what his group is doing. The failure of a faculty adviser to fulfill the UAB requirements means the adviser isn't really an adviser — just a name on a piece of paper. If the adviser of any registered group isn't fulfilling the UAB requirements, then the adviser should be removed.

The report noted: "It is concluded that the faculty adviser did not meet any of the obligations set forth in the UAB bylaws. We recommend that regardless of the outcome of the present grievance, the faculty adviser be asked to step down...."

MCA should accept the UAB decision and seek a new faculty adviser. If the group is willing to correct its problems, as Mike Godwin, MCA elder and campus minister, said, then one year should give MCA enough time to do so.

'Lakin' it in southwest Kansas

Before I begin, I would like to set the record straight. Lakin is a small town in southwest Kansas. It is located 27 miles west of Garden City, 50 miles east of Colorado and 70 miles north of Oklahoma. There is really nothing north of us except Interstate 70 and Nebraska.

People always ask me where I'm from, and now you know. Most people, when asked, can just say, "I'm from Kansas City," or "I'm from Wichita." I'm not that lucky. I used to always just say, "I'm from Lakin." That doesn't work. When I say that, most people just give me a blank stare. I might as well say, "I'm from Mars."

For a while I stopped telling people "I'm from Lakin." I would only say, "I'm from southwest Kansas." That didn't work because then people would ask me what town I was from, and I would end up saying "I'm from Lakin." Then I would get the same blank stare.

Finally, I thought of the perfect answer — "I'm from Lakin, a small town in southwest Kansas, 27 miles west of Garden City, 50 miles east of Colorado and 70 miles north of Oklahoma." This approach seems to work. Instead of getting blank stares, now people nod their heads and mumble, "Oh yeah, I know where that is." Or, "Out in the middle of nowhere, huh?"

Not much goes on in Lakin. The wheat harvest is probably the biggest event for the area. So when Lakin makes the news, it's really big news. A tornado went through town Saturday night. And would you believe it? On Sunday, The Associated Press wrote a story about it. Stories are always coming over the AP wire datelined Washington, Kansas City or Wichita, but it's a rare ocassion indeed when a story is datelined Lakin.

Well, it happened the other day. Sunday, I had just walked into the newsroom and glanced at the AP machine, and there it was: LAKIN, Kan. (AP). I stopped cold in my tracks and a strange feeling came over me. It was the same feeling I get when someone in my family calls me at 4:30 in the morning. I always think, "Who died?"

THERE IT WAS in black and white — Lakin had been struck by a tornado. I wasn't terribly concerned, there were only two injuries and my parents live 10 miles outside of town, so I knew our place probably didn't get hit.

The first thing I did, of course, was call home. Dad answered and I demanded, "Tell me about the tornado. Why didn't you call? I was scared to death!"

"What tornado?" he said.

So it goes, when you live way out in the country.

I was surprised to see Lakin getting some coverage by a real news agency. All my life, I've noticed that our little town is always overlooked by the news and weather services. This probably happens because no one thinks there are enough people out there to amount to anything.

Although it was a real thrill to see a story about Lakin in print, a few things really bothered me. There were stories about the storm both Sunday and Monday by the AP. At the end of Sunday's story, it read, "Lakin is a town in southwest Kansas, population 1,800." In Monday's paper it read, "Lakin is about 20 miles west of Garden City." I was hoping the next story would have read, "Lakin is a small town 50 miles east of Colorado and 70 miles north of Oklahoma."

One of the main problems with being from Lakin is that it is so far from Manhattan. When I drive home for the weekend, it's a 12-hour round trip. Most people think it must be a boring drive, but actually, it's really pretty.

That's one of the big misconceptions about southwest Kansas. Most people — especially those from Kansas City who think Salina is near the Colorado border — think of southwest Kansas as the armpit of human civilization. The term conjures up images of vast wasteland, deserts, endless small towns and cattle. When they think of southwest Kansas they think of ugliness. They think flatness. They think of boredom.

I CAN'T AGREE with that kind of thinking. In fact, I'm tired of people putting down that part of the state. To me southwest Kansas is beautiful. The rolling plains covered with buffalo grass possess their own kind of beauty. The trees, though few, spring up here and there, usually in a river bottom, or near a town or farm.

And the fields. Back home our fields are big, like they are supposed to be. I can still remember when I first saw the little wheat fields in the Flint Hills. I wondered aloud if it was even worth the time to try to plow them.

As much as I love the Flint Hills, I still hold a special place in my heart for the flatness of southwest Kansas. Many say it's boring out there, and that's another point I have to dispute. In Lakin we have the sand pits to swim in. Pure fun. The sand pits are provided by sand companies that dig sand up to sell and then fill up the void with water.

And let's talk about nightlife. Lakin has all the nightlife a person could ever want. We have three, count 'em, three bars in town right now, and I heard a rumor that another one is opening soon. My personal favorite is the Schwindt's Tumbleweed Inn. The Tumbleweed is located on Highway 50, and though it isn't Aggieville or Westport, it has its claim to fame. The 'Weed is famous for the "Big Red." For those of you who aren't connoisseurs, the Big Red is a fishbowl of the coldest Coors this side of Colorado mixed with tomato juice. Then you add Tabasco and salt to taste.

I wonder if the tornado hit the 'Weed. Are Marguerite and Fonda still making Big Reds? Is the cold beer still there?

When I think of it like that, then maybe the tornado was a true disaster.

Photographer Souza joins White House staff

A former K-State graduate student, Pete Souza, was recently chosen to be one of four White House photographers.

Souza, a native of Massachusetts and a graduate of Boston University, left K-State in 1979 to work for the Hutchinson News. Souza also worked for the Chanute Tribune before being hired by the Chicago Sun-Times.

Although Souza, 28, has won numerous awards for his work, his top honor came when he was recently named Chicago Press Photographer of the Year. While at the Chanute Tribune, Souza was named regional press photographer of the year.

Acker has third edition of textbook published

A third edition of "Animal Science and Industry," a textbook by President Duane Acker, has been published by Prentice-Hall Publishers. Previous editions have been used nationwide in schools of agriculture.

Acker taught an introductory course in animal science in the fall of 1978, with one purpose being to help him with the revision of the book. The 658-page book was written to be used as a text at universities and community colleges for the introductory course in animal science.

K-State obtains same honor as Harvard, Yale

Harvard, Yale and K-State were the only three universities to have two Truman Scholars in each of the last two years.

The $20,000 awards, created by Congress in 1977 to honor former President Harry S. Truman, are made to promising college sophomores who plan to enter careers in public service and government at the local, state or national levels.

Approximately 100 Truman Scholars are chosen annually with one student recipient from each state and the others at-large selections.

1983 recipients were Tracy Turner, sophomore in economics; and Brad Russell, sophomore in pre-law. Mike Gibson, junior in pre-law; and David Carlin, junior in political science, received the scholarships in 1982.

Lecture series to stress student development

A lecture series in the Department of Student Development has been created in honor of Chester Peters, vice president for Student Affairs.

Operated in connection with the College of Education, the program will provide an opportunity for students and faculty to have the benefit of personal contact with outstanding scholars recognized for contributions to literature in the fields of college student personnel administration and student development.

Cultural arts magazine receives $2,000 grant

"Kansas Quarterly," a cultural arts magazine edited and published at K-State, was awarded a $2,000 grant by the Kansas Arts Commission. The grant will aid in the publication of the magazine in 1983-84.

The magazine is distributed in the United States and 15 foreign countries.

Alumnus inaugurated as university's chancellor

John Brooks Slaughter has been inaugurated third chancellor of the University of Maryland at College Park, one of the nation's 10 largest universities.

Slaughter graduated from K-State in 1956 with a degree in electrical engineering and received the K-State Distinguished Service Award in Engineering in 1981.

Teen-agers being watched after friends commit suicide

NORTH SALEM, N.Y. (AP) — Teachers, parents and psychologists in this small town are keeping watch over several potentially suicidal teen-agers, after two high school sweethearts hanged themselves using the same method as a character in their favorite movie.

In the agonizing aftermath of the deaths, some of the youths now being watched had talked about committing suicide. One was hospitalized for psychiatric observation Monday night, said Dr. Samuel Klajsbrun, a psychologist at Four Winds Hospital in this Westchester County community.

The first suicide occurred May 14 when 17-year-old Cathy Ann Petruso, last year's homecoming queen, hanged herself with her own belt in the rest room of a drive-in movie theater in nearby Danbury, Conn. Friends say she had been quarreling with her boyfriend, 17-year-old William Shott.

On Sunday, Shott hanged himself the same way in the bathroom of his home.

Friends said that the couple had gone several times to see the movie "An Officer and a Gentleman," in which a man hangs himself after the end of his romance with a woman.

School superintendent William Toll said officials had wanted to hospitalize Shott, whom a psychologist had been treating for depression, but lacked the authority. He said the youth "was acting normally."

On Monday night, school officials and psychologists met in the high school library with 40 parents of students considered "to be at high or moderate risk of suicide or emotionally unstable," according to Toll.

Miss Petruso, Toll said, "had everything going for her ... beauty, brains. She was outgoing, a good athlete. She'd been accepted at a college. But she killed herself in the most horrible fashion possible, and they can't make any sense of it.

Airplane crash kills Kansas man

PITTSBURG (AP) — A Pittsburg man died Tuesday night a few hours after his ultralight aircraft fell 150 feet and crashed near the main runway of Atkinson Municipal Airport, authorities said.

Police identified the victim as Mark K. Montgomery, 23. The crash occurred about 8:15 p.m., and he died about two hours later at Mt. Carmel Medical Center in Pittsburg.

Police Capt. John Duggan said a witness reported that Montgomery's ultralight was flying 150 feet above the airport when it tilted to a 45-degree angle and fell to the ground.

The cause of the crash was under investigation.

Conference

"A program is a computer's driver. You need to know the language to program the computer." Fortney said.

A complete computer for personal use will cost less than $5,000 while a business will require one more than $5,000, he said. He advised buying a computer that understands BASIC (beginning, all-purpose, symbolic, instructive code), rather than a higher language such as Cobal or Fortran.

Before buying a computer, Fortney told the veterinarians to ask themselves some questions such as what they would use it for, ease of use, compatability of software and amount of storage needed. He advised buying a computer with a keyboard like a typewriter, because those who could type would know the keyboard.

During the table topic discussions on Tuesday, heartworm disease in dogs was discussed by Dr. Kim Knowles, instructor of veterinary surgery and medicine.

Heartworm disease begins when dogs are bitten by mosquitoes. It occurs most often in male dogs that are three to seven years old, Knowles said.

"The congestive (clogging) type of heartworm disease is seen most often in large breeds such as Great Danes and German shepherds, while the hypertrophic (swelling) type is more common in cats," Knowles explained.

The symptoms of heartwowm disease, however, are common to both types.

"The animal will have a low-tolerance level for exercise," she said. "He'll lose weight and have an irregular pulse and a heart murmur. Both the right and left halves of his heart will fail."

Animals with heartworm disease usually only live six to 12 months. They should be put on a salt-restricted diet, given medicine and measures should be taken to avoid stress, Knowles advised.

In the past 10 years, these annual conferences have dealt with specific topics rather than generalities, Caley said.

"We are graduating better-educated veterinarians these days who have a better understanding of veterinarian medicine," he said. "In my day, you graduated as more of a general practitioner."

Tom Mah, a member of a three-man small animal practice in Topeka, said he likes the conferences because he is exposed to the academic side of veterinary medicine again.

"This information is still halfway fresh to me since I have only been out of school two years, but it helps me become academically aware of what I have seen through experience," Mah said.

Terry Houser, a second-year large animal practitioner in Concordia, said he wishes he had learned more about the business aspects of veterinary medicine before he graduated.

"I have been trying to build up my own practice from scratch and am finding it hard to make a living," Houser said. "I wish the department would teach more business courses but I don't see how they could cram any more into four years."

Veterinary medicine is more complicated and sophisticated today with more drugs and equipment to work with, according to D. F. Gillett, a 20-year small animal practitioner in Leavenworth.

"I keep up on my reading, but these conferences help remind me of the textbook reasons for how I treat the animal's symptoms," Gillett said.

The big difference today in veterinary medicine is that people are willing to spend more money on their pets, according to Edward Ptacek, a 30-year mixed (large and small) animal practitioner in Ellsworth. He also said he has noticed there are more multi-man practices and more women in the field.

Staff/Allen Eyestone

Explaining computers... Gretchen Potter, marketing coordinator for Midwest Software Services, explained how computers could yield a good return on investment for a veterinary practice.

'Cats' Marshall declared ineligible for 1983-84

Freddy Marshall, Wildcat basketball's third leading scorer last year, has been declared academically ineligible for the 1983-84 season.

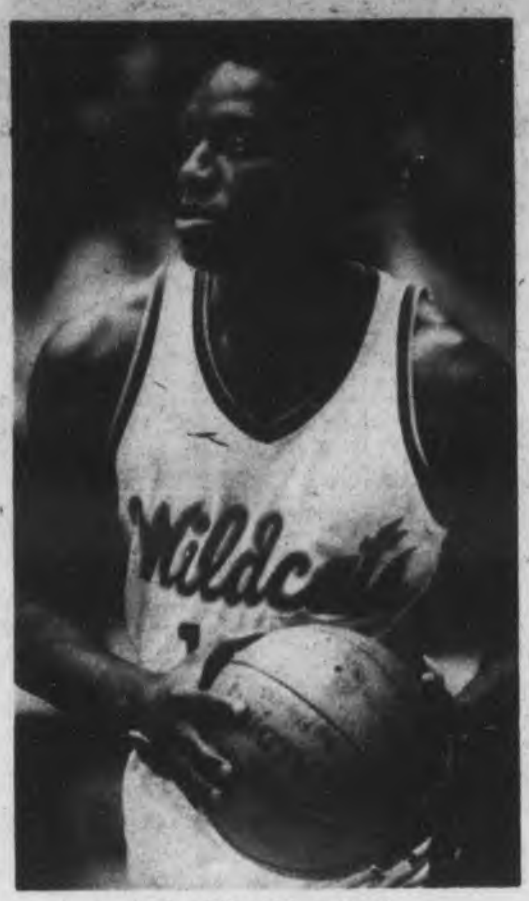
As a freshman guard last year, Marshall started 21 of 28 games and averaged 7.4 points per game.

Marshall has failed to meet the criteria outlined by the University in order to remain eligible for athletic participation, Jim Epps, athletic academic counselor.

Academic eligibility depends upon the total number of hours a student has taken, Epps said. At K-State, a student will be declared academically ineligible if he does not pass 24 hours in one year.

It is possible to meet Big Eight requirements without meeting K-State's academic requirements, Epps added.

"Big Eight regulations state that for one to 60 hours taken, a student must pass 24 hours with a 1.6 grade point average, Epps said. "For more than 60 hours, he must pass 24 hours with a 1.8 GPA."



The situation is revised in respect to accumulated hours.

"If a student athlete doesn't meet the 1.6 or 1.8 GPA for an academic year, but have an accumulative 2.0 GPA, then he is eligible for athletic participation the next year," Epps said.

Any summer school hours may also be figured into a year's GPA. Therefore, if an accumulative 2.0 is met after summer school hours are added on, an athlete will be academically eligible for the following year.

Scholarships awarded to an athlete are taken away when he is declared academically ineligible.

"If they don't meet eligibility criteria, they can't be on scholarship," Epps said. "That would be a violation of NCAA and Big Eight regulations. You have to be in good standing (academically) in order to receive aid."

Miller pleased with decision of top sprinter

Add one to the list of potential track standouts at K-State.

Gary Jefferson of Dallas, Texas, has signed a national letter of intent to attend K-State, Steve Miller, track coach, said.

A top-caliber sprinter, Jefferson excels in the 200- and 400-meter dashes. With times of 21.10 in the 200 and 47.81 in the 400, Jefferson is close on the heels of such top K-State sprinters as Veryl Switzer, Darryl Bonds and Mike Bradley.

Jefferson was the top runner on his Roosevelt High School's relay teams that won state championships in Texas' largest classification. Roosevelt High's thinclads posted times of 40.50 in the 400-meter relay and 3:09.10 in the 1600-meter relay, which were the top times in the nation.

Coach Miller forsees great things from Jefferson.

"Gary's going to be a real beauty," he said. "I look for him to immediately improve our sprint corps. He's going to be a real valuable asset."

Royals trade Tufts, obtain Reds' Leibrandt

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The Kansas City Royals on Tuesday traded minor league pitcher Bob Tufts to the Cincinnati Reds for another minor leaguer, pitcher Charlie Leibrandt.

Both pitchers will report immediately to the teams' respective Triple-A farm clubs in the American Association.

Tufts, a 27-year-old left-hander, was 0-0 with an 8.10 earned run average in six games with Kansas City before being sent to Omaha, where he was 0-0 with a 3.18 ERA in five games.

Leibrandt, 26, was 5-7 with a 5.10 ERA in 36 games with Cincinnati last year and owns a 16-17 mark with a 4.42 ERA in a major-league career that began in 1979. This season at Indianapolis, the left-hander was 3-4 with a 3.87 ERA in 11 starts.

LEARN TO FLY

During June, the K-State Flying Club is offering free instruction on an introductory flight lesson to prospective pilots. This represents a 29-38% savings over normal flight lesson costs (you must pay for the airplane rental). This offer enables you to find out what learning to fly is like at minimal cost. Available to students, alumni, faculty, and staff. Call Hugh Irvin at 539-3128 or 532-6311.

Royals blast Twins 9-4; McRae drills four RBIs

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — After driving in four runs with two doubles and a single Tuesday night, Hal McRae figures he's close to the 1982 form that saw him lead the major leagues with 133 RBIs.

McRae, although his average has been around the .350 mark, has felt all season that it was a "weak .350."

"The last two or three weeks I've started to feel much better," said the veteran designated hitter after leading Kansas City to a 9-4 victory over the Minnesota Twins. "I've felt like I had a chance to drive the ball as opposed to just hoping something will fall in."

McRae is a devoted student of hitting and is constantly tinkering with his swing.

"I've been working on some things, and they're starting to come around," said McRae, who now has 31 RBIs. "But I don't want to get into what they are. Let's just say I'm seeing the ball better."

Kansas City had 12 hits, including three by Amos Otis, and Willie Wilson stole three bases in helping left-hander Larry Gura snap a personal seven-game losing skid.

Blues owners ordered to keep running team

MONTREAL (AP) — The National Hockey League said today that Ralston Purina must operate the St. Louis Blues two more years before the NHL takes over the franchise.

The league's Board of Governors voted to accept the return of the team by Ralston Purina, but only after the company has given two years notice that it is withdrawing its participation in the NHL.

The NHL said the notice was required by the the league's constitution and approval for the withdrawal must be made by three-quarters of the board of governors.

St. Louis has not given official notification of its withdrawal.

Graduates take top honors in Beef Empire Days events

John Unruh and Renee Wassenberg, graduates in animal science, won the professional division and the ladies' division, respectively, at the Beef Empire Days, held Thursday through Monday in Garden City. Unruh and Wassenburg were each awarded $100.

Beef Empire Days has been an annual event for 15 years and is sponsored mainly by southwestern Kansas agricultural businesses. A board of directors, consisting of Garden City area businessmen and stockmen, administrate the promotional event each year.

The main interest of the event for stockmen and the K-State representatives was the live show and judging contest which took place Thursday.

About 200 steers and heifers were entered by stockmen in a live animal show. The animals were then slaughtered at the Iowa Beef Processors facility at Garden City and evaluated as carcasses. Del Allen, professor of animal science, and Dave Schafer, associate professor of animal science, were chosen as the live animal judge and carcass judge, respectively.

Each live animal and carcass was judged and prizes were awarded to the champion and reserve champion in both steer and heifer classes. Overall champions of the best steer and heifer were also recognized by combining each entry's live animal and carcass scores. The champion steer in each class received a $1000 prize while champion heifers brought in a $750 award for their owners.

A highlight of the show was a grandstand judging contest in which over 100 participants in the stands judged 40 of the steers and heifers on their estimated quality and yield grade. Contestants were placed in a professional stockman divison, a ladies' division or the stockman division.

Other students who helped in behind-the-scenes work collecting carcass data for the show were Doug Gray, Greg Highfill and Ron Bolze, graduates in animal science; and I-Tsuen Chen, graduate in food science.

Beef Empire Days featured other events during the four-day celebration such as barbecues, an art show, live music, a dance and a road race.

Memorial board severs hospital talks

By MICHELLE SAUER
Agriculture and Government Editor

Negotiations between Memorial Hospital and St. Mary Hospital concerning plans for a joint acute care facility have been severed.

The Memorial Hospital Board of Trustees voted Wednesday to end the negotiations.

"We voted to proceed to build a 50-bed, full-service hospital and to adopt a long-range plan to be the sole provider of health care," Colleen VanNostran, chairman of the Memorial board, said.

VanNostran said the board also decided to sever a previous agreement with St. Mary which has all emergencies go to St. Mary and obstetrics-gynecology patients go to Memorial.

"We are giving them 60 days' notice," VanNostran said. "We are doing this to provide the best possible hospital-based health care to the community."

Roger Sink, chairman of the St. Mary Hospital board, said he was sorry Memorial made that decision.

"We had hoped they would wait until Monday to talk to the Bishop," Sink said. Daniel Kucera, bishop of the Salina diocese, has been out of his office for over two weeks. He is due back Monday, Sink said.

"Monsignor Hake said he would sit in, but they wanted to talk to the bishop and I can understand this," Sink said. "I know this concerned them, and I guess at their meeting they decided they couldn't wait."

Sink said VanNostran told him of Memorial's decision to sever the emergency room and obstetric-gynecology agreement, but said he had received no official word yet.

"So far I have not seen anything in writing," Sink said. "I feel very badly that we can't continue (the agreement). Our main objective is to provide the best health care facility for the area." St. Mary's board voted May 24 to continue working on a joint plan with Memorial.

The two boards began negotiations last October after a joint planning committee

Reagan offers negotiators 'flexibility' in arms control talks with Kremlin

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan unveiled a new arms control proposal Wednesday, offering the Kremlin a choice of measuring nuclear arsenals by counting missiles and warheads or by the overall destructive power of each nation's long-range missiles.

Reagan said his proposal would give American negotiator Edward Rowny "flexibility to explore all appropriate avenues for meeting our goals.

"I sincerely hope that the Soviet Union will respond with corresponding flexibility," the president added. He said the changes "offer the prospect of new progress" toward a treaty curbing strategic nuclear weapons.

Reagan announced the new position in the Rose Garden before an audience of congressional leaders and White House officials. Moments before he spoke, the springtime hush of the Rose Garden was disturbed by the wail of an air-raid siren being tested downtown.

The new proposal sets a higher ceiling on the number of long-range missiles for each side, somewhere between the 850 limit the United States has proposed in the past and the 1,450 ceiling that the Soviet Union has suggested.

The exact number was kept secret to allow negotiators flexibility, according to a senior administration official. "The instructions to Ambassador Rowny will provide authority to negotiate flexibility a limit," the official said.

There was no change from Reagan's original proposal in the number of missile warheads each side could have. That would remain at 5,000, requiring a cut of about one-third for the United States and Soviet Union.

With a ceiling of 5,000 warheads — no more than half of which could be carried by landbased missiles — Reagan's plan would require the Kremlin to dismantle more than half of its land-based missiles.

Although the administration refused to specify the missile ceiling in its proposal, Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., speculated that it was around 1,100 to 1,200.

The new plan does not contain the warhead "buildown" plan, advocated by some members of Congress, that would require both sides to dismantle existing warheads as new weapons are deployed. Reagan said that "high priority work is continuing" on how to incorporate the concept into the U.S. arms proposal.

Reagan's consideration of the build-down idea and the revision of his arms control approach had been demanded by some members of Congress as the price for their support for voting for the MX missile.

As an alternative to counting missiles and warheads, Reagan said the United States would agree to restrictions based on missile throw-weight — the lifting power of a missile to carry deadly warheads.

"There may be more than one way to achieve our objective of greater stability at reduced levels of arms," Reagan said.

Kansas justices hear arguments for annexation

TOPEKA (AP) — Junction City's attempted annexation of the 101,000-acre Fort Riley Military Reservation should be validated because the city never intended to claim land on the base already owned by Manhattan and Riley County, the Kansas Supreme Court was told on Wednesday.

Richard A. Pinaire, attorney for Junction City, told the seven-member court the municipality never meant to annex two tracts of land deeded to Manhattan and Riley County. Instead of throwing out the entire annexation ordinance, Pinaire said state law allows partial invalidation of an annexation order. He appealed for that law to be applied in this case.

In February 1982, officials of Junction City started annexation procedures in hopes of acquiring the military base, its 20,000 residents and an estimated $1.25 million the city would be entitled to in federal and state revenues.

However, the 1982 Kansas Legislature passed a state law which retroactively invalidated the annexation. The city of Manhattan and Riley County then challenged the annexation in court.

Last October, Riley County District Judge Terry Bullock voided the annexation saying Junction City improperly annexed land owned by Manhattan and Riley County.

Bullock also upheld the new state law — which outlawed the annexation of any military base by a city in Kansas. Besides that, the judge said Junction City failed to meet public hearing requirements for reading of proposed ordinances when it rushed the annexation measure through the city commission.

"If we did annex that land owned by Manhattan and Riley County then the state law allowing partial invalidation of an annexation applies," Pinaire said. "On the state law which would retroactively undo Junction City's annexation, I think it's patently unfair and it's obvious to me it's invalid."

Pinaire also said the city commission did not violate any open meetings laws or public hearing requirements when it met at mid-

Enrollment figures rise for '83 summer term

Summer school registration began Monday, with 4,248 students enrolling for classes, Doug Hurley, associate registrar, said.

That is approximately 200 more students than last year's first-day total of 4,068.

Students will continue to enroll every Monday until July 25 for short courses and workshops of one-, two-, and three-week durations. Last year's total enrollment for the eight-week summer session was more than 6,400.

Final summer enrollment figures will be tabulated in August when they are due at the Board of Regents office in Topeka.

Longer year, more pay, family involvement would benefit nation's educational system

By SEAN REILLY
Staff Writer

Longer school years and days, higher pay for teachers and more family involvement in a student's learning process are a few of the recommendations made in a report April 28 by the National Commission on Excellence in Education and agreed upon by two local educators.

According to the report, "A Nation at Risk: The Imperative for Educational Reform," there are 16 indicators of the risk ranging from not enough hours spent in school to test scores for American students being lower than international scores.

"The school hours are plenty long now. The students have a normal load of homework," James Rezac, principal of Manhattan High School, said. "A longer school year would be fine. It's like a full time job, so why not just a month off?"

Rezac agreed teachers are being underpaid. However, neither the increase in pay nor the prospects for a longer school year are very promising for the near future.

"I hope to see a change in 20 years or before my lifetime ends," Rezac commented.

The report stated that test scores on the national average were down. However, Rezac pointed out that scores from area students and throughout Kansas were better off compared to students in past years.

"This year students here (Manhatttan High) scored higher on ACT and SAT tests than students of 10 or 12 years ago," Rezac said.

The reason his students are scoring higher than their counterparts 10 years ago, according to Rezac, is due to the rigorous schedule the students now face.

"Students 10 to 12 years ago did not bring the attitude to school we would have liked. Now they do," Rezac said. "So we make school as demanding as we can."

Comparing Kansas students with those from another region, Rezac recalled an experience he had.

"Kansas schools are OK compared to schools such as one I visited in Washington, D.C., four years ago. In one class with a total enrollment of 30, more than half the students were not present. Kansas may have a few bad schools, but a lot are OK."

Yet with the education of students so important, it is equally essential that the instructor be capable of presenting the material in a manner interesting to the student.

"Before our students go off to become teachers they must pass the University's requirements, then meet state certification requisites prepared by the State Board of Education," Jerry Horn, associate dean of education, said.

As of June 1 the College of Education changed the requirements for incoming students.

In past years when students applied for admission to the College of Education a 2.2 grade point average was required. However, with the new requirements, students applying for admission must now have a 2.5 grade point average.

Also before being admitted to the College of Education, students will have to take a pre-professional test pertaining to writing, reading and math, Horn mentioned. The test is prepared by the Educational Testing Service, Princeton, N.J.

When asked how the commission's report might change the procedure within the College, Horn said, "It has not affected our normal operating procedure."

On the average, students in the Kansas school system score higher when compared to students from other states, he said.

When it comes to leadership qualities, Horn suggested that the survey did not take into consideration how U.S. schools prepare students to use these characteristics.

"Besides educating students, schools are now supposed to aid students in developing leadership qualities to use among their peers, something I don't believe other countries do," Horn said. "The survey did not attempt to take this into consideration which is something schools in the United States excell in."

The U.S. school system also differs in that it allows all persons to attend school. Nations such as the Soviet Union, Japan and Germany are selective with their acceptance of students. Therefore, groups of select students uniformly interested in class are compared to the U.S. system made up of students divided in their interest, Horn said.

Concerning his feeling toward the entire survey, Horn said, "They did not attempt to evalute anything good about the current school system.

"I appeared before this group in Kansas City telling them what was good about our system. I never read anything about it in the report."

tified, said that warhead and missile limits indirectly would impose limits on throw-weight.

"Another approach to it is to say, why not just set an arbitrary figure of X-million kilograms of throw-weight," the official said. "We are prepared to go in either direction in which they the Soviets are most comfortable."

The Soviets are believed to have a three-to-one throw-weight advantage over the United States.

The official said the United States was prepared "to deal directly with destructive capability if the Soviet Union prefers — as an aggregate absolute throw-weight figure if the Soviets prefer."

In his remarks, Reagan said negotiators have concluded three rounds of talks. "However, due largely to Soviet intransigence, we have not yet made meaningful progress on the central issues," he said.

"I remain firmly committed to take whatever steps are necessary to increase the likelihood of real, substantive progress towards an agreement involving significant reductions in U.S. and Soviet strategic nuclear arsenals — and in the national security interests of both sides," the president said.

"Above all, our goal is to maintain a stable nuclear balance in order to reduce the risk of war," Reagan added. "Our efforts in the START (Strategic Arms Reduction Talks) negotiations must be guided by that objective."

Parakeet finds home in Baltimore opera house

BALTIMORE (AP) — Not all the music at the Lyric Opera House these days is onstage. Fred the parakeet has mysteriously turned up out in the lobby to serenade theatergoers.

"He's got the run of the place," Lyric spokeswoman Nancy Dugan said of the yellow and green bird, which has been nesting in a large potted tree in the lobby since May 13.

"He loves company," Dugan said. "When we have a show going on and the lobby is filled with patrons, he sings at the top of his little lungs. He just loves it."

And when Fred sings, people listen.

"They have no choice. When he starts singing, everybody looks around and thinks they're going crazy because they hear this bird," said Dugan.

On the other hand, when the lobby is quiet, so is Fred.

"You don't know there is a bird in there."

No one knows how Fred got to the theater, but since he turned up he has been spending most of his time perched in the tree. Occasionally, he sits on a rafter in the sun.

She said staff members have considered trying to catch Fred and put him in a cage, but so far he has thwarted their efforts.

Police break up Israeli narcotics smuggling ring

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Police said Wednesday they broke up a narcotics ring that used Israeli soldiers to smuggle 15 tons of hashish in Israeli army water tankers from Lebanon to Israel over the past eight months.

"What makes this network special is its use of soldiers, of (military) communications systems and huge amounts of money," said Superintendent Yitzhak Bashan of the Galilee District police. He said 36 people were detained for questioning.

Bashan said the hashish, worth an estimated $15 million, was bought from a major Beirut dealer and brought to Israel with the help of an Israeli army officer and a Jewish civilian dealer in the Galilee. At least two Israeli army truck drivers were on the smugglers' payroll, he said.

Lightning kills 12 during heavy rains in Turkey

ISTANBUL, Turkey (AP) — Lightning killed 12 people in two days of heavy rains that flooded cities along Turkey's western and Black Sea coasts, officials said Wednesday.

Rain caused flooding in the suburbs of the Aegean coast city of Izmir, Turkey's third largest city, damaging crops and property. Firemen evacuated scores of houses in Izmir's plush Karsiyaka district.

In Fethiye, on the Mediterranean coast, about 600 sheep and cattle were drowned.

Renegade bull causes mayhem in resort town

HOT SPRINGS, Ark. (AP) — On foot and in cars and trucks, 30 people joined the chase behind a stray 720-pound bull that lumbered for 10 hours through this resort city before being caught Wednesday morning.

The pursuit began about 11 p.m. Tuesday when the young bull was spotted on Arkansas Route 70. Two animal control officers and a group of volunteers lit out after the bull, following it for eight to 10 miles along a route that, after daylight, included some busy downtown streets crowded with rush hour traffic.

"There were several close calls" on the downtown streets, said animal control director John Seales. "We had to call in the police and the local traffic department. We're really not equipped to handle such situations.

"They ran the bull for 10 solid hours all over Hot Springs with ropes. They finally wore it down," Seales said.

At 11:20 a.m. Wednesday, 12 people cornered the beast in a fenced-in yard outside a school administration building. As the bull trotted past a tree, horseshoer Grady Hawthorne lassoed it, allowing it to be pulled and pushed into a horse trailer.

ABC sweeps Annual Daytime Emmy awards

NEW YORK (AP) — "The Young and the Restless" on CBS won an Emmy Wednesday night as the season's outstanding daytime drama, but ABC soaps swept the awards in acting categories during ceremonies here.

Robert Woods, who plays Bo Buchanan in "One Life to Live," was honored as the best actor in daytime drama, and Dorothy Lyman, who plays Opal Gardner on "All My Children," won the Emmy for best actress.

ABC won 11 of the 24 Emmys presented during the 10th annual awards ceremony, while CBS and NBC had three each. the Public Broadcasting Service won two and syndicated programs won five.

ABC, No. 1 in daytime in recent years, entered the 10th Annual Daytime Emmy Awards competition with 61 nominations, more than double the total for CBS and NBC combined. Syndicated shows had 26 nominations, CBS 25, NBC 22 and the Public Broadcasting Service 19.

Violence wrong; vote power best

The federal government has finally labeled the Posse Comitatus a "domestic terrorist group."

The death of Gordon Kahl, a member of the right-wing organization of tax protesters and paramilitary survivalists, in a shootout Friday with authorities in Smithville, Ark., has given federal authorities reason for broader action against the group.

Kahl had been on the run since February, when two federal marshals were killed and three others wounded in a shootout near Medina, N.D.

The Kansas City Times reported Tuesday that federal authorities, with permission from the Justice Department, can begin "to conduct wide-ranging investigations of Posse Comitatus."

Kahl, a retired farmer, may have had the correct idea as a member of a right-wing organization of tax protestors — but as a member of a growing minority of paramilitary survivalists, he overstepped his boundaries.

Although the tax system in the United States is constantly under fire from some person or group, there never is any need to use violence as an answer to a problem.

When the civil rights movement began in the 1950s with the late Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., violence was never a part of the "revolt" — nor was it used by the "hippies" in the '60s with their sit-ins. Therefore, violence should never be condoned as a way to change government policy.

The federal government is correct in expanding its operation against the Posse Comitatus. The federal government also should begin investigations of any other groups which condone violence in order to get a point across.

Americans should remember that the government is here to serve them — not be their enemy. If a change is sought in the tax system, let them use their voting power, as Californians did five years ago on Proposition 13.

'Junks' at the fast-food place

For all those late nights (or early mornings), for those customers that just won't quit coming in, for the itchy polyester and unattractive uniforms, the cute little hats and dainty hairnets — fast-food people, this Bud's for you.

Being employed by fast-food restaurants, we are both familiar with the headaches, the pressures and the hassles associated with dealing with the public. Not that they are all bad. On the whole, most people are at least civilized and aren't total barbarians when in a restaurant. Some can even be enjoyable.

Working in a restaurant, you get all types. But we're not talking about customers — we're talking about fellow employees.

We think we've got it down to a few different classes.

To Michele, the most irritating co-worker is the one who hides from the customers. Is it fear or is it hate that drives these employees to the bathroom the minute a customer walks in the door?

This type of employee can wash dishes for hours, examine the contents of the walk-in cooler and empty the trash, not returning until the rush is over. The manager frequently asks if he has already clocked out.

ON THE OTHER hand, Lucinda finds fellow employees who nearly jump over the counter to wait on good-looking customers a little annoying. It really gets ridiculous when this person leaves or rushes another customer to get to an Adonis who just walked in the door.

Unfortunately, this employee rarely gets much else done, as she remains close to the register and is practically glued to it when a basketball team has been seen emptying a bus in the parking lot. This same employee will carefully clean the tables, floor and walls all around the spot where the Robert Redford look-alike is sitting, trying to be inconspicuous. We've heard of great service, but this is sickening.

Then there are the brown-nosers. We find these employees particularly offensive. This person enjoys doing everything at work, including the dreaded bathrooms, vacuuming and the worst possible cleaning jobs possible. Of course, in the back of their little minds, they're thinking, "I'll get a raise for this."

Employees who brown-nose can be easily spotted. They're the ones who are particularly attentive, cheerful and exceptionally hardworking; that is, when the manager is around.

LET'S NOT FORGET the co-workers who will do anything to get out of their work shift. When they absolutely have to work, they are experts at getting out of just about anything.

Through finding substitutes to take their shifts, calling in with a fake hoarse voice, or simply managing to cut or burn themselves at the start of their shift, they manage to miss more shifts than they work in one week's time.

If they absolutely have to work, they're wonderful complainers, as they usually don't feel well. It's either a headache or a stomachache, or something more creative like their tonsils are growing back. If they're asked to do something, they seem to have it done in a miraculously short time.

Last, but not least, are those extremely picky employees; the ones who spend half of their shift straightening mustard packets and polishing their name tag. What's even worse, they probably iron their uniform — regardless of the fact that polyester never wrinkles anyway.

During a massive rush, especially on Sunday nights when all campus dwellers are forced out to eat, these picky people slow things down considerably. Arranging trays to perfection or icing the salad bar a cube at a time is even more than the managers ask for.

If any of our fellow employees are reading this column, don't be paranoid. We know we fit in here somewhere and we're sure we'll hear about it.

Our other readers can take heart. Don't take it personally when we're unusually grouchy. There may be something on the other side of the counter bothering us.

Story hour begins at Farrell; classics read each Thursday

Remember sitting with other children at the knee of a librarian as she read a fascinating story on a summer afternoon?

Well, those days of the afternoon story hour are back, but these are stories which have made their mark on world literature, Paula Elliot, humanities reference librarian, said.

Eight stories — one per week — will be read from noon to 12:30 p.m. Thursdays on the third floor landing of Farrell Library. A wide variety of authors from several countries, as well as stories from different eras, will be included. There may also be some supplemental readings, such as poems, during the program, depending upon how much time each story takes.

The narrators are also from a wide variety of areas on campus and are allowed to choose their own readings.

According to Elliot, the audience includes students, faculty, staff and community members. She said up to 60 people attended some stories last year.

Elliot, who got the idea for a story hour because she likes to read aloud, said, "It is an unusual thing to do on a college campus."

One reason the program became so popular last year was because some people find it relaxing to sit and listen to others read stories, Elliot said.

She also said she hopes more people will begin to see the library as a place to come for leisure reading and not just for course-related work.

The Short Story Classics program includes:

June 9, "Lost in the Museum of Natural History," by Pedro Pietri

June 16, "The Lottery," by Shirley Jackson

June 23, "Reminiscences of Childhood," by Dylan Thomas

June 30, "The Cut Glass Bowl," by F. Scott Fitzgerald

July 7, "The Earthquake in Chile," by Heinrich Von Kleist.

July 14, "A Summer's Tragedy," by Anna Bontemps

July 21, "Eupompus Gave Splendour to Art by Numbers," by Aldous Huxley

July 28, "The Artificial Nigger," by Flannery O'Conner.

Auto burglaries

Crime Stoppers of Manhattan/Riley County, Inc.

CRIME STOPPERS 539-7777 CONFIDENTIALLY

This week's Crime Stoppers involves the burglaries of two automobiles in Manhattan.

Sometime between 9:30 p.m. May 9 and 6:30 p.m. May 10, someone broke into a silver 1982 Audi and removed several stereo items. The victim had parked his car in an apartment complex parking lot located in the 1800 block of College Heights Road.

A suspect apparently opened one of the unlocked doors and removed a stereo system from the dash with an unknown tool. The suspect also removed two speakers from the rear deck; however, the deck itself was not damaged.

The items taken were a Blaupunkt AM/FM cassette, a Blaupunkt amplifier, a Blaupunkt equalizer and two Epimodizo speakers.

A silver Camaro parked in the same lot was also broken into. A Bowman AM/FM cassette stereo was taken from the Camaro.

Crime Stoppers of Manhattan/Riley County, a non-profit organization, provides details of an unsolved crime each week. Citizens are encouraged to provide information needed to assist police in solving crimes. Informants, who will remain anonymous, can receive cash rewards of up to $1,000.

Anyone with information on this crime, location of stolen property or information on any other crime should call Crime Stoppers at 539-7777.

Upward Bound receives DOE grant; local high school students benefit

By C. VENKATRAMANA
Staff Writer

The University's Upward Bound program has received a three-year, $502,000 grant from the Department of Education. The first part of the three-year grant, received June 1, is $159,328.

"The Upward Bound program is essentially designed to encourage and motivate high school students to pursue a post-secondary education," Charlotte Olsen, program director, said.

Funded and operated by the DOE, the nationwide program serves aproximately 38,000 students every year, according to Veryl Switzer, assistant vice president of Student Affairs. Switzer has been supervisor of the University's program since its inception 11 years ago.

During the past decade, more than 450 local high school students have participated in the program. This year, 65 students in ninth through 12th grades will be involved. Selection of students to the program is based on academic and financial needs, academic potential and recommendations from their high school teachers and administrators.

Often, students possessing good academic potential do not utilize it for want of either academic or financial motivation, Switzer said. The program, which is basically a skill development for academic work, assists in motivating such students.

The program has two major components: an academic-year component followed by a summer residential on-campus experience.

Individual counseling and tutoring are some of the major activities during the academic year portion of the program, Switzer said. Participants are constantly monitored and special attention is devoted to skills they lack, he said.

High school teachers work in close coordination with th program's staff and help identify academic needs of participants. The first part of the program also includes cultural and educational field trips that expose the participants to new experiences.

"Orientation and development of proficiency in basic skills are stressed, while specialization in particular skills are encouraged," Switzer explained.

A six-week summer residential component of the program provides an on-campus experience for the participants. Olsen said the system is designed to provide a balance in academic and non-academic activities. During the academic sessions, held in the mornings, students are taught basic skills in math, English, reading and oral communication.

The majority of the grant money is used during the summer session to pay for staff, stipends for participants, room and board, recreation and field trips. It is also used for tuition, books, office supplies and curriculum publications.

"The most salient feature of the program is the tremendous coordination that exists between the staff of UB and the high school teachers and administrators," Switzer said.

According to Switzer, the program receives good appreciation and positive responses from students.

However, students may experience an initial period of "uncertainty." Switzer said participants become accustomed to the system in a fairly short period of time and they have demonstrated positive results as a result of the program.

Following completion of the program, the majority of students perform better in academic and survival skills, Switzer said.

According to Switzer, as participants in the program, students are required to be a part of the mainstream and commit themselves to the program in order to realize the true benefit of the program.

"This helps to invoke a sense of belonging on the part of the students," he said.

Olsen said she foresees no monetary problems for the program and it will probably be extended.

Hospitals

studied the local hospitals and recommended a plan for a joint acute care facility.

C. Clyde Jones, professor of management and chairman of the joint planning committee on hospital needs, is out of town and could not be reached for comment.

According to the Oct. 28, 1982 Collegian, the plan for the joint acute care facility was recommended by the committee to eliminate duplication of services and increase efficiency in Manhattan's health-care system.

The committee recommended the consolidation of acute care services in one of the hospitals with out-patient and supportive services in the other facility. Because it would cost more to convert Memorial, Jones recommended that St. Mary be the site of the acute care services.

Collision injures moped driver

A wreck Wednesday at the corner of 12th Street and Bluemont Avenue involving a moped and a car resulted in minor injuries for the driver of the moped.

Marvin Templeton, 1712 Cassell Road, was heading east on Bluemont when a vehicle turned south onto 12th from Bluemont, allegedly blocking Templeton's path.

Trying to avoid the vehicle, Templeton pulled into the path of a west-bound car driven by Stephanie Duley, 605 Bertrand St. Templeton's view of the Duley vehicle was allegedly blocked by the car turning south onto 12th.

Templeton, 58, was taken by ambulance to St. Mary Hospital, where he was treated for abrasions and released. No other injuries were reported.

Residents to form link in human peace chain

Manhattan residents will be the local link in a coast-to-coast "Hands In Peace" chain at noon Sunday in the southwest corner of Manhattan City Park.

The national event will consist of citizens from Plymouth Rock to San Francisco joining hands in five minutes of meditation for peace, according to Joan Parker, co-coordinator of the local event. Carolyn Coates is the other co-coordinator.

"We're hoping to make it a thing that will bring a lot of people together," Parker said, adding that the observance is not based on any particular religious group's beliefs and anyone may participate.

"It's not anti-anything," she said. "It's just an observation for peace. We don't want to do anything that will offend anyone."

Initially planned to be a continuous unbroken human chain nationwide, the event will now consist of several local chains which may or may not link. According to Parker, 2,000 individuals per mile would have been needed to form a continuous chain across Kansas. A national organization, Academy for Peace Research, was trying to plan the continuous chain, Parker said.

Special gardens to be featured at open house

A garden reception and open house of the Manhattan Community Gardens is planned from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. Monday at the garden site, Ninth Street and Riley Lane.

Aaron Spilka, senior in horticulture therapy and community garden coordinator, said visitors will be able to view special features of the gardens, such as the raised-bed gardens for senior citizens and physically-limited gardeners, and the children's gardens.

Plots which have been cultivated using only organic fertilizers and pesticides may be viewed, as well as gardens using conventional techniques.

The standard size of a plot is about 400 square feet, Spilka said. A large section of the gardens is reserved for organic gardening and a limited amount of space is availible for raised-bed gardens.

"The gardener's rental fee is dependent upon his income, number of family members and the number of plots he rents," Spilka said. The fee includes the use of tools, fertilizer, mulch, seeds, water and hoses. The fee also helps cover costs for professional publications, a newsletter, and occasional social events for the gardeners.

Tools available include rakes, hoes, shovels, a wheelbarrow, tool racks, lawn mowers and a rotary tiller. Plants and seeds

IMPORTANT DO'S AND DON'T'S OF MAINTENANCE

- Make your own car maintenance checklist, and keep it up to date.
- Change your oil filter on schedule without trying to over-extend its life. This can help your engine and your pocketbook.
- Save money by changing your own oil and filter. Remember, these items cost less in a store than in a service station.
- Don't add oil just before an oil change.
- When buying a muffler, make sure it has a lifetime guarantee.
- Be extremely careful about putting additives into your gas tank or crankcase. These can be costly, and their value may be questionable.
- Take good care of your tires and check them often for air pressure, wear, balance and alignment.

KCC says 'no' to Wolf Creek transmission line, finds KCPL's construction plans 'not necessary'

TOPEKA (AP) — State utility regulators on Wednesday tentatively rejected a plan by the Kansas City Power and Light Co. to build an electrical transmission line from the Wolf Creek nuclear power plant to a Johnson County substation.

The Kansas Corporation Commission, in its preliminary findings, concluded that the proposed 57-mile line was not necessary and that the Kansas City, Mo.-based utility had failed to prove construction of its own line would be more economical than paying to use lines owned by another utility.

The commission's decision, which will not be official until a final written order is issued later, represents a victory for Don McGinnis, a Rantoul rancher who has fought the utility's plan to build the high-voltage line across his property in Anderson County.

KCPL had contended it needed the $10 million line to transmit electricity from the nuclear power plant to the Kansas City area and that it would be much cheaper to build its own rather than "wheeling" the power on some other utility's line.

The Corporation Commission, which regulates utilities in the state, agreed unanimously that KCPL had failed to provide adequate evidence on the necessity of the power line or its potential cost-savings.

"The burden of proof has to rest with the company, and I don't think they have met that burden," said Commissioner Phillip Dick.

In addition, Dick criticized KCPL for its dealings with landowners along the proposed line from the Wolf Creek plant near Burlington to the substation in Johnson County.

"I think the company has not been overly sensitive in working with customers and landowners along the line," said Dick. "I think they could have been a little less arrogant ..."

Under Kansas law, the utility can ask for a rehearing of the commission decision and, if that is denied by the KCC, can appeal the case to the courts.

There is one other option available to the company. It could file a new application asking for a permit to build the line. Another complete hearing would be required if a new request is made, say KCC lawyers.

Vic Poirier, manager of community affairs for KCPL, declined to say what the utility would do in light of the KCC decision and said no comment would be made until the commission's final written order is issued.

"There is no way I can comment until we actually see the decision," said Poirier.

Under a 1979 state law, utilities must obtain a permit from the KCC before they can build electrical power lines.

McGinnis, who was at the KCC's deliberations, said he was pleased but not surprised by the regulatory agency's action.

"Sure I'm happy with the decision," said McGinnis, who recorded the proceedings with a video tape camera to provide evidence in case he needed to appeal the matter to the courts.

McGinnis originally challenged the line's construction in a district court and forced the case to the Kansas Supreme Court, which last fall ordered the utility to submit the plan to the KCC for approval even though it was first proposed before the 1979 law. McGinnis said Wednesday he hoped the KCC decision would end the matter.

"I don't think there is anyway they can show justification for the line," he said.

Hearings were held last month in Ottawa on the proposal, and McGinnis and another landowner hired lawyers to intervene in the case.

Charles Briscoe, a KCC hearing examiner who presided over the case last month, expressed concerns to the commissioners that KCPL had not adequately supported an analysis which claimed a costsavings from construction of the line.

The company had estimated it would cost $3.4 million a year over a 30-year period to build and maintain the power line. They projected it would cost from $.3 million to $9.5 million a year over 30 years to "wheel" the KCPL power through another company's lines.

The commission noted that Kansas Gas and Electric Co., a partner in the Wolf Creek project with KCPL, owns a highvoltage line from Wolf Creek to a plant near La Cygne, which is south of Kansas City. Briscoe said the line was not heavily used and KCPL could move its power from the La Cygne area to customers in Kansas City.

Briscoe, in outlining his findings to the commission, faulted the KCPL analysis because it was based on the utility using all of its share of power from Wolf Creek, about 540,000 kilowatts. However, he noted that other company projections indicated customer demand would be about one-third of that when the plant is scheduled to begin operation in the spring of 1985.

"Based upon the record there is insufficient evidence before the commission to substantiate their economic theory," said Briscoe. "I do not think the evidence supports the conclusions they desire to be reached."

Gardens

are donated by area gardeners and organizations.

The children's garden is an area where children may have their own small plots. Supervised garden activities for children are conducted between March and October.

Spilka said there are still some plots available for the rest of the season for gardeners who are interested.

"Excellent yields have been recorded in the gardens, which are composed of a sand, loam soil," Spilka said.

Don Chance and his son John are surrounded by their own tattoo designs in the front parlor.

Tattoo You

Designs plaster the walls of the small "studio." Ranging from the elaborate to the very simple; from drawings of snakes and tigers, to more sedate pictures of roses and comical figures, these pictures make up just a fraction of the repertoire.

Beginning on Skid Row in New York City, he took his art to Georgia, California and, finally, Kansas. Jobs — including those as a baker, a sparring partner for a professional boxer, construction worker, real estate salesman and motel operator and owner — have kept him going. But he has always come back to his "art."

Similar to an artist's studio, Don Chance's tattoo parlor is relatively quiet. Occasionally, usually during the afternoons, the tattooist's 26-year-old son, John, performs his trade on the customers who happen to hear about the business. Once again, the drill-like sound of the tattooist's machinery fill the quiet as the artist practices his trade.

Located east of Manhattan in Bob's Motel, on Highway 24, the semi-retired Chance and his son have been attempting to build the business in the area for the last seven months.

"I don't believe many people in Manhattan know about this," Don said.

THE OLDER CHANCE, who has been a tattoist off and on for the past 40 years, said most of his business comes through word of mouth, in addition to the advertising placed in the Junction City and Fort Riley newspapers, posters and business cards.

"We're trying to build the area up. In Manhattan, there is no business — some college kids maybe. Otherwise, we depend mostly on the military," he said.

Born in Utica, N.Y., Don discovered his interest in the art at the age of 15. He attributes his start in the business to his work in drawing designs for tattoo artists in the city.

"I was hanging around these places. One time I had to help this fella," he said.

"From drawing the pictures, I got into it. I was about 18 or 19 years old when I started in Georgia.

"It was by accident (his start). I never wanted to be a tattoo artist. In fact, if someone asks me now, I don't tell them I was a tattoo artist," Don added.

Although he claims he wouldn't admit his profession, tattooing took the elder Chance out of New York to Georgia where his work continued along with further composition of designs. From Georgia, his career took him and his family to California, where business was probably its best.

RIGHT: Dan Malmquist, Fort Riley tries to bear the pain as an outline is etched into the arm. ABOVE: The finishing touches are put on his tattoo.

Story by Lucinda Ellison

"DEMAND VARIES FROM place to place," he said.

Cities with populations of over 1 million produced the highest demand. Early in his career, Don had the first school for tattoo artists. He also instructed his son in the trade at the age of 16.

"I broke him (John) in young. But he taught himself the art. John, he's gonna be rated with the best. That's his career," he said.

Making their home in Junction City in 1960, the Chances operated a business there until the practice was outlawed.

"Many doctors were prejudiced toward tattoo artists. Anyone who knows proper sanitary procedures isn't going to cause any harm," the elder Chance said.

He said that "jaggers," or people who simply claimed to be tattooists, began practicing the art. Because the jaggers failed to use sterilization procedures, minor infections were developed by some customers, giving all tattoo artists a bad name.

"In many places they (local governing officials) outlawed it. That's an unconstitutional law. You have the right to get a tattoo," he added.

"WE INTEND TO tattoo some of the college kids. They're old enough to know what they want," he said, explaining customers must be at least 18 to be tattooed.

In an attempt to get as close as possible to the Fort Riley base, the tattooist moved to his current establishment seven months ago.

The art of tattooing has seen major changes in the past 40 years, and yet the technique has remained relatively the same. According to the senior partner, the design is outlined with a machine. Any colors incorporated in the tattoo are created with pigments. Different machines are used for various pigments and thick or thin outlining, he said.

Some pain is experienced during the process, but only lasts a short while.

(See TATTOO, p. 11)

Tattoo

"It burns a little bit, but after a while you don't even know you have it on. It takes about two or three weeks to heal," the younger artist said.

Changes in fads are also evident through the variation in the types of tattoos worn by both Chances. The younger artist displays a contemporary design on the back of his neck, which features a tattoo in the likeness of his wife's face. Elaborately intricate designs including several colors cover John's arms in contrast to his father's fading simple tattoos.

THE OLDER TATTOOIST calls contemporary designs "heavy metal."

"Every couple of years, there's a new fad. When people were smoking marijuana, the marijuana leaf and Zig Zag man were popular.

"There are all types of customers. There are an awful lot of women, just like the Japanese. It's nothing to scorn anymore," he added.

The younger Chance attributes the change in types of customers to the different attitude people have acquired towards tattooing.

"At one time, there were seamen, kind of rough people getting tattoos. It kind of got a bad name. That's changing.

"People get them in different places. Everyone's different. Everyone wants something different. Some people are really into it. They really like it. They go all the way. Some people are into the small dainty things," John added.

Although the tattoo parlor has an abundance of designs, the younger artist continues to create designs daily. Just as the art has adapted to changing styles, inflation has been a contributing factor in changing prices of tattoos.

DEPENDING ON SIZE, location of the tattoo and the amount of pigments used, prices range from about $40 to $2,500. Larger tattoos not only cost more, but require more than one sitting with the tattooist, the elder Chance said.

"Inflation ran the prices very high. During the '30s, a medium-sized tattoo cost about $2. Today, a $2 tattoo costs about $40. It could run a lot more," he added.

Actually beginning in the art could run as much as $5,000, the older tattooist estimated. Investing in the necessary machinery, designs, drawing equipment, sterilizers and preparation of an establishment are required to begin a business.

Sharp drop in pattern sales prompts layoff at McCall's

Due to a 50 percent decline since 1976 in the demand for home sewing patterns, the McCall Pattern Company will be laying off 27 employees at its Manhattan plant June 17, Don Johnson, vice president of operations, said.

"This is a very painful exercise for us," Richard Stultz, director of employee relations, said. "All these people have sacrificed for us the last eight months — and especially the last three months.

"They (McCall employees) have taken vacation time without pay and worked without pay. They have done everything possible to take the burden off of us," Stultz said.

"Everyone recognized that something had to be done, but no one wanted to do it," Johnson said.

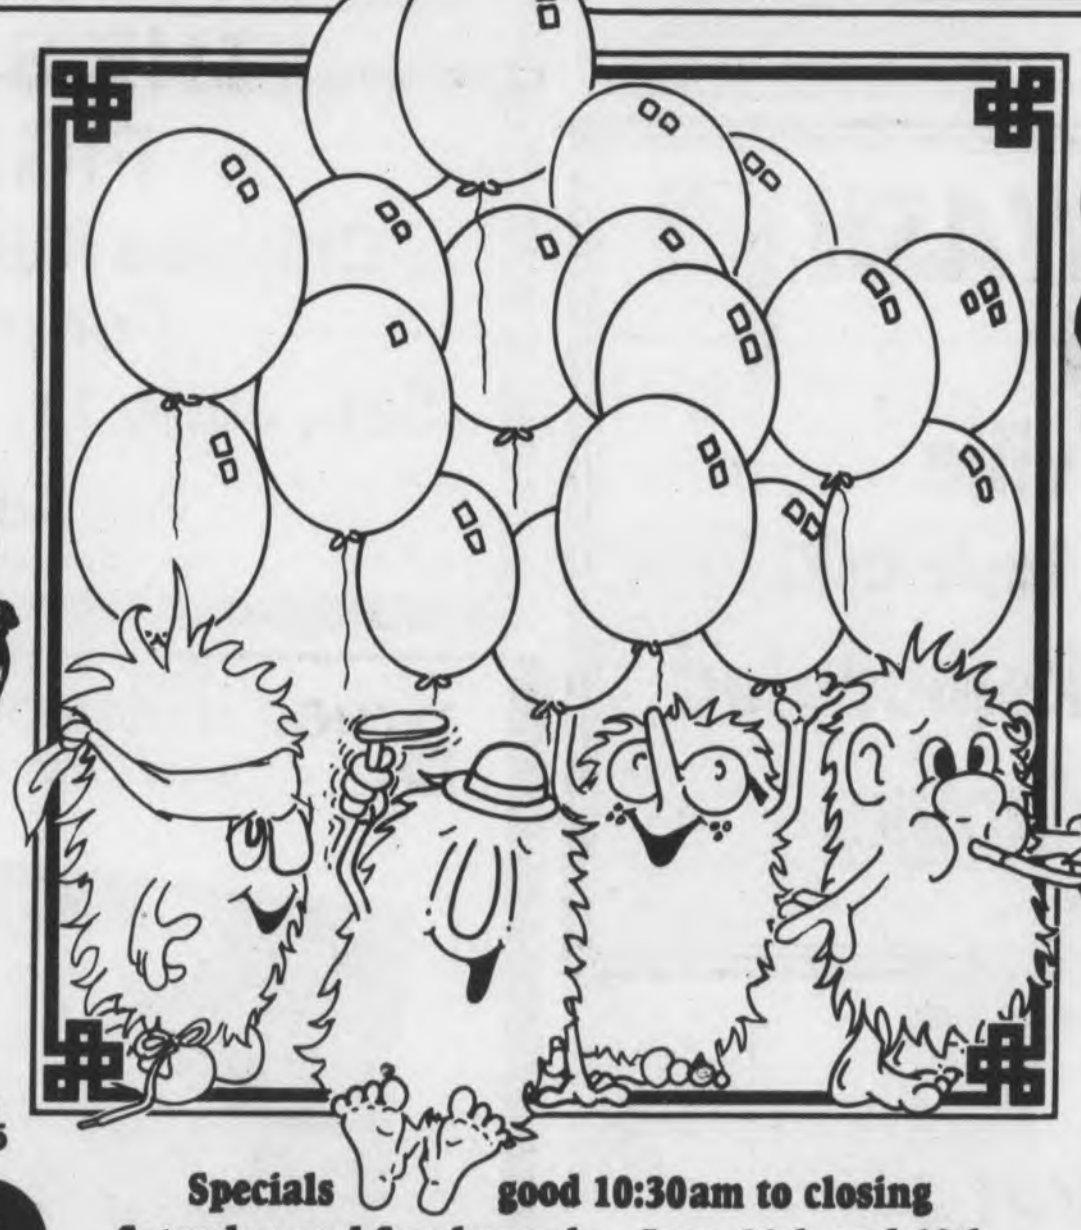
The announcement was made Monday at a plant meeting for all employees.

"We are offering a voluntary severance program to anyone who wishes to leave McCall's and pursue any other career or opportunity they wish. This will allow them to leave with severance pay," Stultz said.

Amounts of severance pay received will be determined by the length of service spent with the organization and the employee's current earnings, according to Stultz.

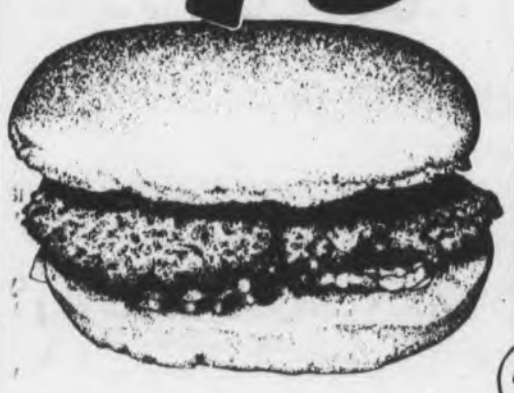
If less than 27 employees choose the severance pay program, then the plant seniority system will be used to eliminate the remaining positions, Stultz said.

Manhattan has the only McCall manufacturing plant in the country. McCall's distribution facilities are located in San Francisco and Atlanta.



"There won't be any layoffs at the distribution facilites," Stultz said. "We've taken measures the last couple of years to reduce the number of employees there."

"Part-time workers will stand in line — seniority wise — the same as everyone else," he said. "There are a number of K-State students working here part-time."



Whether the worker is part-time or full-time will make no difference in his seniority, according to Johnson.

"Permanent part-time jobs are full eight-hour days for 10 to 12 days. Those employees make special patterns or new designs, instead of just replacing patterns in the store that have been sold," Johnson said.

Phillies' Carlton receives praise

"This has got to be a great moment for him, reaching that plateau," Phillies Manager Pat Corrales said. "But as he said, 'To heck with the strikeouts; let's win it,' and that's the kind of guy he is.

"It's a great thing for him — another star in his cap."

It is a cap already covered with stars. Last season, Steve Carlton, Philadelphia Phillies pitcher, won an unprecedented fourth Cy Young award. With a 6-6 record this year, he is only nine victories away from becoming the 16th pitcher in baseball to win 300 games.

He holds the major league mark for consecutive starting assignments with 439. He has not made a relief appearance since 1971, and he hasn't missed a start due to injury since 1979. Since 1972, he has missed only five starts due to injury.

He holds the major league mark for most strikeouts in a game by a left-handed pitcher, 19; he shares the modern National League mark for victories in a season, 27, with Sandy Koufax, and if he strikes out 100 batters this season (he already has 92) he will tie Warren Spahn for most years with 100 or more strikeouts in the NL, 17.

In league championship competition, he has the most strikeouts, games started, innings pitched, and fewest hits, runs and walks allowed.

Carlton's first major league strikeout came on April 14, 1965, against Dick Ellsworth of the Chicago Cubs. His 1,000th was on Rony Bryant of the San Francisco Giants, May 7, 1972. The 2,000th victim was Wilbur Howard of the Houston Astros, July 12, 1975; No. 3000, Tim Wallach of Montreal, April 29, 1981.

Tennis coach resigns

Steve Snodgrass, men's tennis coach for the past seven years, has resigned.

"We all have hard decisions to make in our lives, but this is one of the toughest I've had to make. Coaching was something dear to me," Snodgrass said.

"I have had many rewarding experiences at K-State," Snodgrass said. "But, with my increasing responsibilities at my club (Manhattan's Cottonwood Racquet Club), I couldn't do both jobs justice. Therefore, I have no alternative but to resign my coaching job.

"My association with the athletic department has been a good one. Dick Towers has been very helpful in increasing funding to the program."

Towers, K-State athletic director, accepted Snodgrass' resignation by saying he was surprised by his decision, but could understand it.

"Steve did as well with our tennis program as anybody could have," he said. "He operated it extremely well considering it was not as fully funded as we would have liked it to be. I'm sorry to see him go."

Snodgrass' resignation follows a tennis season that had improved over previous years. Just last year, K-State's Big Eight Dual Record was a dismal 0-7. This season they finished with a 9-13 dual record, 2-4 in the Big Eight Conference, and sixth in the league tournament.

"We couldn't have done much better," Snodgrass said. "We really did as well as we could with the players we had."

A tennis star, himself, at K-State, Snodgrass lettered three years in tennis. In 1969, he helped his team to a third place finish in the Big Eight. He and his teammates revised the K-State record books in 1970 when they placed second in the Big Eight.

Snodgrass said he may help in coaching last years' players, Jeff Jackard and Kris James, depending on who is appointed as the new coach.

"I talked to both of them, and they both want to come back. They said they would like me to help coach them," Snodgrass said.

Towers said search for a replacement would begin immediately.

Rec Services lists 1982-83 champs

Marlatt Six, the Haole Buggahs, Tau Kappa Epsilon and Gamma Phi Beta are all-University intramural division champions for the 1982-83 year, according to figures compiled by Recreational Services.

Marlatt Six won the men's residence hall division with 938 points, placing ahead of Marlatt Two and Marlatt Three, which took second and third with 912 and 860 points respectively.

In the men's independent division, the Haole Buggahs won with 680 points. AVMA '85 placed second with 645, while the Do Gooders grabbed third with 620.

Tau Kappa Epsilon won the fraternity division with 1,447 points. Beta Theta Pi followed with 1,427, while Sigma Alpha Epsilon finished third with 1,239.

Gamma Phi Beta sorority took the women's title with 897 points followed by Kappa Kappa Gamma with 852. Chi Omega took third with 659 points.

A total of 94 squads competed in the divisions, which began in September and ended in May.

Kings' new owners promise team to stay in Kansas City

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The Kansas City Kings, who have been struggling both on the court and at the gate, have been sold to a group from Sacramento, Calif., which promises to keep the National Basketball Association franchise in Kansas City, the team announced Wednesday.

Purchase price was announced at $10.5 million. The new owners were introduced at a news conference as Joseph Benvenuti, Frank and Gregg Lukenbill, Robert A. Cook, Frank McCormack and Stephen H. Cippa, all of Sacramento.

Lukenbill, the only member of the new ownership group to address the news conference, refused to identify specifically what projects the group has been involved with.

"We're in the real estate development business," he said. Asked for specifics, he said, "We've been building in Sacramento for 30 years. I'm sure that will research itself out. We've done it all."

Asked what properties in Sacramento he has been involved with, Lukenbill said, "Name it. All types."

The announcement said Benvenuti will own 50 percent and the remainder will be owned by a general partnership made up of the other purchasers, headed by Frank Lukenbill and his son, Gregg.

Gregg Lukenbill said he and others had made one other attempt at sports ownership when they tried to buy the Indiana Pacers earlier this year.

"We are buying this franchise as an investment," Lukenbill said in a prepared statement. "The lease that the team has with the city will be honored. Should the team continue to improve in its financial performance there is every possibility that it will stay right in Kansas City. The operation will be business as usual. No changes are contemplated."

The Kings have reportedly been a consistent money-loser since the franchise was moved from Cincinnati in 1973. Attendance this past season was 8,301 per game and the team compiled a 45-37 record — just missing the NBA playoffs.

Team officials past and present admonished reporters not to worry about the team leaving Kansas City. It has two years remaining on its lease with Kemper Arena.

"If you spend time wondering about the Kings leaving Kansas City, you're wasting your time," said Joe Axelson, general manager. "There is no thought to moving at this time. It is up to us to work hard and make it worth keeping here."

The Kings ownership was restructured a year ago among six persons. Leon Karosen, the chairman of the board, said the team "made important strides the past year."

"Even with this progress in mind, for some time our group has felt that it has taken the financial responsibility as long as it was comfortably able to do so," said Karosen. "We feel that we have found new, broad shoulders in Gregg Lukenbill and Joe Benvenuti — the two principals in the purchasing group. They have assured us that their goal is to provide a quality NBA operation in Kansas City with continued improvement on the playing floor as their primary goal."

Lukenbill said there was no thought given to moving the team to Sacramento.

"Sacramento has zero sports facilities. It's that simple," he said.

Race to cross longest state bridge

A race across the longest bridge in Kansas is the feature of the fourth annual Bridge to 'Burg 10K Road Race June 18.

The race will begin at 9 a.m. June 18 at the west end of the mile-long Randolph Bridge, which spans Tuttle Creek Reservoir. It will then proceed down K-16 and end in Oldsburg.

Nancy Hoffman, who has signed a letter of intent to run at K-State, won the women's division last year in a time of 40:59. Robert Lees of Manhattan was last year's winner with a time of 34:32 — a new course record.

Trophies will awarded to the top three finishers in age groups made up of those runners 13 and under, 14-17, 18-23, 24-29, 30-39, 40-49 and 50 and over in men's and women's divisions.

Fourth and fifth place finishers will receive medals, and an overall award will be given to the top male and female runner.

The Bridge to 'Burg race also features team competition. A minimum of three runners will comprise a team, with team members' ages being combined to form age groups. Cross country scoring will determine the winning teams. Awards will be given to the top team in each age group.

Olsburg's Midsummer Festival takes place in conjunction with the race. A flea market, noon barbecue and entertainment highlight the activities.

Misfortunes fall upon Royals' Brett, Wathan

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — John Wathan is not superstitious, but the Kansas City catcher is about ready to pack up the two Chicago Cubs T-shirts that he and George Brett bought last week, and ship them back to the Windy City.

Since they got the shirts, Wathan pointed out Wednesday, "the Cubs have won seven in a row and George and I are injured."

Wathan fouled a pitch off his left ankle Tuesday night, causing a nasty bruise that will sideline him four to five days.

Brett, the Royals' all-star third baseman, broke a toe while watching a Cubs game at home on television Wednesday. He, too, will be out about a week — and maybe longer.

The Royals could be excused for thinking they've been attacked by an injury jinx.

Last month, Dennis Leonard snapped a tendon in his left leg while throwing a pitch. The veteran right-hander — the Royals' best pitcher — is out for the year.

Don Slaught, the team's reserve catcher, was out for several weeks earlier this season when a pitch hit a batter and ricocheted into his hand, splitting a nail.

"It's just a bnch of freak accidents that are happening," Brett said in a telephone interview from his home. "I'm sure if you look at some of the other teams, you'll see they are having some injuries, too."

Brett was home doing some laundry Wednesday when he hurt his toe.

"I heard Harry Caray in the next room mention Bill Buckner was coming to bat," he said. "I've been a Bill Buckner fan for a long time, and he's a good friend and I wanted to see what he did. So I kind of jogged into the room real quick. You know how it is, everybody does it about once a week.

"I kicked the side of the door jam. I looked down at my toe and it was sticking out kind of funny. I went to the hospital, and they told me I had a broken toe."

Brett, who has a history of nagging injuries, ranks near the top of virtually every American League hitting category this year. His average, .369, is third, and he has 12 home runs and 39 runs batted in.

Brett said he was uncertain when he might play again.

"Right now I know I can't put any weight on it at all," he said. "In four or five days, we should get a pretty good idea."

The six-time all-star admitted he's growing weary of the constant nagging injuries that have marred his otherwise brilliant career.

"When stuff like this happens you have to start to worry a little bit," he said. "As soon as I did it I knew I was in trouble. But what can you do about stuff like this? As far as being paranoid, I think maybe a little bit. I'm starting to wonder. It's hard to explain."

Otis' bat sizzles; Royals win, 9-2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — If there was ever a time the Kansas City Royals needed Amos Otis to come out of a slump, it's now.

And the veteran center fielder appears to be doing just that, collecting two hits and scoring three runs in leading the injury-wracked Royals to a 9-2 victory Wednesday night over the Minnesota Twins.

"With all of these guys out, this is the best possible time to come out of my slump," said Otis, who had three singles in Kansas City's victory Tuesday night and has raised his batting average 66 points since May 15 to .264.

"I feel a lot better, more comfortable at the plate," he said. "When you're in a slump, you're not really out of it until you get some extra-base hits and drive in some runs. So far, I've just been hitting a lot of singles. But the rest should follow."

Willie Aikens had three hits and drove in a pair of runs to help the cause as the Royals scored four runs in the eighth inning.

Winless Daniel looks to nab LPGA tourney

MASON, Ohio (AP) — Beth Daniel concedes lack of motivation may be the reason behind the longest non-winning spell of her short, but brilliant Ladies Professional Golf Association career.

The tall, thin 26-year-old has collected 12 victories and won nearly $842,000 in less than five tour seasons. She accumulated three-quarters of a million dollars quicker than any pro women's golfer in history.

Yet she has not won since mid-August, going into Thursday's first round of the LPGA Championship.

"Oh, my gosh. It's been 10 months since I won. I wasn't aware of it. It's pretty pitiful. I've definitely had some problems with my swing," she said after a practice round over the Nicklaus Sports Center course.

Even in 1982, when she was winning five times, Daniel could feel problems arising.

"Last year," she said, "I noticed I was losing my motivation a little. I need to cut my schedule down. I need less tournaments to be more motivated. But it's hard to do. Sponsors want you to play.

"I'm not sure I have the drive I once did. When I first came out, I had unbelievable drive, maybe too much. I don't have that any more. I might have gotten a little burned out. There were a lot of demands on my time."

Most of her competitors would love to have what must be classified as an off-year for Daniel. She's finished second three times and been in the top 20 in all but three of her 13 tournaments. Her winnings of $75,000 put her seventh on the 1983 money list.

Of her best golfing form, Daniel said, "I think I'm pretty close to getting it back. It's just around the corner. I've felt that way for the last three weeks."

Daniel, as a long hitter, always ranks as a favorite on this 6,277-yard layout north of Cincinnati. Still, the site of the year's second women's major tournament does not rank as one of her favorite courses, even though she has three straight top ten finishes here.

"When I tee it up Thursday, I feel I have an advantage. I can reach the par fives in two. The short to medium hitters can't reach them," she said. "My complaint of the course is that it's not fair for the entire field."

This field of 131 ranks as the toughest of the 1983 LPGA Tour. Only two golfers in the top 20 money-winners are absent — No. 2 Kathy Whitworth and No. 12 Lynn Adams.

Jan Stephenson will defend her championship against such challengers as 1979 and 1981 winner Donna Caponi, 1978 titleholder Nancy Lopez and Amy Alcott, No. 1 on the current money list with $102,000.

Fee overcharge refunded to cyclists

Motorcyclists who were overcharged $10 last year for parking permits will be able to receive a refund from Security and Traffic. The Kansas Board of Regents voted May 20 to approve the refund.

Refunds will be available beginning Friday, Art Stone, director of Security and Traffic, said.

The price of a motorcycle permit last fall was supposed to increase from $5 to $10. But a typing error increased it to $20, a 300-percent jump from the previous year.

Letters were sent Monday to 327 of the 346 students who purchased permits. Stone said the figure was revised because some students already picked up their money, and the ones who bought permits after the printing error was detected were not charged the extra $10.

The letter gave three options, he said. Students may go to the office to get a cash refund, apply the $10 to next year's motorcycle permit or, if the student is not returning for the summer or fall sessions, a letter verifying the student's name, address and social security number can be sent to Security and Traffic. The refund will be forwarded to the student.

"Any student who can show he paid $20 can get the $10 refund," Stone said.

Refunds were not given immediately after the error was found because the regents needed to approve the action.

Stone said some faculty members came to the office to receive a refund, but were told faculty and staff motorcycle fees were correct. The refund applies only to students, he said.

Security and Traffic sold 346 motorcycle parking permits, giving the Traffic and Parking Council an extra $3,460, Stone said. The money for the refund is coming from this account.

Money from parking permits is used to upkeep, maintain, rebuild and patch parking lots. It also pays the salaries of the workers maintaining the lots and officers.

Noted plant expert to give address at annual horticulture short course

Charles A. Lewis, a therapeutic horticulturist, writer and lecturer, will be on campus Monday and Tuesday when K-State hosts its third annual Horticultural Therapy Short Course.

Lewis is currently the horticulture program director at the Morton Arboretum, a community-based project in Lisle, Ill., which is sponsored by the Chicago Housing Authority. He has spent 13 years in New York City and Chicago researching the human benefits gained from inner-city gardening.

He was also the coordinator of the American Horticultural Society People/Plant Program from 1972 to 1976 which studied problems concerning satisfaction and benefits of gardening.

Working with psychologists Stephen and Rachel Kaplan of the University of Michigan, Lewis has also studied the impact of enviromental changes on behavior.

Lewis will show slides of his work in the inner-city areas, where substantial social behivior changes were found in the residents when they were able to change their enviroments by working with living plants.

"Students in architecture, design and horticulture, as well as psychology and sociology, could benefit from attending the lecture," Mattson said. "Lewis is recognized by horticulture professionals as a leader in the field of horticultural therapy."

Four mini-course workshops at three skill levels will be conducted by about 10 horticulture therapists and professionals in related fields over the two days. Students can receive one hour of undergraduate credit by completing the course.

Annex

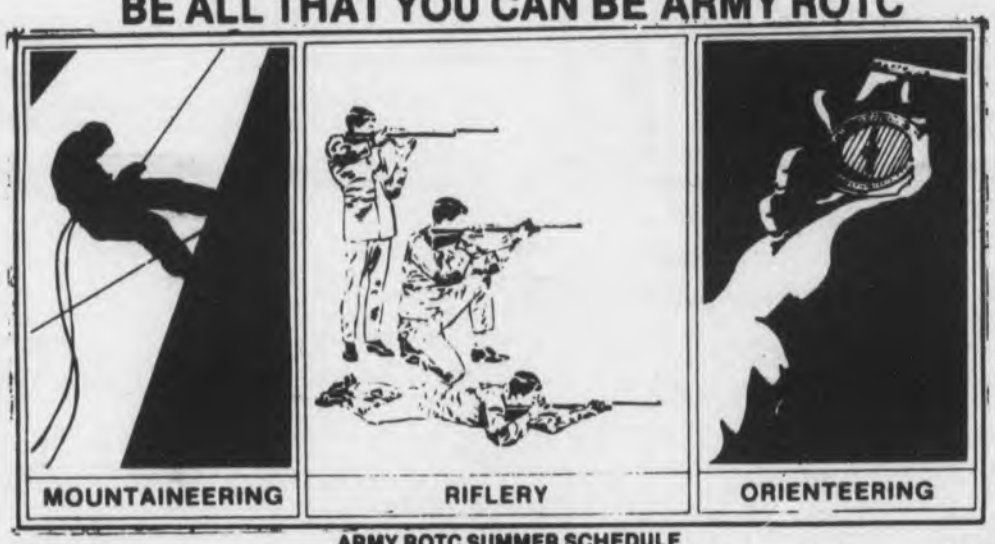
night to pass the annexation ordinance, just hours after the commission's normally scheduled meeting when the ordinance was first introduced.

"We followed the letter of the law," Pinaire said. "We violated no laws. There was nothing wrong with what we did."

Pinaire also attacked Manhattan and Riley County officials who challenged the annexation. He said they knew the two tracts of land were included in Junction City's ordinance but did nothing to get them removed.



Dan H. Myers, attorney for Manhattan, stood behind Bullock's ruling 100 percent, saying the judge was correct on all points and the annexation should be invalidated, citing the "all or nothing rule."

"If an annexation ordinance fails because of the improper inclusion of a tract or imperfect procedure, then the entire annexation ordinance fails," Myers said. He said the city commission's action in rushing the ordinance through legal channels "subverted the policy of open meetings" and was grounds for defeating the annexation.

The court took the case under advisement. A decision on the appeal could be released as early as next month.

Taking a hand in peace

Staff/Allen Eyestone

Approximately 100 people gathered in City Park Sunday to join hands in peace. The local group joined with participants around the world for the "Hands In Peace" rally.

By VIKKI WATSON
Collegian Reporter

Weekend rain dampened the ground but not the spirit of the approximately 100 participants who gathered for five minutes of meditation during the "Hands In Peace" demonstration, at noon Sunday in Manhattan City Park.

The local event, which coincided with similar demonstrations across the nation, as well as in Canada and New Zealand, was an observance for worldwide peace. It was the first year for the event, which was organized nationally by the Academy for Peace Research.

Participants, who ranged from toddlers to senior citizens, joined hands and circled Doris Grosh, associate professor of industrial engineering, who spoke before the meditation began.

"I think it's very nice to be in a town the size of Manhattan and have this many people show up on Sunday," Grosh told the group. "Good things happen when people pray, meditate or enter silence together.

"What is important is that we are here together, united...," she continued. "Let now peace fill your hearts for the next few minutes."

The group then sat silently for five minutes. Some clasped hands and shut their eyes, but everyone was silent until Grosh ended the meditation and led them in singing "Let There Be Peace on Earth."

Carolyn Coates, Manhattan resident and co-coordinator of the local event, said she believed the demonstration was a success.

"It's neat to feel the unity of people gathering together," she said.

However, each participant would have his or her own idea of whether the event was meaningful, she added.

"Each person has to evaluate it for himself," she said. "I felt glad that in my own home (Manhattan), we were linked with people in various countries. In all our diversity, there was the possibility of unity."

Brenda Tonn, senior in humanities, one the demonstration's participants, said that although the event was small, large-scale peace must begin in ways such as Sunday's event.

Tracy Rockwell, Wichita, meditates while his son Jeremy watches the precedings.

"I think we have to show our officials that peace is what is in our hearts and what we really want," she said. "The only way that we'll make any progress is through a grassroots movement like this. There is strength in numbers."

Doris Fenton, 84, Manhattan resident, said she believed the event was a good gesture of peace, even if the goal of worldwide peace seemed unobtainable.

"It begins in simple ways," she said. "It was nothing of big show; it was an expression of conviction. There was a feeling of true peace at the moment."

Christina VanSwaay, Manhattan resident, was disappointed with the lack of people who participated, but not in the demonstration itself.

VanSwaay agreed with the others, saying that worldwide peace must begin with individuals and small groups. She said the event was to share a conviction to strive toward a peaceful world.

"I think if you're not peaceful inwardly there's no hope," she said. "I have a certain satisfaction after being here. What I like about it is it's not political and there's not a religious emphasis on it. You can really include everyone."

Coates said she would gladly participate in a similar demonstration again.

"Every day you build what your life is going to be and we're all a part of what are nation becomes," she said.

"We start with ourselves and as the song says, 'Let it begin with me.'"

Weinberger: limits on advisers 'rigid'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said Sunday he foresees no situation in which American troops would be sent to Central America but that the limit on U.S. advisers in El Salvador may be too rigid.

Speaking on the CBS television program "Face the Nation," Weinberger was asked whether the Pentagon has a contingency plan in the event that Central America is overrun with communist or Soviet-backed troops.

"We do not see any contingency in which American troops would be used or needed in Central America," he replied. He said the United States' aim is to enable governments like that of El Salvador to defend themselves. "That's the basis of our policy," he said.

Weinberger also said the U.S. government's self-imposed limit of 55 military advisers in El Salvador may be too inflexible, but he described the limit as "workable enough."

"Any rigid limit has got great disadvantages because the needs fluctuate as far as training is concerned," he said. "You may have a situation in which it would be very desirable to have 60 people down there training for two weeks, and then you go back to 40.

"From time to time it would be desirable to have more, but if the El Salvadoran government has now decided, as they seem to have, to do more of their training in Honduras then I think the limit that is there ... is workable enough," he said.

Weinberger said the United States has an interest in making sure that Central America does not become a "nest of communist or Marxist-led organizations that make the defense of the continental United States more difficult."

But asked if the United States is building up a military presence in Central America like that in Vietnam in the 1960s, Weinberger said there is nothing that points to "a steadily or an inexorably increasing American participation."

Decrease in gas prices not seen for summer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — More states will raise their gasoline taxes in coming months, possibly reversing the seasonal drop in gas prices seen the past three summers, oil industry analyst Dan Lundberg said Sunday.

But the analyst said he couldn't predict with any certainty whether the net result of lower wholesale prices and higher taxes will be higher, stable or lower prices at the pump.

"The motoring public can likely expect moderate declining (pre-tax) product prices for the summer, offset however by increasing state and local taxation," Lundberg said.

Until 1980, gas prices and consumption traditionally rose during the summer because of vacation driving, he said.

However, gas prices and consumption dropped during the last three summers because of the recession, unemployment, greater use of fuel-efficient cars and the fact that prices were so much higher than a decade earlier, said Lundberg.

The analyst said his latest survey of 17,000 gas stations found that the price of gasoline is leveling off, with average self-service prices of $1.143 per gallon for regular leaded, $1.214 for regular unleaded and $1.324 for premium unleaded.

The survey — covering the three weeks ending June 10 — showed the average price of all grades of self-service gasoline rose to $1.238 per gallon, an increase of 0.88 cents per gallon.

"With a mere 0.88-cent increase over the past three weeks, partly due to state and local gas tax increases, (pretax) prices have obviously leveled off" when compared

El Salvador fighting guerrillas with 'pacification' tactics

SAN VICENTE, El Salvador (AP) — The army has begun one of its most ambitious operations of the war, using Vietnam-style "pacification" tactics for the first time against leftist guerrillas.

The long-range goal, the army says, is to clear guerrillas from the area east of the capital San Salvador and guarantee security for the residents and the estimated 35,000 people uprooted by the civil war.

The operation began with bombing and artillery attacks last week on the Chichontepec volcano, 30 miles east of San Salvador, but commanders eased up when they learned the guerrillas were not there.

"At least as far as Chichontapec volcano goes they have fled," said Col. Reynaldo Golcher, who heads the operation. He said the army now has a chance to break up camps and and supply bases the rebels have been building for years around the extinct volcano.

He implied troops will conduct search-and-destroy missions to smash guerrilla bases, then stay in the area to prevent the insurgents from returning and direct residents in rebuilding war-shattered villages.

This is similar to what U.S. troops and the South Vietnamese army did during the Vietnam War, then called "pacification."

Golcher refers to an "infrastructure" of rebel supply dumps, camps, hospitals and other bases.

There are permanent rebel bases around San Vicente, but sources say they are a small part of the rebel activity there.

"Most of the population is transient, and at any given time there may be from 500 to 2,000 guerrillas in the area," said a U.S. military adviser asked not to be identified.

University motion pending in Union discrimination suit

A motion filed for partial dismissal of charges filed against University officials more than a year ago is still pending in federal district court in Topeka.

Richard Seaton, University attorney, said Brenetta Kearney, former clerk typist for the Union Program Council, alleges she was denied due process and equal protection under the law.

Kearney filed the suit Feb. 25, 1982. She is seeking $600,000 in damages. Seaton filed for a partial summary judgment Jan. 15.

"There are two parts to her complaints," Seaton said. "The first is racial discrimination in connection with her evaluation and demotion as an employee at the Union. The second part is her complaint that she was denied due process and equal protection because we didn't follow our own rules."

Kearney underwent a state and University work performance evaluation in 1981. She appealed the evaluation July 31, 1982. Kearney later resigned from her position after being notified Aug. 14, 1981, of a proposed demotion.

Claims were filed against President Duane Acker; Walt Smith, Union director; Darwin Liverance, director of Personnel Services; Jack Sills, associate Union director; Mike Hatch, Union Program Council director; Marilyn Gilbert, Union Program Council program adviser; five classified employees who were members of the Civil Service Review Committee; and the Union.

"We have filed a motion for partial summary judgment. We're not asking for the whole case to be thrown out, just part of it," Seaton said. "We are asking for the claims against the president and the Union corporation, and the claims under the federal conspiracy statute to be thrown out. We're also asking that the due process and equal protection claims be dismissed."

Kearney also alleges that the University violated state and University performance evaluation rules when completing her evaluation.

"The thing we are saying is even if that were true, it is not an issue for the federal court," Seaton said. "It is not a federal question. At the best, it is a state question."

Seaton filed the partial summary judgment Jan. 15 and will postpone taking action until he hears from the courts.

"We are waiting on the court's decision to dismiss part of the case. Then the case will be set for trial," he said.

Charles Scott Jr., Kearney's attorney, said he and his client are in the process of preparing to go to trial.

"Our claim is that my client was demoted because of race. There is no other justification," Scott said. "We are seeking monetary damages. If the University's motion is approved, then we'll proceed on the claims left."

Campus parking lots to close for repainting

Security and Traffic has announced the following parking lots will be closed this week for striping:

Today: A-11, West Hall; A-13, Derby Food Center staff parking area; D-3, Goodnow Hall; and B-10, Pittman Hall staff parking area.

Tuesday: B-15, Hollis House; A-1, located east of Thompson Hall; and A-26, located north of Ahearn Field House.

Wednesday: A-2, Danforth and All-Faiths Chapel; A-28, Durland Hall; A-31, Thompson; and B-4, Call Hall.

Thursday will be used as a make-up day, if necessary.

Gas prices

with the overall 12-cent per gallon increase since mid-March, he said.

Lundberg said seven states will raise their gasoline taxes July 1: Montana (by 6 cents per gallon), North Dakota (5 cents), Washington (4 cents), Colorado (3 cents), Arizona (2 cents), Kansas (2 cents) and New Mexico (1 cent).

One ironic reason is the federal tax boost, said Lundberg.

"For individual states to take advantage of their right to share in the new federal gas tax collections, they have to put money up front" in the form of matching funds for highway contruction and repair, he explained.

So states faced with budget problems "are obliged to increase gas taxes so they will have the (matching) money needed to get the federal money," he said.

Beach Boys bring 'surfing rock' to Washington

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Beach Boys brought their California surfing rock 'n' roll to the White House on Sunday in what amounted to a symbolic presidential apology for the indiscreet words of the interior secretary.

"We were looking forward to seeing them on the Fourth of July," said President Reagan, gently chiding Interior Secretary James Watt. The secretary had banned the group from giving a free concert in the nation's capital on Independence Day because he believed rock music attracted the "wrong element."

Watt, who uttered his remarks this spring, was absent from the event, although he had been invited. An Interior Department spokesman said Watt was giving a speech in Florida.

Stadium guard opens fire on soccer fans

CATANIA, Sicily (AP) — A stadium guard enraged by soccer fans' jeers fired an automatic shotgun into the stands Sunday, killing one person, police said. Twenty-five others were reported injured by gunfire or by other spectators fleeing the gunman.

Police said 54-year-old Angelo Grasso pumped five or six rounds into the crowd at Cibali Stadium before being captured and jailed by paramilitary police in this eastern port city.

They said 25 other spectators were rushed to three hospitals for treatment, but it was not clear how many were wounded by shotgun fire and how many were hurt in the panicked rush to escape.

According to sketchy accounts from witnesses, police said, the guard, unarmed at the time, was patrolling the southern end of the stadium, where seats are inexpensive, when a group of young fans started insulting him. The infuriated guard went home, returned with the shotgun and opened fire without warning.

Two teen-agers shot after trying to siphon gas

HUTCHINSON (AP) — One Hutchinson teen-ager was fatally shot and another was injured early Sunday after they allegedly tried to siphon gasoline from a car parked outside a house, police said.

Police Lt. Walter Walker identifed the dead boy as William D. Gunderson, 16. His companion, 16-year-old Jerald J. Major, remained in satisfactory condition Sunday at Hutchinson Hospital with a gunshot wound to the right side of his back, nursing supervisor Marilyn McKinnis said.

The owner of the car was arrested Sunday and booked on one count of homicide and one count of aggravated battery. The officer said the 54-year-old man was released from the Reno County Detention Center on his own recognizance and was scheduled to face formal charges Monday in Reno County District Court.

Patrolman Terry David said the owner of the car told police he came out of his house carrying a 12-gauge shotgun, yelled at the boys, then fired the gun when they tried to flee. David said Gunderson was discovered lying in the street. The officer said Major returned to the scene after being shot.

Labor leader to resign following election defeat

LONDON (AP) — Labor Party leader Michael Foot said Sunday he will resign, following Labor's worst election defeat in 60 years, and the struggle was on for the leadership of the divided opposition party.

Clive Jenkins, general secretary of the Association of Technical, Scientific and Managerial Staffs, said Foot told him he would resign as party leader. Jenkins quoted the 69-year-old Foot as saying he would stay on until a new leader is chosen at the party conference.

Foot made no public statement, and reportedly wants to delay the announcement until Wednesday, when the newly elected House of Commons convenes. But the party later confirmed that he intended to resign.

Churches oppose radio station license renewal

WICHITA (AP) — The Inter-Faith Ministries of Wichita passed a resolution at its annual assembly Sunday recommending that the Federal Communications Commission not renew the license of a radio station accused of broadcasting racist programs.

The council, made up of city church leaders of various denominations, also asked individual congregations to join the appeal to deny the license renewal of KTTL-FM in Dodge City, 150 miles west of Wichita.

A public interest group based in Washington has challenged KTTL's broadcast license, alleging the station has acted irresponsibly in broadcasting taped programs advocating violence against blacks and Jews.

The Black Media Coalition, in a petition filed with the FCC, charged that KTTL's broadcast of the taped programs violated both the Fairness Doctrine and federal law against group libel.

The broadcasts at times urged listeners "to take the names of local Jews and go kill them," the coalition said.

The station's co-owner, Nellie L. Babbs, maintained that the programs were protected by the First Amendment, and she pointed out that she had offered time for responses by those with differing views.

Drunken drivers: no more leniency

The Kansas Supreme Court's unanimous decision Friday to uphold the state's DWI law marks a victory for all who will not condone driving while under the influence of alcohol.

The precedent-setting decision upheld the constitutionality of a 1982 law toughening penalties for drunken driving.

The challenge of the DWI law came to the Supreme Court as a consolidation of four cases from Pratt, Finney and Sedgwick counties.

In the key issue before the court, the Supreme Court was correct in saying it was constitutional for a provision in the law to prohibit plea bargaining of charges of driving while intoxicated.

The challengers argued that the plea bargaining ban "usurped executive branch powers" of prosecutors and constituted a "legislative meddling on judicial matters."

The court rejected that argument, saying the intent of the Legislature was similar to that in laws requiring mandatory sentences for crimes committed with a gun.

In the second issue before the court, the justices declared it was not unconstitutional to use as evidence a person's refusal to take a blood alcohol test.

This was ruled in accordance to a U.S. Supreme Court ruling in a South Dakota case. The Kansas court agreed that use of the refusal did not violate a person's Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination.

The high court was correct in its opinions on both issues, which Attorney General Bob Stephan said should remove any legal questions about the law and also send a strong message to county attorneys and prosecutors.

With that in mind, the state of Kansas can rest assured that it will be better protected and that leniency in enforcing the law will no longer be tolerated.

If potential violaters wish to avoid the penalties, they only need to heed Stephan's suggestion.

"We're not telling anyone they can't drink," he explained. "We're just saying that if you're going to drink, know your limits. And if you had too much to drink, you damn well better stay off the highways."

Monitoring committee for all groups needed

Editor,

Re: Brian La Rue's editorial, "UAB action right; penalty warranted," in Wednesday's Collegian.

It appears that the Union Activities Board was correct in denying the Maranatha Christian Assembly registration. The charges of deceit are very serious. However, the UAB is wrong in setting up the watchdog committee to monitor religious organizations exclusively.

Surely the UAB can't claim that MCA's actions are typical of all religious organizations — or are typical only of religious organizations. The committee should be monitoring the compliance of all registered committees.

Monitoring only the religious organizations, simply because one organization claiming to be religious did not honor the rules, seems to be like a lynch mob out to get all members of a race because one member was arrested.

This discriminatory policy of monitoring only the religious organizations should not be allowed.

Additionally, the Collegian seems to be too quick to jump on the bandwagon.

Surely a group that practices deceit could be expected to deceive its faculty adviser. An adviser is not expected to attend all meetings of the group. The officers of the group, however, are expected to notify the adviser of group activities and financial obligations.

If the MCA officers did not fully inform Dr. Johnson of the MCA actions, that is not the fault of Dr. Johnson. Who was convicted for the Mai Lai massacre, the troop leader or the leader's commanding officer?

Jogging for life

Who would pay $12 to run 13.1 miles and be the recipient of pain and agony? Me.

Actually, I was supposed to be paying just for the distance and customary memorabilia — not the aftereffects.

The race I am talking about occurred June 5 at Hospital Hill in Kansas City, Mo. Upon signing my name on the dotted line, I noticed the brochure emphasized that a proper training program was important.

"Yea, yea, yea," I thought. I had been jogging for two years.

Ready? Sure I was.

Nope, I wasn't ready. In fact, I was so much out of shape that you may have noticed me limping or slowly dragging my aged body across campus.

Why wasn't I ready? Because I failed to remember the aches and pains associated with taking up jogging for the first time after years of laziness.

My first notion to begin running was two years ago on a springlike day in March. I remember the weather for that winter had been exceptionally kind to Kansas. The combination of warm weather and seeing others running stirred my blood and drove me out the door to run.

THAT FIRST DAY was one for me to remember. I recall prior to this exercise, my most strenuous movement had been loading my truck, either to return to, or leave K-State. Oh, what a pain that was.

My first day of running was simply a delightful time. No pain. Movement was as simple as walking down to Aggieville from home — which at the time, was just across the street. I wondered why fear ever kept me from taking up jogging earlier.

My second day of jogging almost was as enjoyable as the first, except for a slight twinge of pain that began to overcome my body. However, there was nothing to fear — "No pain, no gain," I remembered.

The third day was, in effect, my day of punishment. Up at 7 in the morning — even before the birds woke up, I slowly rolled out of bed as if I were a log.

Pain, in large amounts, engulfed my ever-flabby body. I wondered deep within my mind what was happening. Was old age beginning to creep upon me at a rapid pace? No, no, I was just 22 years young, still proud and had no gray hairs.

Then it dawned upon me.

IN HIGH SCHOOL, my football coach had said those of us who were experiencing terrific amounts pain — that our bodies were aching — were in pain because of muscles we hardly ever used.

Now, at 22, I realized the number of muscles in the human body. I could not even count the number of places my body ached.

After a few days of needed rest, relaxation and a few beers, I recovered enough to restart my jogging program.

This time, I was careful with my new approach. Several jogger friends — you know, the kind with the spindly bodies and toothpicks for legs — advised me to refrain from jumping right into my training to regain my high school athletic physique.

After a month of jogging, I began to notice a change in my body.

Physically, I was reducing my tonage — slowly, but surely. It was true. I was no longer purchasing clothes from Omar the tentmaker. My food bill had declined and my belt was slowly reappearing.

After a month of jogging and noticing all these changes, running was quickly becoming old hat and there was no pain. I then decided to continue with jogging to avoid the pain and agony that comes with the start of running.

THE HOSPITAL HILL RACE served to remind me of the aches and pains I, as well as most joggers, endure the first time they take up jogging. However, I felt them for a second time.

Never again, I pray, will I allow my body to become so inactive that any exercise will result in pain. No more of this uncaring attitude before races. The fact I barely ran any miles in preparation — finally stopping two weeks before the Hospital Hill run — is a thing of the past.

I mean, what the hell...if remaining active helps me avoid pains of great magnitude, helps me lose 20 pounds and rids me of fears I once had of wearing shorts or taking off my shirt in public, then why stop?

I am, by no means, a Tom Selleck or Burt Reynolds. I am just 24-year-old Sean — with a few gray hairs, of course.

Foot tapping, hand clapping and singing along — not exactly a common occurrence in the K-State Union courtyard. John Hartford's audience didn't seem inhibited by the surroundings though, as the performer managed to capture a large audience and motivate it to participate during a nooner Friday.

Review

Hartford, a Grammy award winner, is one of five national tour shows sponsored by the Union program department and Student Governing Association. The national tour performances, which are also included on Manhattan's Arts in the Park schedule, are sponsored in cooperation with the city's Parks and Recreation Department.

Hartford, often leading the audience in singing and clapping, played 30 minutes without a pause. Despite the fun of playing, Hartford was all business about his music. He wasted no time with small talk and concentrated on showing his skills on the fiddle, banjo and guitar. Wearing a black vest and top hat, he sawed away at his fiddle like he was at an old-fashioned hoedown instead of a college lunch spot.

Hartford plays all his instruments well and has the characteristic high singing and good timing of the bluegrass style. He accompanied himself percussively with continual foot tapping on an amplified floorboard. The floorboard had a few solos, with the help from the control panel.

Besides recognizable tunes like "The Orange Blossom Special," Hartford performed several original songs. The lyrics to the funny "Don't Leave Your Records in the Sun" and the sad "Going to Work in Tall Buildings" were indicative of the Challenger crew prepares for 'ambitious' space flight

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Twenty-two years, 36 flights and 88 astronauts after Alan Shepard blazed the U.S. man-in-space trail, an American woman travels to the new frontier Saturday morning.

Sally Ride's historic role has overshadowed other aspects of the flight, but it is one of the most ambitious yet in the fastmaturing shuttle program.

With Ride, 32, playing a key part, the five astronauts aboard the space shuttle Challenger are to deploy two commercial communications satellites, practice rendezvous maneuvers with a third payload and conduct more than 20 science and technology experiments.

"It's a really exciting flight, with something for almost everyone," says Robert L. Crippen, the mission commander.

The flight — second for Challenger — begins at 7:33 a.m. EDT and lasts six days. Its return to Earth is to be on a 15,000-foot runway at the Kennedy Space Center, just three miles from the launch pad.

Crippen, 45, is commanding Challenger on the seventh shuttle flight. He was pilot of Columbia's maiden trip in April 1981 and is the first man to make a second trip in the reuseable ship.

The other crew members are pilot Rick Hauck, 42, and mission specialists John Fabian, 43, and Dr. Norman Thagard, 39. Thagard, a medical doctor, was added to the crew in December to study motion sickness that has afflicted seven of the 16 astronauts who have flown in the shuttle.

The five-member crew is the largest ever

Spaniard takes Westchester Classic with tie-breaking eagle on last hole

HARRISON, N.Y. (AP) — Seve Ballesteros, who took the Masters title home to Spain two months ago, scored a dramatic, tie-breaking eagle on the final hole to win the Westchester Classic by two strokes Sunday.

Ballesteros, who plays most of his golf in Europe, acquired his fourth American PGA Tour title with a 276 total, eight shots under par on the hilly Westchester Country Club course. His closing round was a 70, one under par.

The victory, worth $81,000 from the total purse of $450,000, boosted Ballesteros' U.S. earnings to $189,764 for the season and stamped him as a prime contender for the U.S. Open Championship, to be played next week in Oakmont, Pa.

Ballesteros, 26, won the British PGA two weeks ago. He also has won more than two dozen world titles, including the 1979 British Open. His previous American triumphs have come in the 1978 Greensboro Open, the 1980 and 1983 Masters.

The dashing young Spaniard was tied for the lead with Andy Bean and Craig Stadler when he stood in the middle of the fairway on the 535-yard, par-5 finishing hole.

He lashed a two-iron shot dead at the flag, the ball rolling to a stop some 12 feet below the hole. Ballesteros needed only to two-putt for the victory, but, with a flair for the dramatic, he rapped the ball into the cup for an eagle-three.

Bean and Stadler, whom had finished ahead of him, could only watch in disappointment from the scoring tent. They tied for second at 278. Bean had a closing 67 in the hot, muggy weather, and Stadler shot 68.

Mike Reid and Fuzzy Zoeller, each of whom had a share of the lead at one time or another over the final 18 holes, tied at 279 with Mark McCumber. McCumber had a closing 68. Reid shot 70 and Zoeller 72.

Ballesteros started the final round in the lead and retained it with a string of 10 consecutive pars.

Mariners stifle Royals, 8-1

SEATTLE (AP) — Glenn Abbott fired a four-hitter in his first appearance since 1981, and Seattle broke out of an offensive slump with a 16-hit attack to beat the Kansas City Royals 8-1.

The Mariners, who had scored only four runs in the previous 48 innings, ended a five-game Royals winning streak in salvaging their only victory in the three-game series.

Every member of the starting lineup had at least one hit in Seattle's biggest hit output of the season. Jamie Allen had three hits, including a two-run homer, and Al Cowens also had three hits.

Abbott gave up two hits and a run in the first inning, then limited the Royals to two doubles by Cesar Geronimo, retiring the last 10 in a row.

He walked one and struck out three in his first outing since Oct. 3, 1981. Abbott missed the entire 1982 season after an elbow operation and a subsequent bout with viral meningitis while in Salt Lake City on a rehabilitation option.

Abbott began the 1983 season at Salt Lake City, and after four starts there, was recalled by Seattle on Thursday. He is the only player who remains with the Mariners from the club's opening-game roster in 1977 and still is the club's all-time leader in games started and innings pitched.

Kansas City drew first blood when Willie Wilson led off the game with a single and later scored on a double by Frank White. Seattle tied it in the bottom of the inning on an RBI single by Dave Henderson off Larry Gura, 5-8, who lost for the eighth time in nine decisions.

Seattle got what proved to be the winning run in the fourth when Orlando Mercado's blooper fell in among four Royals in center field, scoring Dave Henderson. The Mariners put it away with three runs in the sixth on Todd Cruz's sacrifice fly and Steve Henderson's two-out, bases-loaded single.

A run-scoring single by Jim Maler in the seventh and Allen's fourth homer in the eighth closed the scoring.

'Cats' volleyball team receives new assistant

Ginger Mayson, who coached the University of South Alabama to a second-place finish in the 1982 Sun Belt Conference, has been hired as a full-time assistant coach for K-State's volleyball team.

Mayson, 27, replaces Bill Fritsch, who had been a graduate teaching assistant coach the past two years.

She guided South Alabama to a 56-26 record the last two years, which included a 42-13 mark last year.

Last year's team also compiled a 17-match winning streak — best in South Alabama's nine-year volleyball history.

"I wanted to get into a more progressive program in a bigger conference," Mayson said. "It's a chance to advance professionally."

Her selection pleases Scott Nelson, head volleyball coach.

"It's obvious which direction our program is headed with the creation of a full-time assistant coach and the ability to attract someone with her qualifications," he said. "Ginger has outstanding communication skills and knowledge of the game. She will be involved in promotional aspects, recruiting and team training."

Mayson received her degree in criminal justice administration from South Alabama in 1977. She lettered four years in volleyball and three times in basketball at South Alabama, serving as volleyball captain twice and making all-State in both sports under the old AIAW setup.

Shuttle

launched from Earth in a single spaceship.

Two Soviet women have flown in space, but Ride will take her place in history books as the first American woman to make the trip.

During a recent crew news conference she chided reporters for focusing attention on her gender. "It is time in this country that people realize women can do any job they want to," she said.

Said Crippen: "She carries her share, and more, and she will prove that during the flight."

Ride will be busy from the moment of liftoff, serving as flight engineer during the blazing ascent.

Once in orbit, she and Fabian will conduct a countdown and remotely deploy a communications satellite for Telesat of Canada. The second day they will release another for the government of Indonesia. Each of these customers is paying NASA $12 million for the space delivery.

After they joined the astronaut corps in 1978, both were assigned to work with the shuttle's robot arm, and for three years they have mastered the intricacies of the 50-foot Canadian contraption.

New students begin enrollment procedure

Coming to K-State for the first time, many students may feel insecure and overwhelmed by the campus' size and the number of students. Reassurance, with a welcome from President Duane Acker, is how the fall pre-enrollment schedule begins for incoming freshmen and transfer students.

The process began Friday and will continue every day except Sundays and Mondays until July 1. Students are pre-advised and given information about their colleges at sessions scheduled throughout each day.

A special schedule is set up for accompanying parents. They are given an escorted tour from the Union to the different colleges and are included in most of the student enrollment sessions.

Marilyn Trotter, New Student Programs director, said there are three urgent needs to be met while new students are on campus: class selection, financial aid and housing.

Students meet with an adviser and are given information concerning these areas.

In addition, they are informed about services available to them on campus, such as student health, career planning and recreation, Trotter said.

An estimated 3,000 students and another 3,000 parents are expected to participate in pre-enrollment this summer, she said. Letters were sent earlier in the year to all interested high school and transfer students inviting them to attend one of the pre-enrollment days.

Soviet premier 'agrees in principle'; Lawrence could be negotiation site

WASHINGTON (AP) — The mayor of Lawrence said Monday that Soviet leader Yuri Andropov "agrees in principle" that the mayor's proposal for a Soviet-American summit meeting in that city in America's heartland would be a good idea.

Mayor David Longhurst said in a telephone interview that he learned of Andropov's response in a call Monday from a Soviet Embassy official in Washington.

But Longhurst — as well as an embassy spokesman who was interviewed later by The Associated Press — said Andropov added the condition that any summit meeting with President Reagan must be well prepared and assured of producing serious results.

The White House press secretary's office was questioned but had no immediate response to the invitation, which Longhurst extended to Reagan and Andropov sometime in April, to meet in Lawrence. The mayor said Monday he had not heard from the White House.

An administration official, who spoke only on the condition that he not be identified, said, "As far as the site of a summit is concerned, it first has to be decided it was a constructive and appropriate time to have a summit, then consideration will be given where to hold it."

In his last comment on the possibility of a summit, Reagan said May 27 that a mere get-acquainted meeting with Andropov "makes no sense," but that he would be happy to go to the summit if solid groundwork were laid and there were good prospects for results.

Longhurst said the Soviet Embassy official, identified as minister counselor Vicktor Isakov, called him and "said that Andropov expressed his gratitude for the invitation to a meeting for peace between himself and Reagan.

"He said that it's Andropov's feeling that such a meeting would benefit not only the people of the United States and the Soviet Union but the people of the entire world," the mayor said.

However, Longhurst quoted Isakov as adding:

"Andropov said that such a meeting as we suggest would raise expectations to a very high level. And that because of those expectations, it is imperative that such a meeting be prepared for very thoroughly, and it's very important such a meeting produce results."

Michael Lyfemko, an embassy press official, confirmed Isakov's call and, reading from a written statement, told The AP:

"The Soviet leadership always considers high-level contacts and summit meeting as one of the most effective methods of developing relations between the countries. At the same time, Soviet-American summit meetings, first of all, must be well prepared and produce serious political results in order to meet the hopes and expectations that the peoples of our countries will have for it."

Rep. Bob Whittaker, R-Kan., sent letters to Reagan and Andropov on Monday urging that they agree to meet at Lawrence.

Whittaker said the mayor, backed by the Lawrence City Council, had extended the invitation "with the hope that such a personal visit would be a predicate to peaceful and productive negotiations for world peace."

In his letter to Andropov, delivered to the Soviet Embassy, Whittaker suggested that the Soviet leader be more cooperative at strategic arms control talks in Geneva, Switzerland.

"Frankly, Mr. Andropov, when the survival of mankind lies in a delicate nuclear balance, gestures are not enough," Whittaker said, referring to Andropov's response to the proposal for a summit in Kansas.

" ... Perhaps even more important than a cordial visit at Lawrence would be productive negotiations at Geneva," Whittaker said.

City firefighters to serve campus begining July 1

As of July 1, Manhattan will provide fire protection to K-State.

The one-year agreement will cost $57,000, payable in two equal parts of $28,500 due Dec. 30, 1983, and June 30, 1984. Bill Smith, Manhattan fire chief, said subsequent contracts will be made annually.

Don Harmon, city manager, said that "in the past, we responded when the University needed us, although it was outside the city limits."

Currently, K-State has one fire truck and a student volunteer fire department which costs the University $57,000 a year for fire equipment and maintenance.

Smith said it became evident through the years that help was needed and he recommended the city give the University complete fire protection.

Memorial to build full-service hospital; construction date, location undetermined

Memorial Hospital's Board of Trustees, after deciding Wednesday to make the hospital into a full-service health care facility, still don't know where its new hospital will be built or when construction will begin, Colleen VanNostran, board chairman, said.

But the new full-service, 50-bed hospital will include surgi-center capabilities.

"When and where has yet to be determined," VanNostran said. "But we want to be the sole provider of hospital-based health care for the community."

Memorial Hospital's board voted to build a new hospital after severing negotiations with St. Mary hospital Wednesday. The two hospitals had been working together since October 1982 on plans for a joint acute-care facility.

The single acute-care facility was recommended by the joint planning committee on hospital needs to eliminate duplication of services and increase efficiency in Manhattan's health-care system.

The committee on hospital needs recommended the consolidation of acute-care services at St. Mary Hospital.

Scheduling a meeting with Bishop Daniel Kucera of the Salina diocese was a problem which contributed to the decision to sever negotiations, VanNostran said.

"His schedule did not fit within our time frame," VanNostran said. "It didn't fit within our extended time frame we had set, either."

She said Memorial's board "wanted confirmation that he (Kucera) was aware of the negotiations and that we were working for the best health-care for Manhattan and Riley County," VanNostran said.

Roger Sink, chairman of the St. Mary hospital board, said Monsignor Jim Hake, Kucera's representative, had offered to talk with Memorial's board, but they wanted to talk to the bishop.

"If we were to continue negotiations with St. Mary, the board wanted to visit with the bishop," VanNostran said. "We made that perfectly clear."

Memorial also severed an agreement which has all emergencies going to St. Mary and obstetrics-gynecology patients going to Memorial. This will be effective within 60 days.

VanNostran said the board had not notified St. Mary in writing, but would do so soon.

River crossing

A poncho-clad pedestrian checks traffic before wading across a submerged Vattier Street during a rainstorm which drenched Manhattan late Monday afternoon. Much of northeastern Kansas was under severe thunderstorm and tornado watches most of Monday.

Fire

"K-State is possibly the most important segment of the city," Smith said.

One service which the city won't provide is fire inspection. John Lambert, director of campus safety, will provide fire inspection services for the University.

According to the contract, the fire chief will have complete authority when the city's fire department responds to a fire.

In the past K-State had water pressure problems, Smith said. Evelyn Hupe, assistant to the vice president of University Facilities, said new water mains have been installed within the past two years, alleviating many of the water pressure problems.

"Water problems are not as bad as they used to be. Facilities have been greatly enhanced," Smith said.

The city and K-State are now making a leasing agreement for 6.4 acres of land on the northeast corner of Denison and Kimball avenues, which will be used for a new fire station and training center.

The facility has been approved at a cost of $2.28 million. In addition to the fire station, the building will contain living quarters, training center and administrative offices. The facility will be the largest in the state and is designed to give 40 to 50 years of fire protection.

A student program will be devised where student firefighters will live in the facility and be paid for part-time work.

Ground breaking for the facility is planned for late fall and should be completed in late 1984 or early 1985.

High court bars military personnel from suing commanding officers

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the name of military discipline, a unanimous Supreme Court on Monday barred armed forces personnel from suing individual superior officers who trample their constitutional rights.

The justices ruled 9-0 that five black sailors have no right to seek cash damages against particular officers who purportedly discriminated against them. But the decision left a slim opening for conspiracy suits against groups of superiors.

"The need for unhesitating and decisive action by military officers and equally disciplined responses by enlisted personnel would be undermined" if servicemen were allowed to sue commanding officers, Chief Justice Warren E. Burger wrote.

He said the high court "has long recognized two systems of justice" — one for civilians and the other for the military.

In three other decisions involving court access — and who may sue whom — the court ruled:

—That civil servants cannot file suits against their government bosses based on asserted violations of their free-speech rights under the First Amendment.

—That people who plead guilty to a crime still may sue police for violating their constitutional rights.

—That the 90-day filing deadline for lawsuits alleging on-the-job discrimination in violation of federal law may be extended while workers await the outcome of pending "class action" suits that may affect their grievances before filing their own lawsuits.

In barring the military lawsuits, the justices overturned a 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruling that allowed the black sailors to seek monetary damages against their superior officers.

The appeals court ruling, the first of its kind in the nation, said that officers may be sued by subordinates for "recognized constitutional violations."

In their 1978 lawsuit, the sailors charged they were victims of racial discrimination as demonstrated by the assignments they received. Their $10 million suit, filed in a federal court in California, also contended that officers failed to protect the sailors from Ku Klux Klan sympathizers.

The five blacks, who have since left the Navy, said racial abuse against them was tolerated by officers aboard the landing ship USS Decatur.

Pioneer first spaceship to leave solar system

MOUNTAIN VIEW, Calif. (AP) — Pioneer 10 sped beyond Neptune's orbit for an eternal trip through the Milky Way galaxy Monday, becoming the first man-made object to leave the solar system and reach outer space.

A tiny operations center speaker crackled with data from the spacecraft as it sailed beyond the known planets at 8 a.m. EDT on a journey that already has taken it 3.5 billion miles since it left Earth more than 11 years ago.

"The spacecraft will probably survive forever," declared Alan Fernquist, assistant flight director at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Ames Research Center.

"It will not encounter any other objects," he said. "Over the next million years it will not come closer than three light years to any known stars."

On Pioneer's hull is a gold-plated plaque engraved with the figures of a man and a woman and a chart giving the location of the sun, the nine known planets, and Pioneer's home planet.

"It's sort of like Columbus discovering the new world," Fernquist said.

Pioneer has flown so far that radio signals, traveling as fast as light, require four hours and 20 minutes to reach Earth and crackle through the small speaker in the Pioneer Mission Operations Center at Ames.

Pioneer's transmissions may last only another 10 or 12 years, ending either as the ship's power supply decays or the craft travels so far its signal cannot reach Earth.

But scientists believe Pioneer 10 will outlast the end of the solar system five billion years hence, continuing for an eternity.

Two robbers pull 1.6 million dollar heist

AIX-EN-PROVENCE, France (AP) — Two armed men stole $1.6 million in cash and checks from the headquarters of an armored car company Monday, police said.

Police said the robbers surprised employees of the Protecval security company shortly before the offices opened and forced them to open several safes.

Police said the operation was similar to a Jan. 22 holdup of another armored car company in Vitrolles in southern France in which $2 million was stolen.

Swiss authorities charge Soviet with espionage

BERN, Switzerland (AP) — Swiss authorities said Monday they arrested a 49-year-old Soviet citizen linked to an espionage case in South Africa.

The federal justice department said the Soviet suspect will face a Zurich court on charges of espionage against a third country, forging documents and violation of aliens laws.

The brief announcement, which did not give his name or other details, said the Soviet was arrested Jan. 25 near a Zurich museum where he was supposed to be handed microfilms of secret South African documents carried by Ruth Gerhardt, the wife of the navy officer, Dieter Felix Gerhardt.

Both the Gerhardts were taken into custody in January and South African authorities say Gerhardt admitted he was in the pay of the Soviet intelligence since 1964. Gerhardt was commander of South Africa's main shipyard at Simonstown.

Donations save heart transplant patient's life

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Lasalle Rogers is looking forward to going home after heart transplant surgery that was paid for with $100,000 in donations.

"I can't wait," said Rogers, 20, of Detroit. "I miss my family so much."

Last August, doctors at Wayne State General Hospital in Detroit told him a transplant was his only hope of staying alive, but said it would cost at least $100,000.

Rogers, who lived with an unemployed mother and disabled father, could not pay for the operation.

Mike Aja, a Wayne State General Hospital medical student, called Detroit televisions and newspapers for help.

"In the back of our minds, we thought nothing would come of it," Aja said. "It's hard times in Detroit. Who has money?"

But within six weeks, thousands of people had sent in more than $100,000.

Briton to reach shore after 10-month voyage

BRISBANE, Australia (AP) — Briton Peter Bird says he expects to reach Australia on Tuesday after almost 10 months working to become the first person to row alone across the Pacific.

Rough seas and strong winds have kept him off the Queensland coast for days, but Bird, 36, was reported to be in good spirits when he spoke to his back-up team by radio Monday.

Ken Crutchlow, coordinator of Bird's trans-Pacific attempt, said Bird was off Cape Weymouth near Cape York, Australia's northernmost tip.

Weather

Today will be a replay of yesterday. Mr. Sun is still on vacation, but if we all go to classes today, maybe he'll come back tomorrow. It will be mostly sunny today, with a 50 percent chance of showers. Highs will be in the mid-70's with northwest winds 10 to 20 mph.

Orbiting reactors pose serious risks

As if the public didn't have enough worries over nuclear safety, the United States is pressing ahead to develop atomic reactors for use in space. The program should not be implemented at this time.

Administration officials are mapping a long-range effort to design and build orbiting nuclear power plants that would — as envisioned by American specialists — dwarf those aboard the two ill-fated Soviet spy satellites that tumbled to the Earth.

In contrast, former President Carter had said he would favor a "total prohibition" on launching reactors into orbit after Cosmos 954 fell in 1978, scattering radioactive debris over northern Canada.

Cosmos 1402, the other reconnaissance craft, came down early this year.

U.S. officials say the orbiting reactors could play a key role in the nation's future military strategy.

Potential civilian uses also are foreseen by U.S. officials. They range from manned orbital stations to futuristic schemes such as producing oxygen from ore mined on the moon.

Critics, however, contend that the real impetus behind the space reactor program is military, and that the long-term dangers of hurling jumbo-sized radioactive payloads into space aren't being dealt with adequately.

John Clewett of the Critical Mass Energy Project, a Washington-based group opposed to nuclear power, said, "If the military puts larger reactors into space, it will dramatically increase the risk — both from re-entry of radioactive debris and from malfunction on launch."

Clewett pointed out that "so far, the public has been lucky.

"The radioactive debris from Cosmos 1402 fell into the Indian Ocean, and the 20,000 square miles of land contaminated with radiation from Cosmos 954 were up in the Canadian tundra."

In weighing the issues, perhaps the public should not press its luck any further in the deployment of the space-based power plants — after all, as the saying goes, "it's better to be safe than sorry."

Tape series to show effects of arms race

Editor,

One of the most urgent issues facing our country today is the nuclear arms race, and its attendant threat of nuclear holocaust.

The effects of the arms race impinge on all other facets of our society — including the economy, social issues and the environment.

It is imperative that all citizens educate themselves with regard to the facts of this issue, and determine for themselves whether our current nuclear buildup and nuclear policy represent wisdom and necessity — or waste and insanity.

As matters currently stand, to ignore this issue is to cast a vote for continued nuclear proliferation. Irregardless of your point of view, it is vital that your vote be cast from position of knowledge — not ignorance or fear.

The University environment provides a perfect setting for discussing the facts and fallacies of our current nuclear policy.

To facilitate this discussion, Physicians for Social Responsibility of Kansas and the American Baptist Campus Ministry are co-sponsoring a series of 30-minute video tapes entitled "The Threat of Nuclear War."

The video tapes will be shown in the Union at noon on Tuesdays.

I urge you to meet with us, and share your views and perspectives.

'U2' will feel good

When some friends of mine told me they had purchased a ticket for me to see U2 in Tulsa, I had visions of a "full-scale-party-down" road trip, but that was about it.

Sure, U2's last album, "War," had ranked a 10-star rating on the "Judy-Mills'-Rank-the-Album-by-Stars" rating system. But that was the studio's version, and a lot of groups seem to lose their polish in the transition between studio and stage.

That's what I figured would happen with U2, but five friends of mine and I decided to make the road trip. I mean, a party is a party.

Home for me is Pittsburg, a four-hour drive. So I blew off classes on Thursday and Friday and — may I add, without a bit of guilt — drove home before heading down the good old Will Rogers Turnpike, also known as Interstate 44, to Tulsa.

After a mere 20-minute wait in line, we walked in and found great seats in the balcony. They weren't ours, but we decided to stay until someone tried to move us.

The small auditorium, the short line outside and the seat availability confirmed my fears that this probably would not be a very professional concert. Well, I was wrong — dead wrong.

The U2 concert was one of the best I've ever seen.

I'M NOT GOING to spend the rest of this column trying to convince you to run out and buy all the U2 albumns you can find, or fight for tickets at their next concert.

I also am not going to bore you with stories about how great Bono Vox's (the group's lead singer) voice is, and how he can captivate the audience unlike any lead singer I've ever seen.

Nor will I bombard you with accounts of how the group seems to take a more emotional look at the world through their music than the mundane, assembly-line rock 'n' roll that dominates the charts nowadays.

This would probably be as exciting as listening to your roommate's account of last night's late-night movie, so I'll spare you.

But what does interest me is the common atmosphere found in all concerts: that feeling of letting go.

I've got a theory about what makes concerts so interesting.

First of all, you never know what to expect — anything can happen and that's part of the fun.

One can find all sorts of illicit drugs with little or no effort.

I didn't get angry when someone tried to sell me opium. I declined with a smile and watched the guy for the rest of the evening. This guy was strange — he intrigued me, instead of annoying me.

One can find the darker side of humanity at these concerts.

FOR A GIRL who grew up in a middle-class, midwestern small town, these experiences are amusing — if not worthwhile. It's something to tell the grandkids.

Back to my theory...

A concert is a place where people let it go.

Who worries about her jobs, deadlines or flunking her first financial accounting test? You can bet I didn't even think about those things the whole evening.

But everyone lets go in a different way — or to a different degree — than everyone else, and that's what makes it fascinating.

You don't have to condone what you see to find it amusing.

I'll never forget the guy I saw at one concert. I looked to my right and there he was in the next aisle (not mine, thank God), "blowing chow" — vomiting — all over the place, his friends, etc.

He lifted his head and sort of turned his face in my direction, and grinned from ear to ear. Whatever turns your crank, I guess.

This feeling of release is the underlying theme at all concerts to some degree.

The U2 concert was no exception.

THIS DUBLIN-BASED GROUP made us dance to a song that warns of the possibility of a nuclear war and the impending threat of the bomb.

U2's recent album, "War," deals with the bloodshed in Northern Ireland along with the struggle of the Polish Solidarity Union.

Although these topics may seem somewhat gloomy, the group's vitality, energy and compassion came through as a strong ray of hope in this weary world.

Somehow, I can't believe the girls in the front row, who were screaming and groping for Vox everytime he walked near the front of the stage, were too concerned with the threat of nuclear war.

Vox has been quoted in Record magazine saying that he wants people to leave a U2 concert feeling good and "a bit more free."

Well, Mr. Vox, you succeeded with me.

Wah-Shun-Gah floaters make big river splash over nine-mile course

By JAN HISH
Collegian Reporter

Imagine 63 rafts, inner tubes and boats, on a nine-mile venture down a river on a lazy Sunday afternoon. Sound like a big party?

Although it wasn't a party, the "River Float for Fun" was one of the many events scheduled for the first Wah-Shun-Gah Days celebration in Council Grove, held Friday through Sunday.

Sponsored by the Council Grove Chamber of Commerce, the annual celebration was named for a chief of the Kaw Indian tribe, Gene Colby, chairman of the float, said. Other activities included a 10-kilometer race, parade, arts and crafts fair, street dance, children's theater, horseshoe pitching contest and talent show.

The Float for Fun down the Neosho River, starting below the Council Grove Dam and ending at the new bridge four miles south of town, was strictly for excitement and fun. Although sometimes referred to as a raft race, no intentions for a race were involved and no entry restrictions were made on participants. Anything that would stay afloat was allowed to enter, with a nominal fee of $1, Colby said.

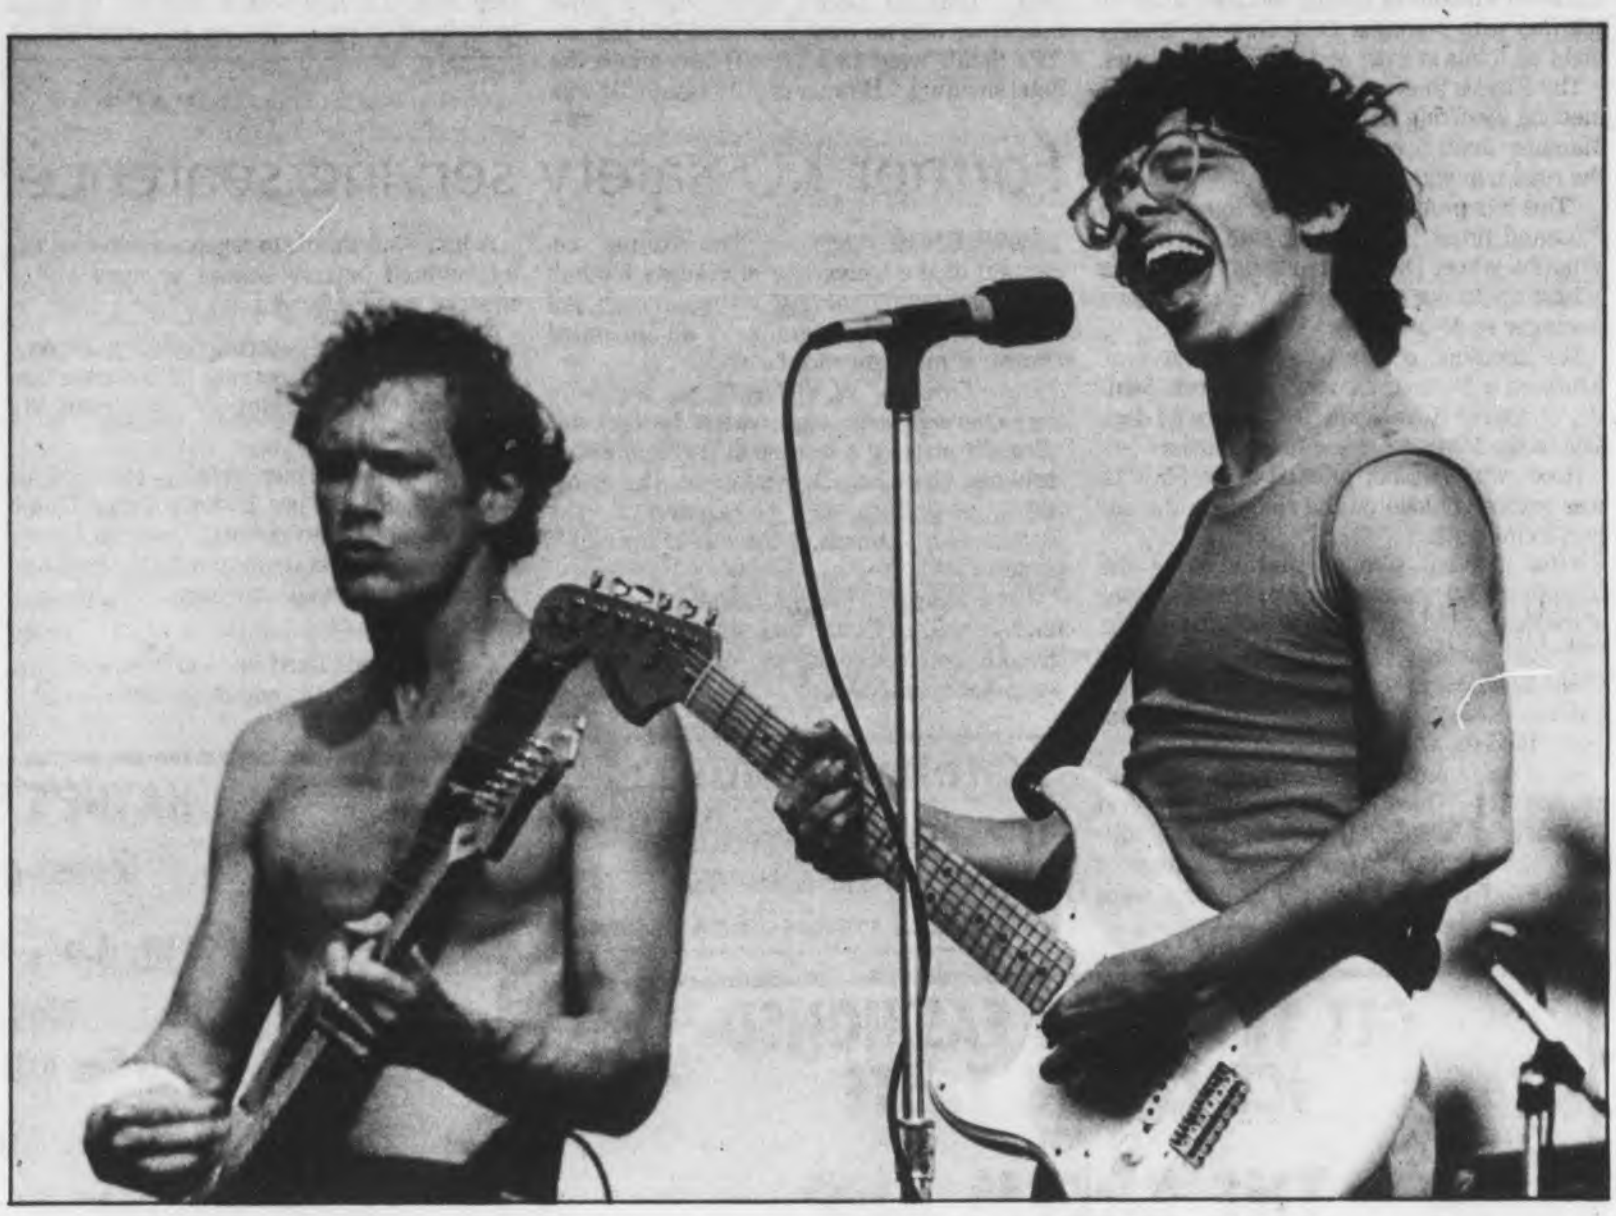
Although a smaller number of participants were expected for the float, 161 people began the journey.

"This being the first ever for such an event, a small group of participants was expected," Colby said prior to the race.

STARTING TIMES, initially planned for 1:30 p.m. and 2 p.m., were rescheduled for 1 p.m. to aid in clearing the entry point of congestion from anxious raft occupants.

With the lake gates open, Colby said the adventurers were warned the water would be swift and the trip dangerous with many perils ahead, including a four-foot waterfall, possible log jams and snake-infested waters. For safety reasons, life jackets were mandatory and a release form, disclaiming any liabilities to the sponsors, had to be signed by all participants.

In addition to "floaters," spectators gathered at the starting point and three pickup points to enjoy the fun. The entry of the various vessels into the water featured many hilarious mishaps and initial spills. Among the boats, rafts, canoes and inner tubes of various shapes, sizes and colors, were "The Rebel," a freshly-painted monstrosity resembling the "Batmobile," and an Army rubber raft.



Located two miles downstream just beyond the first pickup point, the floaters were cheered by more than a thousand people as they encountered their first obstacle — the treacherous waterfall. For an added precaution, lifesavers were stationed on both sides of the waterfall in anticipation of an accident, while ambulances were on hand at the start and finish locations.

FORTUNATELY, NO ASSISTANCE was necessary, spills were few and limited mainly to the inner tubes and their occupants. Collisions provided added excitement as slower moving rafts were hit from behind by swifter moving canoes and rafts, attempting to maneuver through the safest point of the waterfall.

Beyond the waterfall, the Main Street bridge provided a second pickup point. This, as well as the first point, was bypassed by the majority of floaters who opted for the additional seven miles of the course. Here they would be concealed from all eyes until they emerged at the new bridge four miles south of town.

A welcome party waited anxiously for the first survivors to appear and hear their tales of travel. A row boat manned by a husband, wife and friend team, Bill and Reisa Martin, and Bob Spiker, came ashore first after nearly two hours afloat. Second and third places were captured by canoe teams, with some 50-odd floats to follow during the next two hours.

With the glow of accomplishment, the sunburned and mud-caked floaters retired their faithful and trusting vessels and while the first Wah-Shun-Gah Days celebration was coming to a close, reminiscing turned to planning for next year's Float for Fun.

Rangers end rock at six o'clock

Bash finishes on sour note

By LUCINDA ELLISON
Arts and Entertainment Editor

Laid back.

That was the atmosphere, the attitude and the look as approximately 500 people spread out beside whitecapped Tuttle Creek Reservoir Sunday. Some of the more active present joined in hackey sack and volleyball games.

Ron Owensby, Manhattan, is congratulated after winning the beer-chugging contest.

A strong wind, which was enough to discourage swimmers, skiers and boaters, couldn't disrupt the feeling. A combination of beer, warm afternoon sunshine and socializing kept them contented as they prepared to hear the third band that day — until the announcement came.

After the laid-back blues played by Mojo, the more upbeat music of Plain Jane and several contests, the audience at the Fifth Annual Brother's Bash was disappointed by the end of the concert without a performance by Caribe.

According to John Triggs, manager of The Avalon, the bash was scheduled to end at 6 p.m. Because of uncontrollable circumstances, the show had a late start, putting each band approximately one hour behind schedule.

"They (Brother's) had a special event permit and listed the time from 1 p.m. to 7 p.m. In that permit, they stated the music and noise would terminate at 6," Stan Curtis, park manager of the Tuttle Creek State Park, said.

"THAT'S WHAT THEY applied for, that's what we expected and, undoubtedly, that's what they expected," he added.

According to Curtis, although those in charge of the bash had asked for an extention, there was no one available at the park with the proper authority to extend the permit. Curtis and the director of the Kansas park system in Topeka were the only people with the authority to extend the time.

"If I signed that permit, I wouldn't expect my rangers or my people to extend it," Curtis added.

Because the special events permits are relatively new, no policies have been set concerning extensions.

"We need to get a policy set if this is a problem," Curtis said.

Although the end of the bash may have disappointed some, the afternoon had its highlights.

Scheduled to begin at 1 p.m., Mojo was unable to start the show until almost 2 p.m., due to an accident which kept the bass player from arriving on time. Once they began, a combination of the band's original songs, classic rhythm and blues from the '50s and '60s and some reggae set the mood for early afternoon.

ALTHOUGH MOST OF Mojo's performance consisted of blues, the group's show included a few Chuck Berry selections and older rock songs.

While breaking between Mojo and Plain Jane, those in charge of the party secured volunteers for beer chugging contests for both male and female members of the audience, and a coed three-legged race.

Breaking the relaxed mood, Plain Jane immediately picked up the pace. As the audience became more involved in the music, the group started off its portion of the concert with "Stray Cat Strut," "Satisfaction," by the Stones and "SOS" by The Police. The band kept the audience alive with an oldies medley of songs by The Who.

Unaware of the forthcoming announcement, the audience was entertained by a wet T-shirt contest as Plain Jane left the stage in preparation for Caribe's performance. Spectators crowded around the stage as, once again, volunteers from the audience competed in the contest. A hot dog snarfing contest also filled the time before Caribe set up.

Although the band was set up and prepared, the time limit on the special event permit kept the band from performing after 6 p.m.

In compensation, those wearing purple wristbands that were given at the concert will have free admittance to The Avalon Thursday night where Caribe is scheduled to perform. Only those of legal age will be allowed entrance to the club.

Royals' pitcher Hood receives fine for scuffling with manager at hotel

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Kansas City Royals pitcher Don Hood was fined an undisclosed amount of money Monday after he scuffled with Manager Dick Howser Sunday night on a bus in front of a Minneapolis hotel.

The Royals announced the fine following a meeting involving Hood, Howser and General Manager John Schuerholz, who was making the road trip with the team.

"This has probably happened in baseball a thousand times," Schuerholz said. "It was a situation where Dick confronted a player not acting up to our standards. We expect our manager to do that."

The incident occurred about 11:30 p.m. following a 2½-hour charter flight from Seattle, where the Royals had dropped an 8-1 decision to the Mariners a few hours earlier.

Hood, who has not pitched since May 22, was extremely loud on the ride from the airport to the hotel.

After the bus stopped and most of the players exited, Howser entered the rear door of the bus and shoved Hood back into his seat.

The two exchanged words and shoves. After a few minutes, they had to be restrained by coaches Rocky Colavito, Jim Schaffer and Jose Martinez and pitcher Vida Blue.

After being pulled apart, Howser and Hood continued to shout at each other. Several Royals players standing outside the bus watched the incident, which lasted nearly 10 minutes. Witnesses said no punches were thrown.

"Dick and I talked about it and Dick was bothered by what he was saying," Schuerholz said. "Don, in Dick's eyes, was a little boisterous and he went back and told him so.

"I didn't want him (Hood) to go into the hotel shouting," Howser said Monday. "It was bad enough on the bus. I wanted to get him quieted down before we went inside. I had to stop him. If it had been a little bit, it would have been different. But he was shouting all

Former KU safety serving sentence

LAWRENCE (AP) — The former co-captain of the University of Kansas football team has begun serving a three-month jail term after pleading guilty to an amended charge of misdemeanor battery.

Gary Coleman, 22, of Lawrence, originally was charged with aggravated battery for allegedly striking a woman in the face with a drinking glass last December at The Sanctuary, a private club in Lawrence. The woman, Gay Johnson, is the wife of the club's owner.

Jerry Harper, Douglas County district attorney, said Johnson was intervening in a dispute between Coleman and a waitress when she was struck.

A jury was unable to reach a verdict on the aggravated battery charge in April and a mistrial was declared.

Harper filed the amended charge Friday, and Coleman began serving his sentence that day in the Douglas County Jail, according to a court spokesman.

Coleman, a former safety, entered the amended plea before District Judge Ralph King Jr. King also ordered Coleman to pay court costs, $140 in restitution to the club and the costs of plastic surgery for Johnson, estimated at $350.

Coleman completed his four years of football eligibility at the end of the 1982 season.

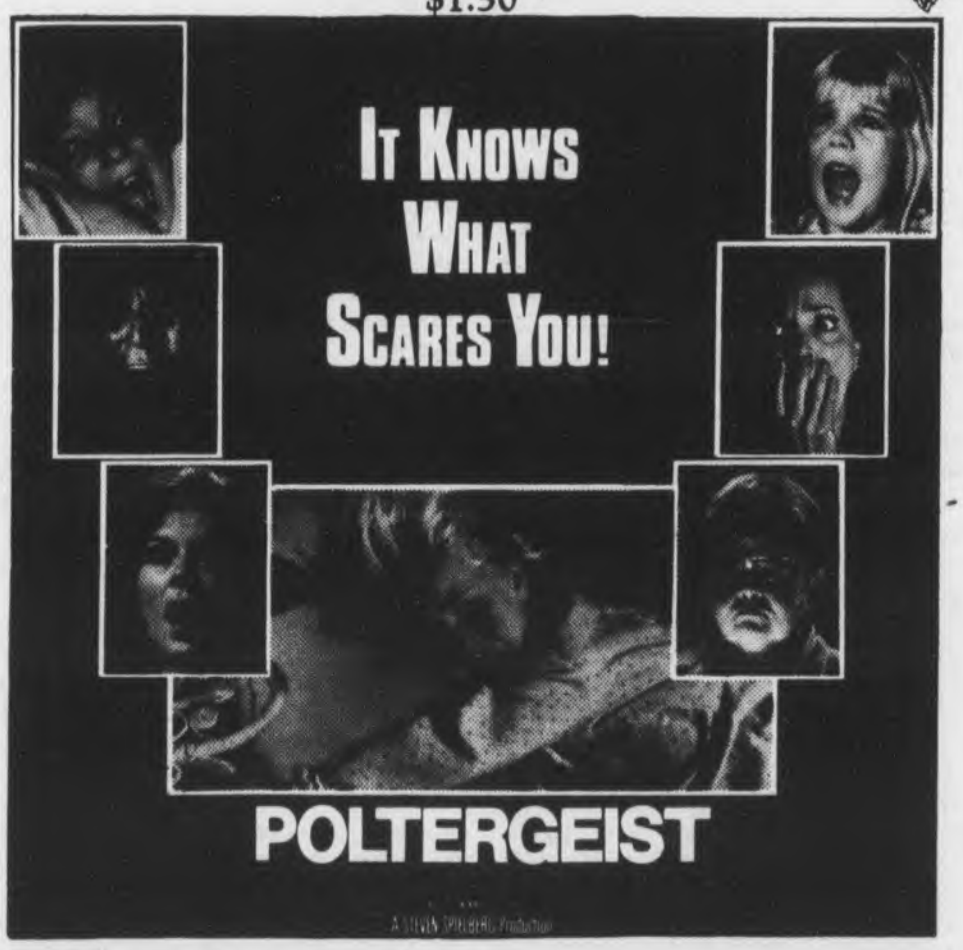
Track prep star inks with 'Cats

The nation's second-ranked triple jumper, Kerry Harrison, has signed a national letter of intent to attend K-State this fall, Wildcat track coach Steve Miller announced Monday.

The 5-foot-10, 160-pound graduate of Brookfield (Wis.) Central High School has triple jumped 50-7½, long jumped 24-4½ and high jumped 6-8.

Harrison is the 1983 Wisconsin state champion in the triple and long jumps, and he placed third in the high jump.

Miller said that Harrison and Gary Jefferson (sprinter and latest K-State signee) "are two of the best kids in the country in their events."



"Kerry will contend for the Big Eight championship in the triple jump next year, so it was important for us to have signed a high-caliber athlete in this event," Miller said. "We are very happy to have signed Kerry because he is an awesome athlete."

ENROLL IN AMERICA'S LARGEST MANAGEMENT TRAINING PROGRAM.

Becoming an officer in today's Army—which also includes the Army Reserve and Army National Guard—requires getting the right kind of management and leadership training.

What's the best way to get it? By enrolling in America's largest management training program-Army ROTC.

In the Army ROTC 4-year program, you'll acquire discipline of mind and spirit, and the ability to perform under pressure. We call it learning what it takes to lead.

It'll pay off, too. First, during your last two years of college, when you'll start receiving up to $1,000 a year.

And, most of all, on graduation day, when you receive a commission along with a college degree.

ARMY ROTC. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

KC receives 9-4 thumping

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Gary Ward, Tom Brunansky and Randy Bush each drove in two runs in an 18-hit Minnesota attack as the Twins snapped a six-game losing streak Monday night by trouncing the Kansas City Royals, 9-4.

Minnesota starter Bobby Castillo, 3-4, retired 15 straight hitters before Hal McRae, Willie Aikens and Amos Otis doubled to lead off the ninth, fetching Ron Davis from the bullpen.

Steve Renko, 5-5, was knocked out in Minnesota's four-run fourth, which began with Gary Gaetti's single and Bobby Mitchell's bunt hit.

Brunansky singled to put the Twins ahead 3-2, and Ray Smith delivered another run-scoring single to chase Renko. With two outs, Brunansky scored on reliever Mike Armstrong's wild pitch, and Ward drove in another run with a single.

The Twins added a run in the fifth on Brunansky's RBI double and made it 8-2 in the sixth with singles by John Castino, Ward and Bush. Mickey Hatcher singled in an eighth-inning run.

Bush put Minnesota ahead 1-0 with a first-inning double, but Kansas City tied it on Frank White's RBI double in the third.

The Twins retook the lead in the third on Houston Jimenez's first major-league hit, a double, and Ward's triple.

The Royals tied it again in the fourth on Don Slaught's RBI grounder.

the way from the airport to the hotel."

Hood, a 33-year-old left-handed reliever, has been upset by his inactivity since being called up from the Royals' Omaha farm club. He is 0-1 with a 1.12 earned run average in just 14⅓ innings.

"With a 10-man staff, somebody has to lay out," Howser said. "There are a lot of reasons why a pitcher doesn't pitch. It was part of my idea to bring him up (from Omaha) last year and this year."

Hood could not be reached for comment.

Campus security to change name; 'pride' a factor

Security and Traffic will undergo a name change this summer. As of July 1, the department will be called the Kansas State University Police.

"The old name is misleading, because the department is more than security officers and a traffic office," Art Stone, director of Security and Traffic, said.

"Under state law, security officers are not allowed to make arrests or do investigative work. We have 25 certified police officers and nine security people," Stone said.

"It is also a matter of professional pride. Our officers have undergone a lot of training and deserve to be called police officers. It should help people to relate to them better and accept them for what they are," Stone said.

In the past, there have been problems because people were not sure what the functions of the department are and the new name should help solve the problem, he explained. Time has been lost because the Riley County Police Department has been called and then had to contact Security and Traffic.

"The name change is a move on President (Duane) Acker's part to give the community and campus a better understanding of what the functions of the department are," Stone said.

Faculty Senate meet to consider budget

The budget for fiscal year 1985 will be discussed at the Faculty Senate meeting at 3:30 p.m. today in the Flint Hills Room of the Union.

Also on the agenda is discussion of the actions of the Board of Regents at its May 20 meeting and a preview of the next regents meeting, scheduled for Friday.

Richard Gallagher, senate president and professor of electrical engineering, is scheduled to announce the following committee chairman appointments: John Eck, professor of physics, Academic Affairs Committee; Margaret Nordin, associate director of the Center for Student Development, Faculty Affairs Committee; and Van Withee, professor of agronomy, Faculty Senate Committee on University Planning.

Plants, people develop bond, speaker says

Behavior and attitude changes can be seen in inner-city people who begin working with plants, Charles A. Lewis, horticulture therapist, said.

These changes highlighted Lewis' lecture, "Human Dimensions of Horticulture," Monday morning in the Union Little Theatre. Lewis has 13 years of experience working with inner-city tenants in gardening projects and is visiting K-State as an instructor in the Horticultural Therapy short course.

Lewis showed slides diagramming basic interactions between plants and people. When people become active in a plant's welfare, he noted, a special relationship is achieved.

"People can become intimate with a plant," Lewis said. "They see results — they know when it wilts, they must water it. If it lacks vigor, they must apply fertilizer. A language develops between plants and people when the plant signals its needs."

"Gardening is a process," Lewis stated. "The process brings about a product, but it is the by-product which horticultural therapy focuses on — what happens to a person. A person develops self-esteem and pride about what he has nurtured."

Lewis first became involved in horticultural therapy when he worked as a judge for a gardening contest, sponsored by the New York Housing Authority each spring for its 600,000 tenants. Tenants plan designs for the gardens and a fund provided by the Authority gives the tenants plants to use.

Each August, the gardens are judged and awards are presented. As Lewis participated in the project, he began to realize that a greater involvement existed than just the excitement of competition. He quoted one 35 year-old resident as saying, "This is the first creative thing I've done in my life."

Lewis quoted letters from tenants in which tenants told about the interaction between neighbors who hadn't known each other before.

"Everyone smiles and discusses our garden," one letter said. "They worry over too much rain, not enough rain. They're all so pleased that children are interested in caring, not destroying."

Coping with vandalism was a problem the tenants had to solve by working together to protect the plots. Lewis quoted one group as saying, "We knew who the troublemakers were, so we invited them to join our garden group and assigned them the job of guarding the plants — now we have no more problems."

Lewis said the contest began producing unexpected results. The high-rise apartments became a neighborhood. Vandalism was reduced. The tenants began gardening clubs and began caring for the grounds.

In Philadelphia's inner-city area, the Neighborhood Garden Association organized a project in which 85 percent of the residents agreed to plant and maintain window boxes for two years. Individuals cleaned up their streets, painted their front steps and converted vacant lots into playgrounds and gardens.

These efforts, somehow propagated by the window box project, led to more voluntary action by residents to improve their environment. One resident told Lewis, "This was the most dumpified place I have ever seen. Now it even smells good."

The third project Lewis described was the Robert Taylor Homes project in Chicago. Colorful gardens set up by residents inspired them to paint their buildings and outdoor furniture. The idea caught on, and soon tenants were painting large murals on other buildings.

"During the next year, no grafitti appeared on the decorated buildings," Lewis said.

"Plants are non-threatening and non-discriminating," he said. "It doesn't matter if one is black or white, has been to kindergarten or college, is poor or wealthy, is healthy or handicapped — plants will grow if one gives them proper care."

For many K-State students and area residents, a world of cement without living green plants is uncomprehensible.

When asked if horticultural therapy students from schools such as K-State could relate to tenants in an inner-city area, he responded, "One must focus on the personality of the individual — whether a person is from a rural background or a city.

"You must focus on seeing people and plants as you know them and not be hung up on cultural and social differences," Lewis said. "The plants can actually serve as a common denominator for people to be able to communicate. They can actually be the bridge between a therapist and an inner-city resident."

Collegians available

The Collegian has been disappearing quickly these days — maybe too quickly, Brian La Rue, editor and senior in secondary speech education, said.

"We print approximately 6,000 Collegians," La Rue said. "It doesn't matter that the paper may be eight pages or 16 pages in length — 6,000 is 6,000.

"We are asking people to take only what they need. Students are paying for the paper, so they should receive it. There are plenty of Collegians. Take one and share it with a friend."

Task force promotes changes to foster high-tech

TOPEKA (AP) — Lawmakers should revamp Kansas' banking and business tax systems to foster expansion and development of high technology companies in the state, a governor's task force was told Tuesday.

Touching on some of the most controversial issues in the state, a task force committee recommended a statewide reappraisal of real estate, elimination of Kansas' prohibition against multi-bank holding companies, and exemptions in or a phase-out of the tax on manufacturers' inventories and equipment.

The Financing and Taxation Committee made the suggestions in a report to the Governor's Task Force on High Technology Development. The task force, headed by former U.S. Sen. James Pearson, took no formal position on the suggestions but is to make final recommendations to Gov. John Carlin by July 1 based on proposals offered by its committees.

The taxation panel said its suggestions would help businesses, particularly newly formed small high technology companies, more easily acquire needed capital.

"The priority is the availability of capital. It is critical," said Ron Ryan of Wichita, chairman of the committee.

He described Kansas' current unit system of banking as "too restrictive" and said it often forces companies to deal with out-of-state banks to obtain the money necessary for some projects.

Kansas law allows one corporation to own the controlling interest of one bank and up to 25 percent of other banks. Elimination of the law would permit multi-bank holding companies, financial corporations which own and control two or more banks.

Ryan said property reappraisal is needed to eliminate inequities in taxation between real estate and personal property such as business equipment. Current estimates place the statewide average real estate assessment at 6 percent of its fair market value instead of the 30 percent required by law.

"Review of the state's tax history reveals that a shift in the tax burden has occurred in the direction of personal property," said Ryan, president of Ryan Aviation in Wichita.

"The committee is concerned that the nature of this shifting makes business cost projections extremely difficult and if left unremedied will discourage investments by new as well as established buisnesses."

Ryan conceded that his panel's recommendations were "controversial," and he noted that reappraisal and multi-bank proposals have been politically sensitive issues in the Legislature. Both matters were considered during the 1983 legislative session, but both failed.

Also the panel suggested several banking law changes to give state chartered banks the same powers of federally chartered banks and savings and loans.

Ryan noted that the bulk of the states provide some form of tax incentive for economic development and said "it just doesn't happen" without such efforts.

The taxation committee also recommended:

—A revision of Kansas' security laws, which were described as "antiquated."

—Creation of "research and redevelopment" tax credits for business and industry.

—The Kansas Public Employees Retirement System, or KPERS, invest in high technology ventures in the state.

—A review of state regulations to determine if some are "excessive" and can be eliminated to help business development and expansion.

The task force's Marketing Committee also issued a report, suggesting the state should better publicize its existing "industrial strengths" as a way of attracting new high technology companies and expanding its current base of aircraft, electronics and communications industries.

The panel recommended $1 million in additional funding in the Department of Economic Development for marketing over three years, starting with $350,000 in fiscal year 1985 which begins in July 1984.

Also, the panel said the governor should become the "chief spokesman for high technology development" in Kansas and the state should enlist more support from its congressional delegation to obtain federal research grants and facilities.

Mahaffey granted extension to file appeal

By LAURIE RANDALL
Collegian Reporter

Ben Mahaffey, associate professor of forestry, has been granted a 15-day extension to file an appeal concerning a lawsuit against the University. U.S. District Court Judge Patrick F. Kelly decided in favor of the University in a judgment handed down May 13.

Mahaffey claims the University and the Kansas Board of Regents have infringed his constitutionally guaranteed rights to freedom of speech, to due process and to equal protection of the law by denying him job responsibilities he was hired to do.

"There can be no greater basis for an expectancy that a position will continue than the one the plaintiff possesses; that is, he was hired to perform the very job responsibilities of which he was later deprived," according to a statement written in Mahaffey's brief to Kelly.

Mahaffey was hired as an assistant professor in the Department of Horticulture and Forestry in 1972 to teach in the College of Agriculture. In 1976, he was promoted to associate professor and, therefore, gained tenure.

According to Kelly's judgment, the college's administrative structure was reorganized in 1977, bringing Mahaffey's teaching activities under the direction of the Department of Forestry.

Following the reorganization, Mahaffey suggested the parks and recreation area management program be accredited separately. His views were not adhered to and, he claims in his legal brief, that his stance caused some hostility within the department.

Later, Mahaffey publicized a student paper in his classes that revealed his views toward the adminstration's decisions regarding the reorganization.

According to Mahaffey's brief, former Forestry Department Head Herald Gallaher retaliated by giving him an unfair negative performance evaluation for 1978-79. Consequently, Mahaffey did not receive a salary merit increase.

Mahaffey filed internal appeals to the General Faculty Grievance Board in 1978, 1979 and 1980. Each appeal was unsuccessful.

Mahaffey later filed a lawsuit against the University and the Kansas Board of Regents. After receiving Kelly's judgment favoring the University and the regents, Mahaffey was given 30 days to appeal the case.

However, that decision had not been made, so a 15-day extension was filed, Peggy McNeive, Kansas National Education Association (K-NEA) staff attorney, said.

The extension gives Mahaffey and the K-NEA until June 28 to decide whether they want to appeal Kelly's judgment.

"The decision hasn't been made on whether we'll appeal the District Court's decision," McNeive said.

Tim Mustaine, Kelly's law clerk, said the extension is purely procedural.

"It does no more than preserve the appeal time to the Court of Appeals of the 10th Circuit in Denver," Mustaine said.

Richard Seaton, University attorney, says Mahaffey was treated equally on all counts.

"We gave him due process with grievance hearings. We treated him equally. He was not denied equal protection and this is not a case involving free speech," Seaton said. "It's really a quarrel he had with my clients and the University department."

Mahaffey's claim that the University's actions denied him free speech was thrown out by Kelly due to a precedent set recently in the U.S. Supreme Court decision involving Connick vs. Myers (1983).

"When a public employee speaks, not as a citizen upon matters of public concern, but instead as an employee upon matters of only personal interest... a federal court is not the appropriate form in which to review...," cited Kelly.

Seaton said the University and Kelly basically agreed on that point.

"We said basically the same things he said," Seaton said. "He bought our case and threw it out before trial."

Kelly's judgment was rendered on behalf of the University due to Mahaffey's personal grievance.

"This court is not empowered by the law to intervene; and the interpersonal friction is unlikely to be remedied by a mere judicial decree," Kelly said.

Diver suffers neck injury in Natatorium Tuesday

John Burroughs, freshman and Upward Bound student, suffered a neck injury at the Natatorium last night while attempting a dive.

Burroughs was taken to St. Mary Hospital where he was treated and released.

Shonda Collins, Natatorium lifeguard and junior in interior design, said Burroughs was attempting a "can opener" dive when he injured his neck.

"He was going off the board feet first, twisting and turning at the same time," Collins said.

Burroughs' roommate, Kenny Guie, freshman, said he saw Burroughs enter the pool.

"We were doing can openers and he leaned his head back too far. I knew what he had done because I saw him (perform the dive)," Guie said. "Later, we were going to play basketball and he told me his neck was hurting. I just told him to walk around and shake it off."

"I went over and asked if he was all right and he said 'yes,'" Collins said. "We gave him a cold pack and told him to go lie down."

Burroughs later began shaking and asked the lifeguards to call an ambulance.

"He probably laid there for about 55 minutes before we called the ambulance," Collins said. "I watched him the whole time as he got out of the swimming pool. We put the cold pack on him about 15 minutes later. That's when he got the shakes and chills."

Burroughs was transported to St. Mary by ambulance.

MAST, firemen to demonstrate rooftop rescue

Practice makes perfect — especially in fire and safety protection.

Fort Riley's Military Assistance to Safety and Traffic (MAST) unit will demonstrate a roof-top evacuation at 1 p.m. today at Derby Complex.

The evacuation procedure is being conducted in order for MAST and the Manhattan Fire Department to work out problems that may arise during a fire or natural disaster at one of the high-rise residence halls.

MAST is an emergency transfer service provided free upon request to Manhattan by Fort Riley's 82nd Medical Detachment.

The test will include a briefing to discuss possible problems. A 175-pound mannequin will be taken to the roof and a MAST helicopter will hover above the roof to pick up the mannequin. In an actual emergency, the helicopter will have the capibility to remove three people at one time, Dr. Arnold E. Levenson, MAST coordinator, said.

Bill Smith, Manhattan fire chief, said the fire department doesn't have the equipment to reach to the top floors. The ladder truck has a reach of 85 feet, or approximately seven stories, "but due to the parking and lay of the land, it will only reach about five or six stories," he said.

"The roof can support a helicopter — it has a capacity of 12,000 pounds," Levenson said. However, due to the surfacing on the roof, the helicopter will not land for fear of damaging the roofing tar.

This type of rescue has not been done on high-rise buildings in Manhattan, Levenson said, but the cable lift has been used to help individuals in the area.

The procedure is being practiced because the Manhattan Fire Department will take over the University's fire protection July 1.

Salvadoran army reports low re-enlistment

WASHINGTON (AP) — Only 15 percent of the Salvadoran soldiers trained by the United States two years ago are still in the army, and nearly half of those trained last year are gone, the Pentagon said Tuesday.

Rep. Clarence D. Long, D-Md., chairman of the House Appropriations subcommittee on foreign operations, said many are not re-enlisting after two-year compulsory tours because they are paid only $25 a month and face heavy casualties.

"They may be illiterate, ignorant peasants, but they're not that stupid," said Long. He also claimed that considering the low re-enlistment rate, the $9,000 cost for the United States to train each Salvadoran soldier is often "a waste of money."

However, the Pentagon figures even show a heavy attrition rate among officers. Of 500 officer cadets trained at Fort Benning, Ga., last year, only half remain on active duty, the figures show.

The Pentagon released the Salvadoran figures as 100 Green Berets arrived in Central America for another round of training for the Salvadoran army in its 3½-year-old war against leftist guerrillas.

The figures do not show how many of the 6,800 soldiers trained by the United States were killed, wounded or captured. Last year, the Salvadoran high command reported that the army suffered 3,801 casualties in the year ending June 30, about one-sixth of the army's 22,000 men.

Generally praised for their fighting ability and high morale, the three U.S.-trained battalions are usually sent where the casualties are highest.

U.S. officials concede privately that the low re-enlistment rate is a serious problem for the Salvadoran army and the Reagan administration's efforts to improve its fighting capacity. They say a new financial incentive is being set up to encourage re-enlistment.

In 1981, about 1,050 men of the fast-reaction Atlacatl battalion received intensive training by U.S. military advisers in El Salvador and 445 others were trained in the United States and the School of the Americas, a U.S. training facility in Panama, the Pentagon said.

Of that 1981 group, an estimated 15 percent remain in the Salvadoran military, said a Defense Department spokesman, who spoke only on condition he not be identified.

All told, 6,800 Salvadorans are U.S.-trained, with about 3,000 still in the army.

Angry French farmers smash millions of eggs

SAINT-BRIEUC, France (AP) — About 1,000 French poultry farmers angry over low prices smashed an estimated 5.5 million eggs at a public dump outside this Brittany town Tuesday.

The protest followed Monday's dumping of more than 200 pounds of dead fish in the streets of Brest in western Brittany by independent fishermen involved in a fishing rights dispute with large trawlers.

Brest also has been the target of angry poultry farmers and egg producers who have loosed thousands of live chickens in the streets to protest Common Market farm policies.

Yves Auffret, president of the National Federation of Egg Producers, said Tuesday's protest was intended to point out that farmers were being paid less for eggs than it cost to produce them. The farmers get about 1.3 cents an egg.

Capitol Federal approves merger agreement

TOPEKA (AP) — Henry A. Bubb, chairman of Capitol Federal Savings, said Tuesday the Federal Home Loan Bank Board has approved an agreement under which Southwest Federal Savings and Loan Association of Wichita will be merged into Capitol Federal.

Capitol Federal, which has its headquarters here, is Kansas' largest financial institution. With the merger, its total assets are $1.8 billion, an increase of more than $90 million by the acquistion of the Wichita savings and loan.

Couple arrested for keeping son in dog cage

LAWRENCE, Mass. (AP) — Police arrested a young couple Tuesday after the woman told authorities the kept their 6-year-old son in a dog cage when he was bad and confined his 7-year-old sister to her bedroom because God said it would be good discipline.

Manuel Rosa, 28, and his 25-year-old wife, Iraida, were charged with two counts each of neglecting a minor.

Police, acting on an anonymous tip, found the boy Monday evening in a 2½-foot-high wire cage. He was separated by a partition from a small dog. His sister was locked in her bedroom in the hot, third-floor apartment.

The children were neatly dressed, and the apartment was clean. The couple was not home when police arrived.

Detective William Dobbie said the cage, which was in the kitchen, was of the type used to carry two dogs.

In an interview with The Associated Press before her arrest, Rosa said she had asked God for guidance on how to discipline her children.

"He told me through meditation and prayer" to cage the child, she said. The boy had been lying and "doing stupid things," she said, adding that she also wanted to protect the children from marijuana use in the neighborhood.

Asked if the boy ever complained about being caged, she said, "He wouldn't say anything.

"I would ask him if he liked his freedom or if he'd rather be in the cage. He said he didn't like being in the cage and I would tell him to think about what it means to have and not to have.

"He knows the reason he's there. Only when he's told to get out will he get out," Rosa said.

Travolta: one of only three sexy male stars

NEW YORK (AP) — John Travolta says he, Richard Gere and Sylvester Stallone are the only young male "sexy box-office stars" working in film today — and he's going to exploit that stardom with a Travolta dance school and a line of Travolta dance clothes.

"It's something to do, something to have fun with, something to take home with you ... People need their dreams," the star of "Saturday Night Fever" said.

Travolta, 29, said actors like Al Pacino, Dustin Hoffman, Paul Newman, Robert Redford, Burt Reynolds and Clint Eastwood are "of a different generation."

"In the '30s and '40s, there were 20, 50 sexy box-office stars. Now there are three of us," Travolta said in an interview published in the July issue of McCall's magazine.

He said the only sexy young female stars now are Debra Winger and Jessica Lange.

'Natural' spring discovered to flow from faucet

INDEPENDENCE, Mo. (AP) — The truth has trickled out — the supposedly pristine water from Pioneer Spring near the start of the Oregon Trail actually flows from a faucet connected to the Missouri Water Co. system.

About 2,000 tourists and school children annually visit the limestone rock spring, which runs from April through October, and the 147-year-old log cabin next to it.

The secret of the spring that once sustained pioneers was known only to a few city staff and council members until City Manager Keith Wilson Jr. leaked the truth at a recent budget hearing.

Lawrence summit: the time is right

A Soviet-American summit in Lawrence?

Why would the leaders of the most powerful countries in the world agree to meet in Kansas, which once was referred to as the "Great American Desert"?

Surely the leaders would meet in New York, Washington, Geneva or even Paris before Lawrence. The former are all cosmopolitan cities which have hosted many world leaders. Lawrence...well, it's a nice place to visit (especially when the 'Cats whip the 'Hawks), but cosmopolitan? Not really.

Lawrence, like Manhattan and other cities in Kansas, may not be as fancy as New York or Paris, but it might be the place for the leaders to hold a constructive meeting without distractions. It would be the chance to show the American people that both leaders mean business when they say they want global peace.

The idea is sound. Both Yuri Andropov, Soviet premier, and President Reagan have expressed interest in having a meeting which would be more than ceremonial. The Lawrence meeting could be more than that.

A Soviet-American summit in Lawrence? Yes. The road to peace and understanding begins with one step. Lawrence should be where that step is taken.

'Hands in Peace' club thanks participants

Editor,

Our thanks to the Collegian for the fine news coverage of our Hands in Peace celebration in Manhattan's City Park on June 12.

Thanks, also, to everyone who participated in the event; the people who came to the park; the people who didn't come to the park but were with us in spirit; the staff people at the various churches; and Boy Scout Troop 74 who helped spread the news.

What a thrill to be in the park and see people coming from all directions! The energy created by the whole experience — especially the five minutes of silence — made it very moving.

May the spirit of peace that was kindled there continue to glow in all our hearts.

Two's 'a crowd'

Here's the latest soap opera tidbits you should find very salivating:

— Officials of a county-owned hospital sever an agreement with a private Roman Catholic hospital located in the same community. The former provides obstetrical and gynecological services, while the latter provides emergency services.

— These officials also sever further talks on a proposed merger plan that would allow them to construct a joint surgical center, because of a bishop's contention that abortions and sterilizations performed at the center would violate Catholic beliefs and principles.

— The consultant and coordinator of long-range planning for both hospitals leaves for a new position in Arizona — perhaps, as some people suspect — to avoid the pressures of the community divided over the hospital dilemma.

You won't find any of these conflicts occurring in the latest episodes of "General Hospital." Instead, it is happening in Manhattan — "The Little Apple," mind you.

After years of trying to negotiate a peaceful coexistence with St. Mary Hospital, Memorial Hospital's Board of Trustees has decided to scrap further talks and, instead, work toward a goal in being the sole provider of hospital care — and in doing so, provide the best possible hospital-based health care to the community.

To reach that goal, it is putting aside recent talks about construction of a $1.2 million ambulatory surgery center and an in-patient facility in two phases.

Instead, it will ask state hospital authorities for a certificate of need for a $7.5 million, 50-bed, full-service hospital that will offer both in- and out-patient services.

Easily said, but not easily done.

MEMORIAL REALIZES there are risks involved in the action it undertook. Among those were the risk that the certificate of need to build a new facility will not be approved and the risk that the hospital, its possible sites yet to be determined, will not get the added sources of funding it needs.

Memorial said it has no choice but to build the health-care facility — but not because of any single issue.

It claims, however, that its decision was influenced in part by the apparent unavailability of Bishop Daniel Kucera of the Salina Diocese to meet with Memorial's trustees to discuss his doctrinal concerns.

Board members felt if they were unsuccessful in their attempts to reach him to communicate on this matter, they might be unsuccessful in other attempts. They decided it was time to move forward with its own plans and to do so decisively.

The bishop's stance against the merger proposal obviously may have been shown in an indirect way by his "unavailability," but St. Mary's Board of Trustees claims otherwise, saying he has been occupied with other business.

St. Mary's board said it is disappointed with Memorial's decision not to continue with the consolidation talks, but is still hopeful something can be arranged to proceed with the joint planning.

If that's what the board believes, then it should take some concrete actions quickly if it wishes to create the single hospital-care delivery system that Manhattan wants — otherwise, we will have two hospitals and a total duplication of services.

PERHAPS IT IS TRUE that competition in the American economic system cuts costs, but the possibilities of that concept working between two hospitals seem far-fetched — especially when considering the major changes being made in the way in which the federal government reimburses hospitals under federal programs. As many as 2,000 hospitals have been predicted to be forced out of business as a result of receiving less income.

Manhattan's two hospitals — neither of which is more than marginally efficient — are reported to be feeling the pinch.

St. Mary, for example, has 4.0 persons providing care for every patient, while Memorial has a 4.9 ratio. A brand new hospital with the most modern design and construction takes 2.9 persons to provide care for one patient. A representative figure for all hospitals today — new and old combined — is a 3.3 ratio.

The economy's effect is already under way as St. Mary is cutting staff by attrition and changing work hours to cut its ratio to 3.8.

As dismaying as these economic realities seem, are possible undesirable consequences due to the religious implications and competitive warfare that looms ahead between the two hospitals?

Are we about to witness another Northern Ireland right here in this peaceful Midwestern city? As diverse as our religions are, it can happen.

Manhattan physicians object to the free-standing surgi-center and refuse to accept anything less than total local control of a single full-service hospital that has in-house surgical facilities.

Such a brand-new facility may increase efficiency and provide better services in health care, but we need to ask ourselves, "Do we really need two hospitals?"

If the consensus is against the idea, then the time to prevent such an idea from becoming a reality is now — before it's too late.

A good start would be to convince Bishop Kucera and the Manhattan physicians that two hospitals aren't needed — especially in town the size of Manhattan. After all, any hope of resolution lies entirely on their shoulders.

Campus news at a glance

Alumni association president assumes duties

Nelson Galle, Moundridge, assumed his duties as national president of the Alumni Association at the June meeting of its board of directors.

Jerry Exline, Salina, is the new president-elect of the association and will become national president in June 1984.

Galle replaces outgoing national president Jim Balderson, Overland Park. As president of the alumni association, Galle will preside over three board meetings this year and will represent alumni on the KSU Foundation executive committee.

Galle, a member of the alumni board since 1979, graduated from K-State in 1958 and received a degree from the Harvard Graduate School of Business in 1964. He is vice president for administration of the Hesston Corp.

Exline, a 1960 graduate, has been a member of the board of directors since 1980. He is vice president and treasurer of Exline, Inc.

Five freshmen will receive new scholarship

The KSU Foundation and the College of Engineering have announced a new scholarship fund for freshmen in engineering.

The Charles A. and Nona B. Frankenhoff Scholarship Fund will provide financial assistance in the amount of tuition and books for one academic year to outstanding freshmen.

The foundation and the college plan to award five Frankenhoff scholarships this fall, said Donald Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering.

Charles Frankenhoff received a mechanical engineering degree in 1918 and the University's Distinguished Service Award in 1970.

Apparel design student wins national award

Julie Comer, senior in apparel design, recently received an award for the best single design in the best of evening category at the Golden Scissors Student Fashion Design Competition in St. Louis.

Golden Scissors is a national student design contest created to honor and award those students who have reached a high standard of excellence in accredited fashion programs at top schools. The event is sponsored by the St. Louis Fashion Group.

New fees to cost students another $13 per semester

Starting next fall, Farrell Library, the computer science department and Holton Hall will cost students an extra $13 per semester.

Two new fees, approved by the Board of Regents May 20, will bring an estimated $400,000 per year into the University, said Daniel Beatty, vice president of business affairs.

A $10 academic services fee will provide for new acquisitions for Farrell and purchase computer science equipment and other materials. The $3 fee will finance the renovation of Holton.

Beatty said the academic services fee evolved from the requests of various departments to charge lab fees. The funds raised by the fee will not go directly into the departments that initiated the requests.

Instead, the funds that would have been previously allotted to Farrell and the computer science program are now free to be released to the other departments, he said.

University officials went before the regents in June 1982 to request approval of a lab fee proposal, which would have raised $146,410. Fees ranging from $10 to $50 per course were proposed for anatomy, art, chemistry, computer science and geology classes.

To keep the cost of higher education equal for all students, the regents approved the across-the-board fee increase of $10.

The University of Kansas made similar requests to the regents, who also approved a $10 flat fee and special laboratory fees for architecture and engineering classes at KU.

Beatty views the flat fee increase as being "healthier" for the University than individualized lab fees.

"Higher education is a government function and, as such, is socialized," Beatty said. "How meticulous do you get in trying to price out the individual courses, when no one is really paying for it anyway?

"Higher education (exists) to sustain society. You want to keep it available."

Beatty said another positive aspect of the across-the-board fee increase is it provides funds without forcing students to make class selections according to the cost of the lab fees attached.

One concern raised by students is that under the flat fee system, departments which need the funds most won't receive them.

Beatty said the allocation of the new fee to Farrell and the computer science department will leave more funds than were available previously for other departments, and will relieve monetary pressure on the University as a whole.

A proposed increase of 6.5 percent of the University's Other Operating Expenditures (OOE) fund should also relieve financial pressure, Beatty said. If approved by the regents, the OOE increase would mean an approximate $750,000 extra to be divided among the departments according to need.

Faculty Senate lists top seven priorities

Education was named by Faculty Senate Tuesday as its top priority for the fiscal year 1985 budget submitted to the Board of Regents.

Also on the agenda was approval of the May 1983 graduation list.

Richard Gallagher, senate president and professor of electrical engineering, announced the top seven priorities for the 1985 budget. Following education as top priorities were Farrell Library and agriculture, respectively.

The fourth priority will be agriculture extension. The next three priorities are engineering, the physical plant and the bureau of research.

The senate also discussed Faculty Senate Subcommittee appointments for the 1983-84 school year.

Commissioners review budget plan

The Manhattan City Commission heard a preliminary review on revenue sharing and the city budget for 1984 at a work session Tuesday afternoon.

The commissioners heard from Bernie Hayen, city finance director, who reviewed the city budget. Hayen said the city was ahead of its projected schedule and expressed optimism that the budget would be in its final form by the first week in August.

Hayen reviewed several changes in the budget including the addition of previously independent budgeting areas into the city's general fund. Some of these areas are engineering projects, parking facilities, the special street and highway fund and the special parks and recreation fund.

Hayen said the engineering projects budget was estimated at $100,000, from both internal and external sources.

He also told the commission that municipal court fines had increased. Last year the city collected $129,000 and Hayen showed projections predicting that over $200,000 will be collected in 1984.

The Manhattan Municipal Airport was the scene of two major revenue losses this year. The city suffered a $70,000 loss in revenue when Frontier Airlines left the city. An additional $30,000 was lost from various other taxes the airline paid. However, the city did make $10,000 from taxes paid on airport farm income.

The city is also losing money on automobile licenses. Individuals now pay for license tag renewals when they pay for their property tax, instead of paying the tag renewals in two separate payments. Hayen said this should have brought in more money, because previously many people moved before they paid the second payment. However, the city has seen a decrease in funds, rather than an increase.

Hayen said a cash flow problem may materialize later in the year, because the state has been slow in getting its revenue sharing payment to the city. But Hayen pointed out that the city has a projected total cash carry-over of $500,000.

A special commission meeting is scheduled for 4 p.m. June 27 in the city commission room at the city office building.

Crime of the week

Bank robbery

Crime Stoppers of Manhattan/Riley County, Inc.

CRIME STOPPERS 539-7777 CONFIDENTIALLY

This week's Crime Stoppers involves the robbery of a bank in west Manhattan.

At approximately 11:55 a.m. June 4, the First National Bank facility at Village Plaza was robbed.

An unknown male suspect entered the bank, pulled out a small silver pistol and demanded money from a bank teller. The suspect handed the teller a brown paper bag and told the teller to put the money in the bag. After obtaining the money, the suspect fled from the bank on foot.

Witnesses observed the suspect running across Anderson Avenue into the Wendy's parking lot. Anyone who was at Wendy's or Shorty's restaurants at noon Saturday may have seen the suspect running between the buildings.

The suspect is described as a black male, appoximately 5 feet 5 inches tall, weighing approximately 150 pounds. He had a slight moustache. The suspect was wearing a blue hooded sweatshirt with the hood pulled tightly around his face, mirrored sunglasses and blue jeans.

Crime Stoppers of Manhattan/Riley County, a non-profit organization, provides details of an unsolved crime each week. Citizens are encouraged to provide information needed to assist police in solving crimes. Informants, who will remain anonymous, can receive cash awards of up to $1,000.

Anyone with information on this crime, location of stolen property or information on any other crime should call Crime Stoppers at 539-7777.

Kansas may lose permanent waste disposal sites

TOPEKA (AP) — Unless Congress acts quickly, Kansas and a host of other states could be without a permanent place to dispose of their steadily increasing amounts of low-level radioactive wastes starting in 1986, environmental officials say.

Under federal law, the doors to the nation's three existing waste disposal sites can close after Jan. 1, 1986. By that time, states are to have established their own waste dumps or have banded together to develop a central storage facility through regional compacts.

Yet there is growing concern among some state and national officials that those new longterm waste disposal sites will not be ready in 2° years. So far none have been approved or are being built.

"There is a potential time problem," says Joseph Harkins, former Kansas secretary of health and environment who helped negotiate a interstate compact to deal with low-level radioactive wastes.

That agreement, also approved by Arkansas, Louisiana, Nebraska and Oklahoma, is before Congress and must be ratified by federal lawmakers before it takes effect.

Until then, member states of the Central Interstate Low-Level Radioactive Waste Compact can only wait. They cannot even select a location for their regional waste dump — a process that Harkins projects will take from two to five years.

The question of what to do in the meantime and the 1986 deadline are several key issues likely to surface when the compact members hold an "organizational meeting" at the end of this month in Little Rock, Ark., says Barbara Sabol, current health and environment secretary in Kansas.

But by no means are the Central Interstate Compact members alone. In fact, they may be better off than most states. Only one other compact — involving seven states in the Northwest — is before Congress. Most states are still considering compact proposals in their legislatures. In all, there are six proposed regional compacts with 48 states participating.

Texas and California have decided to tackle the waste disposal problem alone and must develop their own dumps since they are not affiliated with an interstate compact.

"I think the 1986 date is not feasible," says Julie Jordan, a senior project manager for the National Conference of State Legislatures who has been monitoring low-level radioactive wastes compacts for the Denver, Colo.-based group.

Still, she is confident that temporary solutions will be found to any waste disposal problems during the interim before compact members develop their own regional dumps.

For instance, Congress could change the 1980 law which ordered states to take responsiblity for the wastes either individually or through regional compact. Federal lawmakers could simply postpone the "exclusionary date" of January 1986, when states can begin to prohibit the importation of low-level radioactive wastes.

But that is unlikely, says Jordan.

"Congress does not appear to want to back off the 1986 date," she notes.

If that doesn't happen, special "interregional agreements" may be needed to ensure that the three existing low-level radioactive waste dumps — Hanford, Wash., Barnwell, S.C., and Beatty, Nev. — remain open for general use.

In most cases, the proposed compacts provide for limited use of future regional dumps by non-member states in special circumstances. Such provisions, alone, might take care of any problems, concedes Jordan.

But she, too, recognizes that time is growing short. No congressional hearings are currently scheduled on the two pending compacts, and lawmakers are said to be waiting for at least one more compact to arrive, which should happen soon.

In Kansas, low-level radioactive wastes are a growing problem. The state generates only a small quantity of wastes now, but the amount will jump dramatically when the Wolf Creek nuclear power plant begins operation in the spring of 1985.

Hospitals, research laboratories and industry are the main sources of wastes. Usually, they consist of contaminated clothing, gloves, paper towels, machinery parts and liquids. Not included are spent fuel from nuclear reactors, which are highly radioactive for thousands of years.

Arkansas is the largest waste generator of the Central Interstate Compact members, producing about 55,200 cubic feet a year — more than twice as much as the next largest generator, Nebraska. If spread over a football field, the wastes would be more than a foot deep.

By contrast, Kansas produces about 1,656 cubic feet a year. However, Wolf Creek is expected to add another 15,000 cubic feet annually.

Once in effect, the Central Interstate Compact will regulate the transportation, disposal and management of low-level radioactive wastes.

A site will be selected in one of two ways: either a member state volunteers to host a site or proposals will be solicited from private companies for development and operation of a regional dump. Once a site is picked by compact members, the host state must approve the facility following its own licensing procedure.

Social responsibility group presents movie illustrating possible effects of nuclear war

Dealing with the possibility of nuclear war "is the ultimate medical issue of our time," said Dr. Helen Caldicott, president of Physicians for Social Responsibility.

Caldicott was one of several experts who spoke on the subject of nuclear war, the highlights of which were featured in "The Last Epidemic," a film shown in the Union Tuesday. It contains highlights and speakers from the 1981 San Francisco Conference of Physicians for Social Responsibility. The film discussed consequences of nuclear war and nuclear weapons.

One of the speakers in the film gave an example of simulated attack which might take place in San Francisco:

— If a 12.5- to 15-kiloton bomb was dropped on San Francisco it would destroy everything within 1.5 miles.

— The blast would cause 500 mph winds and everyone within 1½ miles of the blast would be vaporized or suffer third-degree burns.

— It is estimated that one of three persons would die if the bomb — which is the equivalent of 70 "Little Boys," the bomb dropped on Hiroshima — was to be dropped on San Francisco.

— Fallout shelters would become crematoriums because the intense heat and firestorms would devastate the area within 16 miles increasing the lethal area by five times.

— Anyone within a 15-mile radius who sees the blast would be blinded by the intense light.

— There would also be only an estimated 2,000 doctors left in San Francisco compared to 4,600 now. Medical facilities would be destroyed and doctors killed at great rates because they are usually located in population centers.

The film was one in a series being shown at noon Tuesdays in the Union throughout the summer. The Kansas chapter of Physicians for Social Responsibility and the American Baptist Campus Ministries are sponsoring the series.

One of the film's speakers said if 10 percent of the U.S. and Soviet Union arsenals were detonated it would be enough to destroy more than 20 percent of the ozone layer. At that percentage, all unprotected eyes would be blinded.

Not your average students

Classes offer education for older adults

By VIKKI WATSON
Collegian Reporter

Fred Gleue walked to his 8:30 a.m. class Monday and spent an hour of classroom time not unlike any other college student might. One difference, however, makes Gleue different from the average student.

He is 68 years old.

Gleue, a 1948 K-State graduate, is one of 22 men and women participating in Elderhostel classes held this week. The courses, "Flinthills — The Ancient Seas of Kansas," "Living Latin" and "So You've Always Wanted to Play the Piano," are offered for individuals over 60 years of age through the University's Center for Aging.

The program is a network of more than 600 universities and other educational institutions in the United States, Bermuda, Canada, France, Germany, Great Britain, Holland, Italy, Mexico and Scandinavia which offers short-term, academic programs for older adults. Participants receive lodging at the institutions.

Inspired by youth hostels and folk schools of Europe, Elderhostel is based on the belief that retirement does not have to mean withdrawal, and that one's later years can provide opportunities to enjoy new experiences, according to the program's summer catalog.

'It's a good way to take a vacation. Where can you go for a week for $180?'
— Freeding

During 1982, almost 55,000 people participated in Elderhostel. This year, 78,000 participants are expected to be hosted by 634 institutions. Participants may attend more than one Elderhostel program because courses are offered at different times throughout the summer at different institutions.

The 22 local participants, who live at Haymaker Hall this week, are primarily K-State alumni and come from various states including California, Texas and Virginia, said Coleen Osborne, coordinator of the week's events.

Instructors volunteered to teach the courses after receiving information in the fall requesting their aid. Osborne said the teaching experience for the instructors is very positive.

"Once the instructors get involved, they like to stay involved," she said. "It's a learning experience for the instructor, as well as the participant."

Paul Prince, associate professor of journalism and mass communications and instructor of last summer's "Good Old Days of Rock 'n' Roll" course, agreed.

"I learned a lot," Prince said, "(and) had a great time. It was a real pleasure to be around them (the Elderhostel students)."

Since the classes last only five days and no grades are given, the Elderhostel participants generally differ from the average summer school student, Prince said.

"The people who come to this sort of thing are very energetic and enthused," he said. "They don't have all the distractions and concerns of trying to get a grade. They were very attentive and did bring a lot of themselves (to the classes)."

Burney Mendenhall, associate professor of modern language and instructor for the "Living Latin" class this summer, said motivation is a main difference between Elderhostel students and many college students.

"I think these people want different things than college students," she said. "There's probably real motivation — otherwise, they wouldn't be here."

Not only do those participating attend classes, but they are encouraged to become involved in scheduled extra-curricular activities, Osborne said. Activities planned included country swing dancing, a tour of Fort Riley and a special evening of sharing when participants share hobbies and talents.

'The people ... are very energetic and enthused.'
— Prince

For Howard Hudiburg, a 1935 K-State graduate in engineering, it is a combination of classes plus the friendships made which makes the experience so enjoyable. This summer marks the second year Hudiburg has taken the K-State Elderhostel courses.

"I was here last year and thoroughly enjoyed it," he said. "I enjoyed the subject matter plus the fellowship of people from different places."

"They're just students for a week," Osborne said. "We try to find classes that will interest them."

According to John Freeding, Wichita, there are other advantages to Elderhostel besides the classes available.

"It's a good way to take a vacation," he said. "Where can you go for a week for $180?"

For Osborne, the advantage is forming a special bond between herself and the group members. She stays at Haymaker with the participants and said they become like family.

"You live with these people for a week and you don't want them to leave," Osborne said. "It's just like your family breaking up when they leave."

OU star Dupree claims article misquoted him

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — University of Oklahoma running back Marcus Dupree said Tuesday he is upset about a story in the June 20 edition of Sports Illustrated, which quotes him as saying he hates being at OU.

The article also said Dupree's relationship with Coach Barry Switzer, "barely cordial to begin with, has seriously deteriorated."

"I didn't say anything like that," Dupree told The Oklahoma City Times from his Philadelphia, Miss., home. Dupree said he told the magazine's writer, Douglas Looney, his relationship with Switzer "wasn't that close at the first of the year. We'd lost three games, and everybody was kind of upset.

"I wasn't playing. That had a lot to do with it, too. I was upset about that. Now I'm glad Coach Switzer didn't play me early because when I did get a chance to play that motivated me even more."

The magazine article, which labels Dupree as the leading candidate for the 1983 Heisman Trophy, also quotes him as saying, "I think I'll play this year, but it could be my last."

Asked if that was true, Dupree said, "No," the Times reported. "The guy (Looney) asked me, 'What if the USFL offers you a lot of money (a la Herschel Walker)?' I said, 'Don't put this in there (the story) but I might not play after this year.' I said, 'If they offered me $20 million, that'd be a lot to think about.'"

Switzer said he was "totally appalled and shocked" that the article was appearing because he'd asked Looney not to write a pre-season story that would inflame the already sensitive Dupree issue.

The coach had scolded Dupree publicly after the Fiesta Bowl loss to Arizona State for being overweight and out of shape. Dupree pulled a hamstring in the bowl game, which kept him out of spring practice.

Switzer said when he asked Looney not to write the article on Dupree, "he thought I was telling him how to do his job. He didn't understand my reasoning why. I told him the timing was wrong" on a pre-season story.

Looney told The Associated Press "obviously, the first thing is I will stand by every word. I guess that goes without saying.

"I'm sure Marcus is concerned," Looney added.

Looney said when Switzer asked him not to write the story before the season started, he told Switzer that Sports Illustrated's editorial policy "is not set by football coaches."

Home-run king Aaron says he wants commissioner job

ATLANTA (AP) — Home-run king Hank Aaron says he's serious about wanting to replace Bowie Kuhn as baseball commissioner, but he says he feels he's being snubbed.

Baseball owners voted last November not to retain Kuhn when his term expires in August. So far, Aaron is the only announced applicant for the job. However, there is talk among the owners of renominating Kuhn, the commissioner since 1969.

Aaron, 49, has been a vice president and director of player development for the Atlanta Braves since he retired from playing seven years ago. He hit 755 home runs in 23 major-league seasons.

Aaron, commenting in a recent interview, said he talked with Bud Selig, owner of the Milwaukee Brewers and head of the owners' commissioner selection committee about a month ago.

"I waited for someone else to step forward. When nobody else did, I decided I would," Aaron said. "To be very honest with you, I've been kind of disappointed in Bud Selig. I have not heard from him since I talked with him and I do know they are officially interviewing people for the job."

He said he doesn't accept the argument that he may not be qualified for the job. "Some people may be saying I'm not qualified. Well, Jimmy Carter ran this country. He went from being a peanut farmer to running the White House. So what is more important? Running the White House or being baseball commissioner?"

Aaron said he would like to make some changes in baseball, such as limiting payrolls to stop rising salaries and realigning divisions to create more geographic rivalries.

Aaron also said the fact that he's black may be a stumbling block.

"I hope it is not an issue," he said. "But of course that's the first thing that comes into their minds because of the fact that most of these owners are slow about doing a lot of things, slow about hiring a black manager. You know...they'll be slow about hiring a black commissioner."

Aaron denies that he's acting to spite Kuhn, with whom he had a running dispute during his final years as a player.

"They voted him out," he said. "Nobody else wanted the job...so I made myself available."

Twins drub Royals, 8-1; Williams hurls way to first win since April

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Right-hander Al Williams went the distance to snap a personal six-game losing streak, and Gary Ward hit his 11th home run of the season to power the Minnesota Twins past the Kansas City Royals 8-1 Tuesday night.

Williams, 3-7, scattered six hits while striking out four and walking one. It was his first victory since April 27, and the Royals' sixth straight loss in the Metrodome.

The Twins took advantage of six walks offered by Keith Creel, 0-2, who left during Minnesota's five-run fourth.

With the score tied 1-1 in the third, Ward walked and scored on Randy Bush's double to right-center. The Twins then got four of their seven hits in the fourth beginning with Mickey Hatcher's leadoff triple.

Gary Gaetti lofted a single to center for one run, and Bobby Mitchell reached on a fielder's choice when Creel's throw was too late to get Gaetti at second. A wild pitch advanced the runners, and Tom Brunansky walked to load the bases.

Ray Smith then hit a sacrifice fly for a 4-1 lead, and Houston Jimenez got his first major-league RBI with a single.

Bench makes his mark

Johnny Bench's recent announcement of his retirement at the end of the 1983 season will mark an end of playing to perhaps one of baseball's greatest catchers — if not the greatest.

The 13-time all-star will have spent a little more than 16 years in the major leagues for the Cincinnati Reds — who had counted on his powerful arm and potent bat to lead them to world championships during the "Big Red Machine" era in the 1970s.

Bench, at a press conference at noon Friday in Cincinnati's Riverfront Stadium, said he decided to retire "about three weeks ago even though I was hitting .320 at the time and the ball club has shown signs of some progress. It wasn't as much fun, and my body said it wasn't much fun."

He also remarked that the strain of 13 years of catching has taken too much of a toll on his body, and he wasn't enjoying playing third base — a position he started learning to play, in addition to first base, after the 1980 season when he gave up full-time catching.

All good things must come to an end, and Bench realizes that — but not without first having to prove that last season was a fluke when he suffered his least productive season, and the Reds lost more than 100 games for the first time in their history.

Bench came back strong this year, climbing among the National League leaders in most offensive categories. He also won the league's Player-of-the-Week honors for one hitting streak.

A recent slump has dropped his batting average to .283; however, he has six home runs and 31 RBIs in 50 games.

BECAUSE OF HIS sub-par season last year in which he hit .258 with 13 homers and 37 RBIs — the last two statistics are career lows — Bench said he thought he had tarnished his accomplishments.

"I came back some this year, but still not to the degree I wanted," he said. "I don't want to bring it down anymore. I want my name to stay on an upper level. I want to be respected."

Those who recall Muhammad Ali's embarrassing comeback attempts can understand and applaud Bench's decision to retire while his legacy still is intact.

His decision is more meaningful when considering he will forfeit the final two years of his $1 million-per-year contract. He said it wouldn't be fair to him or the team to keep playing.

Reds' manager Russ Nixon admires him for his decision. "He just felt the way the club was made up — the direction we were going — that he didn't fit in. It takes a unique person and an unselfish person to make that decision."

The 35-year-old Binger, Okla., native has set several "Benchmarks" for catchers since he was called up into the big leagues in 1967 amid great expectations.

He wasted little time in living up to those expectations as he was named National League's Rookie-of-the-Year.

The next year, he was chosen for the NL All-Star team — the first of 13 straight seasons to be picked for the mid-season contest. He also won the first of 10 straight Gold Glove Awards in 1968.

Bench's 13 seasons of catching 100 or more games matches Bill Dickey's major-league record. He also has caught 1,739 games — fourth-highest in major-league history.

HIS BAT has produced a record 324 homers as a catcher — 383 overall. His career highs of 45 homers and 148 RBIs in 1970 earned him the NL's Most Valuable Player Award. He won the MVP award two years later with 40 homers and 125 RBIs.

Bench's retirement will bring to an end a career he compares "to a boy's dream." "Nobody could expect much more from a youngster from Oklahoma," he said.

Reds' President Dick Wagner said that Bench's accomplishments should warrant him as "a shoo-in for a quick entry into the Hall of Fame."

When that comes, then Bench's wish "to be remembered as the greatest catcher that's ever played" may come true — as if it hasn't already.

Watson deems Tour as 'healthy' and 'prosperous'

OAKMONT, Pa. (AP) — Tom Watson, one of the signers of a letter to the PGA Tour policy board two weeks ago, said Tuesday that so far as he knows, "the tour is healthy and prosperous."

Watson was questioned about his part in a gathering of leading golfers prior to a general meeting of touring pros and the PGA tour policy board last week in Harrison, N.Y.

"We had some concerns about the policies and directions on the tour and felt we were not getting adequate information on those policies," Watson said after a practice round for the defense of his title in the 83rd U.S. Open Championship.

"In general, the meeting last week resolved many of those questions, and so far as I know, the tour is very healthy.

"There are still some questions concerning the marketing aspects of the tour and some questions in my mind about the tour getting into the operation and ownership of golf courses."

Watson also was asked about a Washington Post story in which another player, Howard Twitty, was quoted as saying that Watson was not interested in the overall good of the pro golf tour.

"Howard has the right to say anything he wants to say," Watson said.

Commercial airliner hijacked; pirated to Havana from Miami

MIAMI (AP) — An Eastern Airlines Airbus carrying 84 passengers and a crew of 11 was hijacked to Cuba on Tuesday night, officials said.

Eastern Flight 414, en route from Miami to LaGuardia Airport in New York, departed at 9:45 p.m. EDT, and 30 minutes later, the pilot radioed "and said he was going to Havana," said Eastern spokesman Bob Christian.

In Washington, Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Dennis Feldman said at 11:32 p.m. that the plane, a European-made, wide-bodied jet, had landed in Havana.

On May 27, the FAA announced that armed sky marshals were returning to commercial airliners to discourage potential air pirates from following the example of three successful hijackers in May.

Eastern spokesman Dalton James said he did not know whether a sky marshal was aboard Tuesday's hijacked flight.

Three commercial jets were hijacked to Cuba on southern Florida routes in May. Three other hijackings occurred this year in the United States.

On May 20, a wildly gesturing man claiming to have explosives forced an Eastern jet to Cuba from its Miami-New York route. Passengers said it appeared the man had several sticks of dynamite, but FAA officials said later there was no bomb.

The other two hijackings were both on Capitol Air's Flight 236 from San Juan, Puerto Rico, to Miami and then to Chicago.

Choir sings overseas; response 'enthusiastic'

Hand clapping, foot stomping, chair banging and a lot of yelling were reactions K-State's Concert Choir had grown accustomed to during its stay in Great Britian and Ireland in May.

"The people over there are a lot less reserved about responding to something they like than here. It's really great," Matt Hinkin, sophomore in radio-television, said.

The 43-member choir was invited to sing at the 30th Annual International Choral and Folk Dance Festival in Cork, Ireland, May 3-4. Besides singing in its first international competition against 50 choirs and taking second place (missing first by only four points), the choir met a lot of people, made many friends and visited famous and unusual places.

"I couldn't be prouder of this bunch here. They really outdid themselves," Rod Walker, director and associate professor of music, said.

Although the choir received second place from the judges, the audience seemed to think they were first rate. During the choir's three nights of performing, an audience survey showed that K-State's choir was the favorite, Walker said.

"They made a tremendous impression wherever they went," he said.

The choir also sang at Cardiff University in Wales, Cardiff Castle, London, Cambridge and at two of the most famous cathedrals in Europe, Bath and Salisbury.

"We had to get permission to sing at the cathedrals," Walker said. "The Salisbury Cathedral (administrators) didn't really want to give us permission, but finally said we could sing for a couple of minutes. After we did, the priests started coming out to listen and didn't want us to stop."

During its first two nights in Wales, the choir stayed with various Welsh families.

"The Welsh are really the friendliest of people," Cynthia Doebele, freshman in pre-physical therapy, said.

Free time was scheduled to let everyone enjoy the sights. Members visited Blarney Castle, Stonehenge, Westminster Abbey, London Bridge and Waterford Crystal Factory.

"The trip was highly successful in every aspect," Walker said. "Travel provides the kind of education you just can't buy."

Walker indicated that he is considering plans for the choir to perform in Austria or Norway in 1985.

Artwork captures spirit of American era

By KYLA STOLFUS
Staff Writer

Comparable to Norman Rockwell, his work has captured a record of a lively American era.

Review

On display through Friday, reproductions of illustrations by J.C. Leyendecker are the first display in the Union Art Gallery for the summer session.

Although his name is not as recognizable today as the later Rockwell, Leyendecker was as popular in his day and now has a place alongside Rockwell as one of America's great illustrators.

Leyendecker's large output was mainly for magazine covers and advertising art. Because of his Collier's and Saturday Evening Post covers, and ads for Kellogg's Corn Flakes and Arrow Shirts, Leyendecker illustrations are still familiar.

Marilyn Gilbert, Union Art Gallery program advisor, said a surprising number of people confuse Leyendecker with Rockwell. Though there are similarities and Rockwell emulated Leyendecker, Rockwell's work has more humor and American nostalgia, Gilbert said.

The exhibit was designed to give the viewer an idea of the variety and development of Leyendecker's style from the years 1900 to 1940. Leyendecker was a versatile artist, but each of his works has a distinctive elegance.

Especially symbolic of the 1920's sophisticated glamour are the "Arrow Collar Man" advertisements which became the definition of the fashionably perfect man for millions of women. Leyendecker's corn flake ads, on the other hand, communicated traditional values with appealing child models.

Through his illustrations, Leyendecker was able to appeal to a variety of public tastes.

The Union Art Gallery has tastefully displayed this private collection with a gray color scheme and ample and fascinating biographical notes. The display includes over 20 examples of the 321 Saturday Evening Post covers Leyendecker drew, a few early Collier's covers and over 20 of his various ads.

Supreme Court strikes down limits on abortion laws

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court on Wednesday struck down a host of state and local limits on abortion, reinforcing its 1973 decision which legalized the operation and sparked a moral and political storm which yet rages.

In three separate decisions — resolving disputes from Virginia, Missouri and Ohio — the court declared unconstitutional regulations requiring:

— All abortions for women more than three months pregnant be performed in hospitals rather than clinics.

— Doctors tell women seeking abortions about possible birthgiving alternatives, abortion risks and that the fetus is "a human life."

— At least a 24-hour waiting period between the time a woman signs a consent form and performance of the abortion.

— Aborted fetuses be disposed of in a "humane and sanitary" way.

— All pregnant, unwed girls under 15 — no matter how "mature" — obtain a parent's consent or a judge's approval before having an abortion.

The court upheld regulations that require medical reports to be compiled for all abortions and require two doctors to be present for abortions performed on women in the final trimester — the last three months — of their pregnancies.

It also ruled that state and local governments may require parental or judicial consent for abortions performed on minors as long as there is a determination in each case about the girl's "maturity" to reach the abortion decision on her own.

"This is the most far-reaching victory for reproductive rights since the court's 1973 decision which held that women have a constitutional right to choose abortion," said Janet Benshoof, director of the American Civil Liberties Union's Reproductive Freedom Project.

Jane Gruenebaum of the National Abortion Federation called the decisions "just terrific," adding: "These laws were really aimed at denying access to abortion. They were efforts to limit rights to abortion (and) in no way enhanced the health of the women concerned."

But Douglas Johnson, legislative director of the National Right to Life Committee, said the rulings "demonstrate the extremism of the Supreme Court on the abortion issue."

"Today's decisions underscore the need for congressional action by constitutional amendment or other remedy, and for the appointment of judges who will not impose such an extreme pro-abortion philosophy on the 50 states," Johnson said. "The court has defended the interests of the assembly-line abortion industry."

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said the decisions "point up the importance" of the constitutional amendment he is sponsoring that would reverse the 1973 decision and allow states to outlaw most abortions.

A 1978 attempt by the Akron, Ohio, City Council to impose sweeping abortion regulations led to the high court's key decision Wednesday.

Leading a 6-3 majority, Justice Lewis F. Powell invalidated the Akron ordinance in its entirety while emphatically reaffirming the court's 1973 decision that the right to choose abortion is "fundamental," springing from the constitutional right to privacy.

Powell said the information Akron would have required for all prospective abortion patients "is designed not to inform the woman's consent but rather to persuade her to withhold it altogether."

Powell and Chief Justice Warren E. Burger proved to be the court's key voting bloc, joining with Justices Harry A. Blackmun, John Paul Stevens, William J. Brennan and Thurgood Marshall in the Akron case.

Justices William H. Rehnquist and Byron R. White, dissenters from the court's landmark 1973 decision, were joined by Justice Sandra Day O'Connor in voting to give state and local governments broad discretion in regulating abortion.

The decisions marked O'Connor's first votes on abortion, and she attacked the underpinnings of the 1973 decision in Roe vs. Wade.

In the 1973 decision, the court said a woman's decision to have an abortion during the first three months of her pregnancy must be left to her and her doctor. It said states may interfere in the decision during the second trimester only to protect the woman's health and may take steps to protect fetal life only in the third trimester.

Although the court struck down that portion of the Akron ordinance requiring unmarried girls under 15 to get the consent of a parent or judge before having an abortion, the justices voted 5-4 to uphold a similar provision in the Missouri law.

Powell, this time joined by Burger, White, Rehnquist and O'Connor, explained that the Missouri law does not assume that all minor girls are too immature to reach a decision alone.

In the Virginia case, the court upheld 8-1 the criminal conviction of Dr. Chris Simopoulos for performing an illegal abortion at his Falls Church, Va., office in 1979.

The abortion was performed for a 17-year-old girl who was 5½ months pregnant and who later expelled the fetus in a motel room. It was found in a wastebasket.

Virginia law requires that all second-trimester abortions be performed in a hospital, but the court said the law's definition of "hospital'" included licensed clinics. Therefore, the court said Simopoulos' conviction should stand.

Docking remains in hospital; listed in serious condition

MERRIAM (AP) — Former Kansas Gov. Robert B. Docking was listed in serious condition Wednesday at Shawnee Mission Medical Center where he has been undergoing treatment for emphysema, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Docking's physician, Dr. Robert Ferguson, had said his patient's condition was critical earlier in the day.

However, Lauren Fasbinder, assistant director of hospital communications, said Ferguson agreed Wednesday afternoon that Docking, 57, was in serious condition. Ferguson said Docking's condition had stabilized and he remained communicative.

"He has maintained throughout, his remarkable sense of humor and humility. He is approaching this battle the way he approached many political campaigns — with the absolute firm determination that he is going to win," the doctor said.

Docking was admitted to the hospital in early May for treatment of the lung ailment, which he has had about 10 years. He was to have been released last Friday.

However, Ferguson said Docking's condition slowly began deteriorating and, by Monday morning, he was having an increasingly difficult time breathng. Tests and examinations showed that his condition had worsened, the doctor said. Until that time, Docking had been listed in good condition by the hospital.

Docking has been receiving oxygen and intravenous feeding and medications throughout his hospital stay, Ferguson said.

Docking's wife, Meredith, and his sons, Tom and Bill, were at the hospital on Wednesday, said Bill Docking. Tom Docking was elected Kansas lieutenant governor last year.

"He's in good spirits, he's hanging in there, he's putting up a good fight," Bill Docking, of Merriam, said.

Robert Docking, an Arkansas City Democrat, was the only governor in Kansas history to be elected four times — to two-year terms. He served in that office from January 1967 to January 1975.

Robert Docking's father, George Docking, served as governor of Kansas for two terms in 1957-61. George Docking, who also suffered from enphysema, died in January 1964 at the age of 59.

Robert Docking went to Merano, Italy, last November for two weeks of immunotherapy for his emphysema. Immunotherapy is the treatment of a disease or infection by injecting chemical agents into the body.

Upon his return, Docking said he believed the treatment had helped.

"I think it was worthwhile," he said after returning from Merano. "You've got to try something. I'm sure it didn't hurt anything.

"They told me it would be five to six weeks before I'd notice much change, and then I might improve for up to six months."

Docking went to Topeka for his son's inauguration last January and briefly attended a reception in Tom Docking's office at the statehouse. However, he did not go to the inaugural dinner and ball. Family members said that would have been too tiring for him.

City Park to host arts, craft show

Usually, it's a quiet place to go to relax and enjoy the outdoors. With warmer weather, the pace picks up. This weekend, the place may be beyond recognition.

As the eighth annual Arts & Crafts Festival begins Friday, numerous booths, food and live entertainment will serve as an attraction to City Park.

Sponsored by the Manhattan Parks and Recreation Arts in the Park program, the festival is scheduled from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday, and noon to 4 p.m. Sunday.

Don Cukjati, fine arts supervisor for Arts in the Park, said there will be more than 150 booths displaying the work of area artists and craftsmen.

Puppet shows are scheduled at 1 p.m. each day, with an additional show at 4 p.m. on Friday and Saturday.

The festival was designed to incorporate all of the arts in a folk-life theme, Cukjati said. Music will be a highlight of the festival with four concerts focusing on country music.

The Palace Drug Dixieland Band, a local group, will perform at 8 p.m. Friday. A performance by Mark Selby at 2 p.m. Saturday will be followed by the nationally known Norman and Nancy Blake quartet at 8 p.m. on the main stage.

The Blakes have toured the United States extensively, have two albums to their credit, and has recorded with Johnny Cash and John Hartford. Their music is primarily instrumental bluegrass with their own individual sound.

The 2 p.m. Sunday concert will feature country music by Timber Creek.

One-way streets changed to handle two-way traffic

Don't go the wrong way down a new two-way street, because some of the old one-way streets now go both directions.

Leavenworth, Humboldt, Houston and Pierre streets were changed to two-way streets Wednesday, Mayor Wanda Fateley said. The streets are now two-way between 11th Street and Juliette Avenue.

Though the city commission first discussed the proposal in September, action was not taken until most of the college community left. This was to reduce possible traffic problems and to give residents of the streets a chance to get used to the new traffic, she said.

"The reason they (the city commissioners) changed the streets was because they function as neighborhood streets," Fateley said. "When downtown redevelopment starts, it was recommended the streets become two-way. It seems every time we want to do something we are waiting on the downtown project, so this is a start."

The city took all the yield and one-way signs down in the area of change.

"Years ago, the one-way streets were added to direct traffic downtown," Fateley said.

Prison panel considers parole for Sirhan

SOLEDAD, Calif. (AP) — A three-member parole panel at Soledad Prison met today to consider whether Sirhan Bishara Sirhan is a fit candidate for freedom, 15 years after he fired the shot that killed Sen. Robert F. Kennedy.

Sirhan, wearing a blue longsleeved shirt, his hair closely cut, sat unsmiling at the hearing table. When the convicted assassin introduced himself to the panel of the state Board of Prison Terms, he said, "I am a prisoner, I suppose."

Asked by board chairman Rudy Castro if he had any objection to the panel before him, Sirhan said, "This parole board has never been fair to Sirhan Sirhan. I have no reason to believe you will be fair in this ... in all honesty."

Company hopes to market anti-herpes salve

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Marion Laboratories has begun clinical studies of an anti-herpes ointment that it hopes to begin marketing in 1986.

The ointment, developed in England, has been successful in studies there in drying all types of the herpes virus into remission, said Larry Wheeler, a spokesman for the Kansas City drug company.

"We started the clinical studies six months ago," Wheeler said. "But even if tests are successful, it will be 1986 before the ointment is available to the general public."

There are three types of herpes — genital, facial and zoter herpes, known as shingles. Genital herpes is an incurable disease that afflicts millions of people.

Drug companies estimate that it takes between two and three years for the federal Food and Drug Administration to study data and rule on requests for permission to market a new drug.

Puerto Rican group becomes idols for teens

NEW YORK (AP) — There was an outbreak of Menudomania at a Manhattan hotel with screaming teeny-boppers and cheerleaders in costume lining a sidewalk hoping for a glimpse of their idols.

Menudo, a popular soft-rock group from Puerto Rico, is in New York for four sold-out concerts in Madison Square Garden this weekend.

But for the 150 fans outside the Doral Inn on Tuesday, the weekend couldn't come fast enough.

"I like the way they dance, the way they dress — everything!" said Rosalba Vasquea, 18, of Manhattan, taking up the chant: "Menudo! We want Menudo!"

Menudo, which means small or tiny in Spanish, is made up of five young male Puerto Ricans. When their voices change around their 15th birthday, they are replaced by younger singers.

But the girls said they just pick out a new group member to fall in love with and claim as their own.

6 Moslems jailed for eating during holy month

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — A Pakistani judge on Wednesday sentenced six Moslems to three days in jail each for eating and smoking in public when they should have been fasting during the holy month of Ramadan.

During Ramadan the faithful can eat and drink only after sunset and before sunrise.

The six were rounded up in a surprise raid on a bazaar in the city of Bahwalnagar, 250 miles south of Islamabad.

Frampton fans clash with Italian riot police

BRESCIA, Italy (AP) — Dozens of stone-throwing fans of British rock star Peter Frampton clashed with riot police when they tried to force their way into the arena where the singer-guitarist was going to perform.

Police said 40 youths were taken into custody during the disturbance Tuesday night and charged with causing damage and disturbance of the public order in this northern Italian town near Milan.

Twenty police officers and fans were slightly injured in the clashes which forced a three-hour postponement in Frampton's concert.

The box offices of the arena and several gates were badly damaged, police said.

Frampton's first Italian concert in Rome last week was also marred by riots.

Birdwatchers arrested held for security probe

ISTANBUL, Turkey (AP) — A Turkish judge ordered further detention for two British birdwatchers pending the outcome of a security probe, a local public prosecutor said Wednesday.

The two Britons went before a civilian criminal judge Wednesday in the resort town of Enez near the Turkish-Greek border for trespassing in a "military zone and taking photos in a restricted area," the prosecutor said in a telephone interview.

Simon Albrecht of Cambridge and Dennis Buisson of Luton were arrested a week ago in a swamp area near the Greek frontier while watching breeding birds.

Weather

Another beautiful day, today. Get to the lake before it's too late; the clouds will be back tomorrow. Today it will be partly cloudy with highs 80 to 85. We'll have southeast winds 10 to 15 mph.

Education issues call for awareness

It's time for the state's local boards of education to step forward and make necessary decisions to improve education in Kansas.

Test scores released by the state Board of Education Wednesday show 26 percent of the grade school and high school students checked do not have the reading and math skills needed to succeed at the next grade level.

Even more alarming are the reading scores which, despite showing that more than 61 percent of the students have met the minimum standards, reflect a significant decrease over last year.

The April testing of 151,250 students in grades two, four, six, eight and 11 in Kansas' 306 public school districts and 50 accredited private schools, is the final part of a two-year program established by the 1981 Legislature to aid local school districts in pinpointing deficiencies in their educational system and identify problems of individual students.

The lowest statewide score was in sixth grade reading, where 61.3 percent of the students tested met or exceeded minimum competency. This is a sharp drop from the 75 percent of the sixth-grade students who met the minimum standards last year.

In fact, all grades tested showed a lower percentage of students who met minimum reading requirements this year, as compared to last year.

These figures makes "Nation at Risk," a federal report released in April, more pertinent. The report concluded that public education was facing a crisis and had been "eroded by a rising tide of mediocrity."

The state board is concerned. It has been weighing such issues as increased graduation requirements, providing a model curriculum, improved teacher preparation programs and higher teacher salaries, but no concrete steps have been taken to combat the problem.

If solving the educational problem can be accomplished by heightening public awareness, then it is the duty of the state board to keep the issue of education before the public in order to remedy the problem. Kansas' future depends upon it.

My brother Bobby

Several weeks ago, Dad and I were sorting through some old things behind the barn. He picked up one of the old high jump stands and began dismantling it, a sign that he didn't think it would be used again.

I hadn't high jumped in years and never plan to again, but it still made me feel a little funny. My brother Bobby had made those stands for one of our many "do-it-at-home" sports, and had taught me to high jump when I was only seven.

There are five of us kids. The older two had their own interests, so that left Bobby, Annette and I to play together.

Bobby had an extraordinary ability to adapt sports to our limited resources on the farm. He was the master planner, and Annette and I played along.

We girls were much younger, so our skills were slight compared to Bobby's. That made no difference to him, as he always handicapped himself. If he still beat us, he would give himself a greater disadvantage. By making the competition as even as possible, he nurtured great competitive spirits in us.

TRACK WAS A favorite for us, because it is so easy to measure improvements. We had a sand pit during most of my childhood for high jumping and long jumping. At different times, we also had shot put and discus rings, home-made hurdles and sprint markings on our lawn.

The highlight of the summer of 1968 was our own Olympics. It was Bobby's idea. He spent weeks in preparation making an Olympic flag and medals, and planning the opening ceremony.

I don't remember much about the events, but the opening ceremony was spectacular to me. The flag flew high over the house on the television antenna, the trash barrel was lit as an eternal flame and the doves (well...farm cats) were let out of a laundry basket, symbolizing peace to all three competitors.

We were probably the only kids in Harvey County to have a full five-hole golf course. Bobby planned the course and we helped him develop the greens by pulling out weeds and grass within a four-foot radius of the holes.

MOM USUALLY WAS tolerant of our game playing, but I don't think she ever appreciated our golf playing very much. There was the constant threat that we would knock out windows as we rounded the house.

But then, we started off on the wrong foot when we planned our very own course.

One day, when she was out shopping, we pulled out all the grass for the final hole. When she saw it, I thought we were doomed. What better place for the last hole, though, than the front yard, so the gallery could sit on the porch to watch the climactic endings to our tournaments?

Winter never was dull although, — other than ice skating — we didn't do much outdoors. Of course, we didn't just skate.

We got hockey sticks for Christmas presents, so Bobby made pucks out of old shoe heels and taught us the rules and terminology of ice hockey.

We have a big basement. It was our haven in winter. We bowled, roller-skated, played croquet, badminton, pingpong, basketball and tennis (with a plywood board for a net).

FOR THREE YEARS, we held the Indoor Stucky Relays in the basement. Bobby chalked out a two-lane, 22-yard track on the cement. He made a full schedule of events including sprints ranging from 10 yards to 100 yards, three hurdle races and field events.

There were modifications, of course. The throwing implements were styrofoam. The hurdles were hives from Dad's bee equipment, and when you landed on the long jump mattress, you had to stay put to get a mark.

It was hard for Bobby to impress on his two kid sisters how important the meet was. I remember him trying to explain to me that I held "real-live" world records, because there were no other Stucky Relays in the whole world. At nine years old, I couldn't understand the significance of it.

Bobby went to college when I was 11. Annette and I got involved in school sports, and we didn't play all those games anymore. He's a high school coach now — the inevitable "walk of life" for him.

The chalk track markings in the basement have long faded away. The golf greens, not kept up properly, gave way to weeds. Hockey sticks, badminton racquets and roller skates lay unused in the basement. I don't even know where my Olympic medals are anymore.

So what's there to gain from all those years of play? The only things that remain are the intangible — those that didn't deteriorate with time: bits of memories, my competitive spirit and a half dozen world records I set at the Stucky Relays.

Foundation names chairmen to head coliseum campaign

By ASHLEY PETERSON
Collegian Reporter

The KSU Foundation is in the process of selecting chairmen for a campaign to raise $6 million to be used as part of the funding for the new coliseum.

"This is the first major venture in capital fund raising at K-State," Art Loub, executive vice president of the foundation, said.

He said the first things to be determined in such a campaign are the constituency to be reached, what private philanthropic foundations should be contacted and what regions to reach with the campaign.

Bill Lockhart, campaign project director, said five chairmen have been named and more will be chosen later. They include President Duane Acker, honorary chairman; Fred Bramlage, Junction City, national council chairman for development; Norman Brandeberry, Russell and Manhattan businessman and Board of Regents member, statewide chairman of fund raising; Gilbert Johnson, Manhattan businessman, vice chairman of national council for trustees; and Jack Goldstein, Manhattan businessman, chairman for trustees and the Ahearn division.

"This phase has been in progress for 1½ months," Loub said. "All money should be pledged by April 1984 and the people who pledge money will have five years to meet their pledge."

Money for the coliseum, which has a anticipated completion date of 1987, is to come from three other sources. Students will pay approximately $6 million from a portion of fees and the bill asks for the same amount in a one-time allocation from the state legislature, according to a pamphlet published by the KSU Foundation. The athletic department will be adding approximately 2.5 million to the funding by placing surcharges on game and parking tickets.

"The coliseum is essential to K-State, Manhattan and Kansas, because it's the only thing like it in the area," Loub said.

The overall reward for the work of the foundation and the people who pledge money will be a multi-purpose coliseum, he said. The primary function of the coliseum will be for men's and women's basketball. However, it may also be used for other events, such as concerts and lectures.

Currently, no architectural drawings of the building are available, but an artist's conception of the building (see illustration).

Loub said the coliseum is to be located in a natural ravene south of the football stadium between the R.V. Christian Track and Washburn Recreational Complex. It will be a domed, earth-sheltered structure with a seating capacity between 15,000 and 15,500.

According to the pamphlet, alternatives to building a new coliseum include continuing to use the "inadequate facilities" at Ahearn Field House, spending $6 million to refurbish Ahearn and reducing the seating in the process, or doing nothing and letting the state pay the entire amount if Ahearn is condemned.

The idea for a new coliseum originated in 1978. Student Senate passed a bill proposing a new building Feb. 2, 1978, but the bill was not approved by the student body.

On Dec. 7, 1978, a second proposal was passed by the senate and also by the student body in February 1979. However, in April 1981, the bill was voided because it did not include plans for adequate funding.

In November 1981, another bill was again presented to the senate and passed by a 42-7 margin. The result of the bill was to charge the students $9.75 in fees per semester beginning last fall.

An additional $6.75 per student will be paid beginning this fall. When the bond is paid, the stadium bond money will be diverted to the coliseum fund totaling $31 per semester for full-time students.

Parents help teach their children the basics of swimming in Toddlers I and II classes offered by the Continuing Education Community Activities Program.

aqua tots

Toddler I and II teacher Phyllis Moore assists a swimmer into the pool.

The local swimming hole where children squeal and splash is right here on campus.

Children as young as one year old are learning to overcome their fears and safely enjoy the water.

Toddler I swimming classes, for children ages one to two, and Toddler II classes, for children ages three to four, are being offered by the Continuing Education Community Activities Program in the Natatorium.

Phyllis Moore and Joyce Schmitz, both temporary instructors, are teaching three sessions this summer. The sessions meet each weekday for three weeks.

"Our whole perspective is of water safety for the child," Moore said. "We teach the parents how to teach the child."

Jim Acer, aquatic coordinator for Continuing Education, explained that the purpose of toddler classes is to teach the children to enjoy the water.

"When they see a pool and want to jump in, that's good. To us, the water's good all the time," he said.

But once a child learns to enjoy the water, the child's parents must be aware of the possible danger.

"We tell the parents, 'you've got a water baby that is going to want to get in anytime,'" Acer said.

Moore agreed and added, "The other side of the coin is the parents have to be more attentive when the child is around streams, lakes and motels."

Many children fear water because their parents fear it or because they have accidentally gone under water and experienced discomfort, Moore said.

"I have a girl in the Toddler II afternoon class that hasn't gotten in the water yet," Schmitz said. "Yesterday, she sat on the side of the pool and kicked."

"The first couple of days we had a lot of crying," she said. "What we want is happy kids in the water. It's a big bathtub, so to speak.

After class is over, parents towel off their kids and bundle them up.

"The warmer the water, the more success you have with small children," Moore said.

The toddler swimming program at K-State was started in Nichols Gymnasium. Judy Akers, former women's basketball coach, started the program and Moore, then a junior majoring in education, assisted.

"We were still holding classses in the small pools after Nichols burned," Moore said.

This summer, 78 children are enrolled in the first session of Toddlers I and II. Although summer is the most popular time for swimming lessons, the Continuing Education swimming classes are offered all year. More than 600 people enroll in the fall and spring sessions and approximately 300 people are enrolled in the summer classses.

The toddler classes do not try to teach swimming because the children are not mature enough physically, Acer said.

"We see the classes as a gradual progression," he said. "By the time children are four or five, they have the mechanics. Most five- and six-year-olds can swim between 10 feet and 10 yards with some efficiency."

Schmitz said she tries to teach the toddlers coordination when they kick their feet and arms in the water. The teachers also stress the skills of putting the face in the water and blowing bubbles, kicking with straight legs and reaching for toys in the water.

"We want the children to be content in the water, to lay on their backs and be relaxed," Schmitz said.

A maximum of seven children are enrolled in each 30-minute toddler session. Parents must accompany their children in the water. In the Toddler II class, the children practice leaping between their parent and the instructor, or jumping to their parent from the edge of the pool. The children like to please their parents, so it is the parent who teaches the child.

Sharon Tirado, sophomore in elementary education, said she enrolled her daughter Christen in Toddler II because they live close to a creek.

"She isn't afraid of water and we want her to at least have a fighting chance," Tirado said. "We want her to learn to respect water."

Cheryl Strange, graduate in public administration, said, "I enrolled my daughter Andrea because I just wanted her to start getting used to the water at an early age. I was always in a pool from the time I was a baby."

The women said they enjoyed the swimming classes as much as their daughters did.

"It's a special time; just you and her," Strange said. "The last few days, Andrea has smiled and kicked. Thursday, she fell asleep. I know I can take her to a pool now and teach her."

Group travels abroad to tour baking plants, compare techniques

By JANICE STUCKY
Collegian Reporter

Have you ever thought there might be a bakery so computerized even the weighing of ingredients was mechanized?

Forty-five American students and bakers were able to view such a bakery plant at Zurich, Switzerland. The plant tour was part of a European bakery study tour offered as an intersession course May 24 through June 11.

Five K-State students took the tour, but most of the participants were bakers from the eastern United States. They visited retail and wholesale bakeries and ingredient manufacturing plants in England, Belgium, Holland, Germany and Switzerland. Two research facilities and the International Baking Exhibition in Munich, Germany were also toured.

Joseph Ponte, professor of grain science and tour leader, said the purpose of the tour was to observe a broad picture of the baking industry in Europe.

"The baking industry in Europe is not necessarily better or worse than the United States' — just different," Ponte said. "Technique and process differences were seen."

One of the major differences between the European and American bakery industries is that small retail bakeries are more numerous in Europe.

"About 80 percent of the bread in the United States is put out by large companies," Ponte said. "In Europe, it is much the opposite. The small bakeries are much better equipped than small ones here.

"There doesn't appear to be a trend in centralization — toward bigger and fewer plants. The small retail bakery is fairly well entrenched in Europe," he added.

The tour group observed that European bakeries provide more variety of products than American bakeries.

"One bakery in Holland makes 70 kinds of bread each day," Ponte said. "In the United States, the bakeries restrict their variation in production — it (the baking system) is more efficient."

He said many bakeries in Europe are handed down within a family. One English bakery the group visited has been run by the same family for 140 years.

"The Europeans are more fastidious toward their bread products than

Students seek patent for farm implement

The Hay-veyor, a farm implement designed and built by four K-State students, has received national recognition for its gentle treatment of windrowed (raked together to dry) crops.

"The Hay-veyor is a machine for moving windrows," said Dennis Schmidt, senior in agricultural engineering and chief engineer of the Hay-veyor. "It picks up and fluffs windrowed grains and hays and can combine two rows into one."

Robert Tedford, Mark Eilert and Naomi Regier, all seniors in agricultural engineering, designed and built the Hay-veyor with Schmidt as a project in Design of Agricultural Machines, a course required for students working toward a bachelor's in agricultural engineering.

Schmidt said his father and uncle, Clarence Schmidt and Robert Schmidt, owners of S & S Feeders in Caldwell, had the original idea for the Hay-veyor. Schmidt's father built one about 15 years ago but it was of a simpler design.

"They helped fund the project which cost a little over $2,300," he said. "The Hay-veyor was built from scratch."

"Manhattan Pipe and Steel provided steel at a reduced price and Hesston Corportation donated belts. The New Holland company also provided some helpful data," Schmidt said. "The total cost compares to the cost of conventional hay rakes ranging in price from $2,500 to $3,000. The increased quality of the hay and grains, along with the actual cost of the Hay-veyor, makes it feasible as a farm implement," Schmidt said.

The project was started in the fall of 1982 and by the time finals began in May, the group had completed some testing on it, Schmidt said. More testing is planned this summer at the agronomy research farms.

The implement was entered in the American Society of Agricultural Engineers (ASAE) student design competition in March and placed second, qualifying it the national convention in December.

"I feel it will do well," said G.E. Fairbanks, professor of agricultural engineering and project adviser.

According to a report Schmidt submitted for the ASAE competition, the hay rakes now in use "have been criticized for their harsh handling of hay and grain crops. The Hay-veyor has been designed to avoid the aggressiveness of the conventional hay rakes."

"The Hay-veyor is designed so that the fluffed hay can be delivered to either side of the original windrow," he said.

"It will probably be more popular in the northern United States where more windrowing is done," Schmidt said. The report noted "much of the small grain crop in the northern Great Plains is cut to dry in windrows prior to harvest."

The group is seeking a patent on the Hay-veyor and has asked the KSU Foundation to pursue it.

"It would cost us about $5,000 to do it (seek the patent) ourselves," Schmidt said.

Military, firefighters join in mock evacuation

By JAN HISH
Collegian Reporter

It's a bird! It's a plane! No, it's a Huey!

The Huey, an Army helicopter equipped for medical evacuation, participated in a mock evacuation rescue mission of a 200-pound mannequin from the rooftop of Haymaker Hall Wednesday.

Fort Riley's Military Assistance to Safety and Traffic (MAST), participated with the Manhattan Fire Department in a joint effort to simulate a possible rescue from atop Haymaker.

Because Manhattan Fire Department's equipment is unable to reach the residence halls' maximum heights, and because the city will begin providing the University with fire protection service as of July 1, the simulation was conducted.

With the fire department, Riley County Ambulance Service and Security and Traffic in place, the scenario began.

Dr. Arnold E. Levenson, civilian MAST coordinator, made a call requesting the MAST unit to respond from the Riley County Emergency Communications van on-location. Less than 10 minutes later, the Huey appeared and circled the area.

The helicopter's landing was aided from the ground by Major Virgil East, commander of the 82nd Medical Detachment (MAST).

Following the landing in a field north of Haymaker, the Huey was shut down and secured for an orientation and demonstration of the aircraft and on-board equipment.

Chief Warrant Officer Raymond Wilson, pilot instructor, described the operating capabilities of the lifesaving lift. Equipped with an attachment called a penetrator, the lift is capable of hoisting up to three people or 600 pounds from many otherwise inaccessible areas to the hovering helicopter and safety.

In briefing the firemen, Wilson warned, "The descending penetrator acquires a substantial static charge and, though not life-threatening, provides a jolt and should be allowed to discharge through the ground."

Further demonstration of securing possible victims to the penetrator was accomplished with the mannequin. Details of the four crewmen's responsibilities were discussed next.

Crewmen included the pilot, co-pilot, crew chief and on-board emergency medical technician.

Wilson concluded the orientation with the air ambulance's list of capabilities which includes a 140 mph top speed and ability to operate 2½ hours. The helicopter can also transport three prone or four ambulatory people.

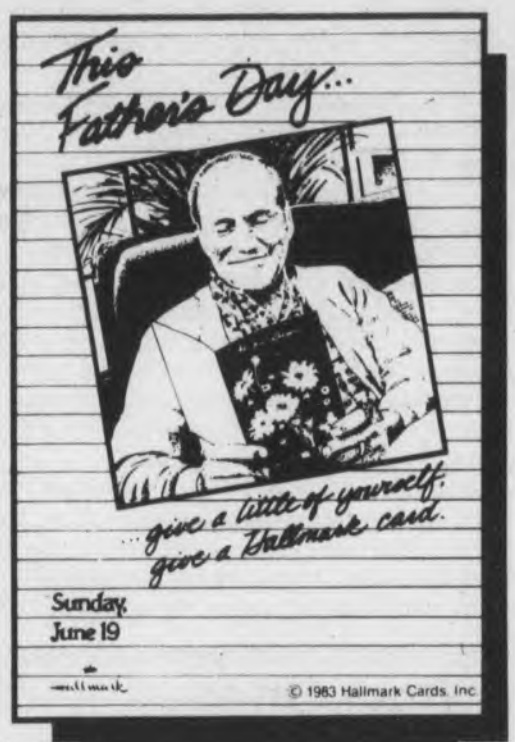
Following questions, the area was cleared and preparations for the mock rescue were completed. With many spectators below, the Huey took its position and hovered above Haymaker.

People watched with amazement as the penetrator descended 50 feet to the rescue site and with the mannequin secured, the lift ascended to the air ambulance which then returned safely to the field.

Its mission successful, the Huey departed.

Dr. Levenson said that following a critique of the project, announcements of its success would be released.

To procure better service, two air ambulances will be on a 24-hour, seven-day-a-week on-call basis, should an emergency arise.



The MAST unit serves a 100-mile radius area bordered by Lincoln, Neb., Kansas City, Wichita and Hays at no cost. The unit facilitates expedient transport of victims in dangerous situations to the nearest medical facilities capable of handling their particular emergencies.

Duran to battle Moore in championship bout

NEW YORK (AP) — Roberto Duran could step back on the glory road, or begin life looking back at his mostly illustrious past when he challenges Davey Moore for the World Boxing Association junior middleweight championship Thursday night at Madison Square Garden.

"He has experience, 70 fights (actually 79) and two world championships," the 24-year-old Moore — a champion with just 12 pro fights — said Tuesday at a news conference.

"You've got to give him respect. But that doesn't mean he can beat me," added Moore, who at 5 feet 10 inches, will enjoy a 2½-inch height and 4⅓-inch reach advantage over Duran.

Las Vegas bookmakers haven't made a betting line on the scheduled 15-round fight, but one said that if he handled any action, he would make Duran a 2-1 favorite.

"I don't believe two or three years ago a guy with 12 fights would have anything to do with me," said Duran, who will be 32 the day of the fight.

But a little more than 2½ years ago, the fearsome fighter called "Hands of Stone" blotted a truly shining career when he quit on his feet in the eighth round of a World Boxing Council welterweight title rematch against Sugar Ray Leonard.

Duran said he had stomach cramps, and he has never changed his story.

"I don't think for one second about my past glory," said the Panamanian, who dominated the lightweight division as champion from 1972 until 1979. "This is the new stage of my career. There are no excuses for the past."

As for the future, Duran said, "I'm not thinking I will lose, but in case I would lose, I would retire."

A lot of people called for Duran to retire after the embarrassment against Leonard. But he wouldn't quit, although his first three fights after the Leonard rematch did little to change the minds of those who said he was through.

Last November, he won a dull 10-round decision over Jimmy Batten in an undercard bout on the Aaron Pryor-Alexis Arguello WBA junior welterweight title card — and he looked like an old fighter doing it.

Davey Moore was a spectator.

"I walked out after the third round," he said.

But Duran looked good in stopping Pipino Cuevas, the former WBA welterweight champion, in the fourth round last Jan. 29, although many boxing observers considered Cuevas washed up as a fighter.

The victory gave Duran a 75-4-0 record, with 56 knockouts.

Two Big Eight cagers to compete in festival

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — University of Nebraska center Dave Hoppen and All-Big Eight Conference forward Kerry Boagni of the University of Kansas top a field of 48 graduated prep stars and collegiate freshmen stars lined up for the National Sports Festival junior men's basketball competition.

Hoppen, named to the National Invitation Tournament team last year, averaged just under 14 points a game in pacing Nebraska to a 22-10 record. Boagni averaged 14.1 points in Big Eight games his freshman year.

The 48 players in the competition are divided into four regional teams with round-robin games to begin June 24. Twelve will be named to the USA National Team that will represent the United States in the FIBA World Championships for Junior Men, Aug. 20-30, in Spain.

U.S. Open 'tees off' today

OAKMONT, Pa. (AP) — Tom Watson, who said he isn't playing particularly well, opens the defense of his U.S. Open Golf Championship Thursday on what he says is the toughest course he's ever seen.

The Oakmont Country Club course — with narrow fairways, deep rough and fast greens — is so difficult, he said, it automatically eliminates most of the field of 146 pros and 10 amateurs as potential winners.

"I don't think there are more than 20 players who can win here. You have to look at the high-ball hitters, people who hit the ball high and soft," Watson said. He named a few: "(Jack) Nicklaus, Seve (Ballesteros), (Andy) Bean, (Lanny) Wadkins, (Hale) Irwin."

"Playing the way I am right now, I don't think I have much of a chance," he said.

Watson, who won both the U.S. and British Opens last year and has been the dominant figure in the game for several seasons, is in the worst slump of his career. He hasn't won in 1983. He hasn't even mounted a serious challenge.

While his hopes are dim at the moment, they are at least as good as those of Johnny Miller. And considerably better than Lee Trevino's.

Trevino, who had been pointing toward this tournament as a chance for his third American national championship, withdrew Wednesday, a victim of his own eagerness.

"He was over-anxious. He practiced too much," said an assistant, Joe Salinas. Trevino had four practice sessions last week in which he hit 600 balls or more a day, Salinas said. He developed muscle spasms in his back and had to withdraw.

Miller, too, is among the ailing. Miller, who won the Open in 1973 — the last time it was played at Oakmont — said he has been diagnosed as having gall bladder problems. He faces surgery next week and said the chances are "20 to 50 percent that I won't be able to play."

Those absentees, and Watson's problems, only enhanced Ballesteros as the favorite. The long-hitting Spaniard, who won his second Masters title in April, scored a dramatic victory last weekend in the Westchester Classic.

Nicklaus, of course, is a traditional factor in any of the world's great tournaments. In the four recognized majors, he's won a record 17 times and been second that many more. In the Open, he has a record-tying four wins and a record-tying four seconds.

One of those runner-up spots came last year when Watson snatched the title from him with the historic chip-in birdie at Pebble Beach.

Twins thrash Royals — again

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Scott Ullger matched his previous major-league career output with three hits to lead a 13-hit attack as the Minnesota Twins beat the Kansas City Royals 6-2 Wednesday night to complete a three-game sweep of the series.

Ullger, replacing injured Kent Hrbek at first base, had two doubles and a single to give him a career total of six hits in the major leagues. The winning pitcher, Frank Viola, 3-4, scattered eight hits, striking out seven and walking one.

The Twins erupted for five runs in the fifth inning to take a 6-1 lead and chase Royals pitcher Paul Splittorff, 4-2. After a lead-off single, Dave Engle followed with a triple to break a 1-1 tie.

Engle scored when Gary Gaetti's grounder went through the legs of second baseman Frank White. Tom Brunansky brought Gaetti home with a double, and he scored on a double by Ullger. Ray Smith accounted for the final run of the inning with an RBI single.

White hit his fifth home run of the year in the sixth inning for the Royals. Kansas City took a 1-0 lead in the second inning on an RBI single by Leon Roberts. The Twins tied it in the fourth on a sacrifice fly by Houston Jimenez.

Sixers' Malone named MVP

NEW YORK (AP) — Moses Malone, in a near-unanimous vote, was named the National Basketball Association's 1982-83 Most Valuable Player for the third time at the league's awards banquet Wednesday.

Malone, who was first in the NBA in rebounding with 15.3 per game and was fifth in scoring with an average of 24.5, also was the MVP of the NBA championship series — in which the 76ers swept Los Angeles in four games.

The last player to win both the regular season and championship series MVP was Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, who was known as Lew Alcindor when he did it in 1971 for the Milwaukee Bucks.

Malone, who also won the NBA's MVP award in 1978-79 and 1981-82, received 69 first-place votes from a nationwide panel of 75 media members.

On a 10-7-5-3-1 basis for first through fifth-place votes, Malone had 720 points to 364 for Boston's Larry Bird, 304½ for Earvin "Magic" Johnson of Los Angeles, 226 for Sidney Moncrief of Milwaukee and 112 for Julius Erving of Philadelphia. Bird had one first-place vote, Johnson two and Erving three.

Other honors announced at the luncheon were:

— rookie-of-the-year, Terry Cummings of San Diego;

— coach-of-the-year, Don Nelson of Milwaukee;

— comeback-player-of-the-year, Paul Westphal of New York;

— defensive-player-of-the-year, Moncrief; and — "sixth man" award winner Bobby Jones of Philadelphia.

Malone was not present at the awards ceremony, and 76ers Coach Billy Cunningham accepted the MVP trophy in his place.

"Moses came to Philadelphia and fit in so well with Erving," Cunningham said. "Having two players like that makes it so easy for a coach. Moses doesn't have the natural talent some other players in the NBA have, but he's a special athlete and exemplifies what you can do with hard work."

Cards send Hernandez to New York in trade

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Mets obtained former National League batting champion Keith Hernandez from the St. Louis Cardinals in exchange for pitchers Neil Allen and Rick Ownbey in a deal announced only an hour before the major league trading deadline Wednesday.

Hernandez, 29, shared the National League Most Valuable Player award with Willie Stargell in 1979 when he batted .344.

He came into the 1982 season with a career .299 batting average and was hitting .284 with three home runs and 26 runs batted in for the Cardinals this season.

Cardinals Manager Whitey Herzog said that he made the deal because he needed pitching. He said Allen would start next Tuesday night against the Mets in New York.

Walesa placed under guard as pope travels to Poland

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Secret police entered Lech Walesa's home Wednesday and placed the labor leader under "house arrest" in an effort to keep him from meeting Pope John Paul II during the papal visit, Walesa said Wednesday.

But Walesa vowed to try to meet the pontiff, despite orders from three agents in his apartment not to leave without them.

"I consider myself under house arrest," Walesa told The Associated Press by telephone from Gdansk, the Baltic seaport where the now-outlawed union Solidarity was formed during strikes in August 1980.

"I shall pack up my things for Czestochowa at 1600 hours (4 p.m.) Friday whatever the consequences," he declared. "And that is that."

The Polish-born pope arrives Thursday. Vatican officials have said privately they hope to arrange a private meeting between the pope and Walesa and his family, possibly on Sunday in Czestochowa.

Walesa said guards had taken up positions "outside my doors, under my windows and balconies outside" the apartment where he lives with his wife, seven children and aides.

Polish officials, who refer to Walesa as "former leader of a former trade union," say he has no official standing any more and so cannot have a meeting with the pope. The two met last in November 1980 at the Vatican.

Bakeries

Americans," he said. "The housewives in Europe go to the bakery much more often than Americans."

A relationship between the European bakeries and Kansas wheat exists, Ponte said.

"About 20 percent of the wheat is imported, and some of it is Kansas wheat," he said. "For the countries' economic welfare, more wheat can't be imported. However, bakers would like to use wheat such as ours for production, because Kansas wheat is stronger than European varieties."

A highlight of the tour was the International Baking Exhibition in Munich. Twenty buildings full of exhibits and demonstrations were viewed. Ingredient, baking equipment and product displays were exhibited by many countries.

The British Flour Millers and Bakers Research Association in Chorleywood, England was toured, as was the Institute for Flour, Cereals and Bread in Wageningen, Holland.

"These world-famous research institutes are fine facilities," Ponte said. "They deal with overall basic and applied research."

The research facilities may serve a similar function as the extension programs in the United States, according to Ponte. The facility in England publishes a bulletin about its research, from which baker members may benefit.

"There are not universities, as such, which offer baking curriculums," Ponte said. "The profession is taught in schools such as the London Polytechnic of the South Bank Institute. It is a very good three-year program which deals with the profession itself — no research takes place at the school."

"Our European hosts showed outstanding hospitality to us," Ponte said. "They provided product samples on tours and several buffet lunches for us."

This was the first year this European tour was offered through K-State.

"It was a success and we anticipate doing it again sometime," Ponte said. "I'm not aware of many tours such as this that have been offered in the United States. It is a service we have provided for the U.S. baking industry."

The Fone Crisis Center will hold training Sat. & Sun. (June 18 & 19) from 8:30-5:00. Breakfast and lunch will be provided.

Board of Regents increases budget spending limits

From staff and wire reports

Without discussion, the Kansas Board of Regents unanimously agreed Friday to ask Gov. John Carlin and the Kansas Legislature for a $61.3 million, three-year capital improvement plan to begin in July 1984.

However, the regents decided the University's proposed coliseum is not among items eligible for state funding.

The regents also discussed the fire protection agreement between the University and Manhattan and the lighting of the baseball and football stadiums.

The board approved and sent to state universities guidelines for their next fiscal year budgets, setting general fund spending limits some $15.1 million higher than Carlin authorized.

The regents want the Legislature to spread $61.3 million over three years in three basic categories: maintenance and repair, renovation and energy conservation and new buildings.

The board wants $4 million each year for maintenance and repair. To implement renovation and energy conservation projects at each of the seven campuses, the board is requesting $41.1 million. In the new buildings category, the regents are seeking $32.9 million over four years.

All the money in the new buildings category would be concentrated on buildings at the three largest state universities: a library at the University of Kansas, a chemistry-biochemical building at K-State and a library addition at Wichita State University.

The Legislature has already committed $10 million toward capital improvements for the first year of the plan.

Budget action followed quickly after the capital improvements plan passed. Jordan Haines, regent, explained additional money was needed in the 1985 fiscal year to make up for losses suffered the past year.

The board approved a 7 percent salary hike for unclassified employees and a 5 percent boost for classified workers.

The budget guidelines approved also call for a 10 percent increase in funding for utilities, a 20 percent jump in health insurance payments and 7 percent hikes in student wage allocations and in the Other Operating Expense category.

The regents recommended the state not fund the proposed coliseum for K-State.

However, they did endorse K-State's request that the 1984 Kansas Legislature authorize expenditure of private funds to employ an associate architect to provide site planning, architectural drawings and cost estimates for a coliseum. Funds are now being solicited by the KSU Foundation.

KSDB-FM implements automated system

By BILL DAVIS
Collegian Reporter

A low-cost automation system has been developed for use at KSDB-FM, the University's student radio station, by two professors and one electrician in the radio and television curriculum.

"We don't want to make money mass-producing this system," David MacFarland, associate professor of radio and television, said. "We work in this department and want to improve the quality of the station. Copyrights have been applied for both the computer program and the circuit board.

"Eventually, it (the automation system) will be turned over to a company to produce. The company will be the one to make money on it, not us."

Lee Buller, associate professor of radio and television, George Scheets, electrical technician in the department, and MacFarland originally began working on the project three months ago.

"This system is very inexpensive and can do almost everything an automation system can do which is offered by a major broadcast equipment manfacturer," MacFarland said. "It only takes one person to run it and that would allow a station to remain open 365 days a year."

"Our goal was to develop a low-cost automation system that would easily fit into our existing equipment," MacFarland said. "We managed to do it for about $370, which is a tremendous savings when you consider buying one from a major broadcast equipment manufacturer would cost $10,000 or more."

The system consists of a circuit board, which costs about $140; a Commodore VIC-20 microcomputer, at a cost of $100; Commodore's Datasette cassette tape recorder/player, for approximately $70; and an 8K (an approximate storage capacity of 8,000 words) memory expansion module, for a cost of $60.

The VIC-20 was chosen as the program control center because of its low cost, wide availability and ease of programming. It also has a separate memory expansion port which will allow it to expand to 32K," MacFarland said.

"We took the system to the Kansas Association of Broadcasters convention in Lawrence last week and won third place in the group's idea fair contest," Buller said.

"Several people have already been over to look at it and one man wanted the system as is," MacFarland added.

"The target area of the system is small-market broadcasters," Buller said. "One of its biggest sellers is the format on the screen. It is easy to read and you don't have to be a computer genius to operate it. You just have to know how to type."

"Another strong selling point is its ease of installation," Scheets said. "It is very easy to install and most station engineers could do it in 10 to 20 hours."

The three men worked on the project using their own specific abilities.

"Dave did most of the conceptualization and has a wide knowledge of what the problems are in broadcasting," Buller said. "I wrote about 75 to 80 percent of the decision-making program while George built and installed the circuit board."

Racing worms... Official Rich Baker, an employee at the Sports Fan-Attic, "calls" the race between three worms at Aggie Downs. Slime, owned by Shelly Hynek, Manhattan, pulls out in the lead during the preliminaries and eventually won the heat in a time of 2:59.

Worm wins race after beer bath

Precious Paul pulled off a stunning 17-second victory over Slime and Walter in the finals of the first weekly worm races Wednesday night at Aggie-Downs.

Sponsored by the Sports Fan-Attic in Aggieville, the winning worm was one of nine to compete in the event. The three worms advanced to the final race after defeating two other competitors in their respective heats.

All three of the worms looked anxious entering the gate, but it was to be Precious Paul's night as he crossed the finish line before Slime or Walter made it out of the gate.

"Soaking Precious Paul in beer for a minute before the race was the key to his success," Bruce Eggers, Manhattan resident and the worm's owner, said.

Shelly Hynek, Manhattan resident and Slime's owner, said, "Slime was just exhausted after the first heat. He couldn't seem to move."

Hynek added she thought it was a fair race though and didn't think anyone had tampered with her worm.

"I'll be back next week with a new worm," she said.

"It looks like a good night for fishing," Steve Young, senior in electrical engineering and computer science, said.

Young's worm, Slimmon Simon, was eliminated in the first race.

"It was exciting," Fred Lechner, owner of the Sports Fan-Attic, said after the races.

Lechner, who came up with the idea, said he at first thought the races were an original idea. Later, through reading an article in the Kansas City Star, he learned a grade school in Missouri had been sponsoring such an event for six years.

Aggie-Downs, which incidentally doubles as a pool table, will be open again Wednesday beginning with a weigh-in at 9:30 p.m. Race time is set for 10 p.m., according to Lechner. Anyone who makes it to the weigh-in will be allowed to race.

facilities and educational requirements, the Board of Regents does not recommend — nor does it intend — that state funds be provided for the construction of the coliseum," said the recommendation presented to the regents by the Facilities Committee.

The committee heard from Gene Cross, vice president for University Facilities, on the proposed fire station at the northeast corner of Kimball and Denison avenues. Cross said the city and K-State were proceeding on the procurement of the 6.4 acres for the fire station.

Cross said the city will proceed with the selection of an architect and the drawings should be ready by November 1983 when the structure will go to bid.

Another item presented to the committee dealt with the lighting of Frank Meyers Field. Cross said the city needed a lighted baseball field in the summer and had approached the University about lighting the field. He said it would cost approximately $120,000 to light the field and the city had approved $50,000.

Norman Brandeberry, a regent and Manhattan businessman, said since K-State's team uses the field during the day, if the city wants to use the field at night, then it should pay for the lighting.

The lighting of KSU Stadium, which was approved at the May 20 meeting, was also discussed. The lights had been estimated to cost $300,000, but the bid price was $375,000, Cross said. All funds for the lighting will come from the KSU Foundation.

Before closing the meeting, the regents elected a new chairman and said good-bye to a retiring university president.

John G. Montgomery, publisher and vice-president of Montgomery Publications of Junction City, was nominated and unanimously elected the new chairman, effective July 1, to serve a one-year term. Montgomery replaces James Pickert, Emporia, who remains on the board.

Wichita State University President Clark D. Ahlberg was praised and thanked for his 15 years at the school.

Tour group studies European agriculture

By JANICE STUCKY
Collegian Reporter

A colorful Dutch flower auction and fertile reclaimed land from Holland's Zuider Zee were among the sites seen by participants in the spring intersession European agriculture study tour.

Twenty-five participants from K-State and the University of Missouri were able to see how eight Western Europe countries' agriculture industries differ from those in the United States. The two universities jointly sponsored the 22-day trip.

The tour, which is offered for three hours of credit, has been an annual event for 10 years, Frank Orazem, professor of economics and tour leader, said.

"The tour allows students to gain a new perspective on agriculture," Orazem said. "It shows students the farmers' concerns, their ways of doing things and how they live. It really enhances their understanding of agriculture."

The tour exposed students to a wide variety of agricultural industries including fruit and vegetable farms, beef and dairy operations and a hops farm.

"Hops production is limited mostly to the northwest in the United States, but in Germany it is a large industry," Orazem said. "In Germany, beer is the king. The breweries use mug inscriptions such as 'brewed since 1230.'"

One difference Orazem noted was the dairy and beef operations in Europe.

"European farmers have dual operations — both dairy and beef cattle are seen on the same farm. There is not specialization as there is in the United States."

Orazem also noted economic differences in Europe.

"In the United States, milk prices are determined by butterfat content. In Europe, dairy farmers receive a premium for a greater protein content instead."

He said the dairy price support system differs within the European Economic Community.

"In Western Europe there are production quotas for milk," Orazem said. "If a farmer exceeds his quota, the price he receives is minimized. This attempts to keep the milk surplus down, but it doesn't allow for expansion of herds." One Swiss farm visited was a father-son operation, but they couldn't expand the herd so one of them took on another job.

"The farms are family operations varying from 20 to 200 acres. The beef and dairy operations we saw ran from a dozen to 170 cows," Orazem said. There are no corporate farms in Western Europe.

Orazem, a native of Europe, said he was "surprised" to discover how European agriculture techniques have changed.

"It has modernized significantly since past decades," he said. "Agriculture is now capital-intensive instead of labor-intensive."

Another difference Orazem noted was the many modes of transportation which are used in Europe. The tour used buses, a boat on the Rhine River, and a hovercraft to cross the English Channel.

"The hovercraft glides across the water, and is similar to a plane, but noisier," explained Orazem. The hovercraft is supported by a cushion of air with propellers to direct it forward and travels normally at about 50 miles per hour.

The "back roads" tour allowed the group to see how similar the European farmers are to American farmers, Orazem said.

"This tour through the countryside let us talk to farmers. It let us see how farmers are so much alike all over (the world). It was seeding time, and it was raining."

Reagan to consider Lawrence for summit site

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration says it will consider a proposal for a summit meeting in Lawrence, between the president and Soviet leader Yuri Andropov.

In a brief letter to U.S. Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., an aide to Reagan said the invitation by the Lawrence City Commission will be given "most careful consideration."

In another letter to Dole, State Department spokesman Powell Moore wrote that the process leading to a meeting between the two leaders would be "slow and difficult."

Moore said the United States must be "realistic," and suggested that "unacceptable" Soviet actions such as its continued occupation of Afghanistan reduce the chances of a meeting.

Lawrence Mayor David Longhurst said he had not received copies of the two letters. But when told of their content late last week, he said his enthusiasm was not dampened.

"We owe it to our kids and ourselves to do something," he said.

Law forcing male students to register thwarted

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — A federal judge Friday issued a permanent injunction against the U.S. government's attempts to force male students applying for financial aid to disclose their draft registration status.

U.S. District Judge Donald D. Alsop said the law requiring such disclosure was unconstitutional and ordered the federal government not to enforce the rule in any state.

Alsop also ordered that the U.S. Department of Education notify financial aid administrators at colleges nationwide to inform students that they need not supply information about their draft registration when applying for financial aid.

Selective Service spokeswoman Joan Lamb said in Washington that her agency will appeal the decision to the U.S. Supreme Court and will ask Alsop to stay the ruling pending the appeal.

Man dead at age 153, Jordan paper claims

AMMAN, Jordan (AP) — A Jordanian Moslem who walked two miles a day and never visited a doctor has died at the age of 153, the newspaper Sout Ash-Shaab reported Sunday.

Haj Khalil Ahmed Yamani was born in 1830 in the town of Maan and married six times, the newspaper said, but did not provide documentation for his age. It said he made five pilgrimages by camel to Mecca, the holy Islamic city in Saudi Arabia.

"He worked all his life in trade and his sight was perfect. He had an excellent memory, never went to a doctor for treatment and never smoked a cigarette in his life," the paper said. It did not say when he died, provide proof of his age or give further details.

The 1983 Guinness Book of World Records lists the oldest living human with proof of age as Shigechiyo Izumi of Japan, who celebrated his 117th birthday on June 29, 1982. He was recorded as a 6-year-old in Japan's first census in 1871.

Futures of women astronauts ride on Ride

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Perhaps nobody is watching the performance of Sally K. Ride more closely and with more self-interest than the seven women who stayed behind.

"What I do will probably reflect on them," acknowledged Ride in a preflight interview. Much is at stake; only one of the seven women has been assigned to an upcoming flight.

It took 22 years for NASA to send a woman into orbit and there are still some in the agency who are unconvinced that women belong there. How well Ride's mission goes, it's felt, could well determine the composition of future space flights.

Ride, herself, recognizes this and feels the tension.

"The main pressure I feel is just to show that I'm capable of pulling it off," she told The Associated Press. "It's important to me, but I think it's also important to the rest of the women astronauts."

Ride's mission, says astronaut Kathy Sullivan, may provide the final little push to topple emotional barriers against women in space.

NASA selected six women astronauts, including Ride, in 1978, and two more the following year. All are mission specialists, excluded from actually flying the shuttle, who perform scientific experiments and other activities.

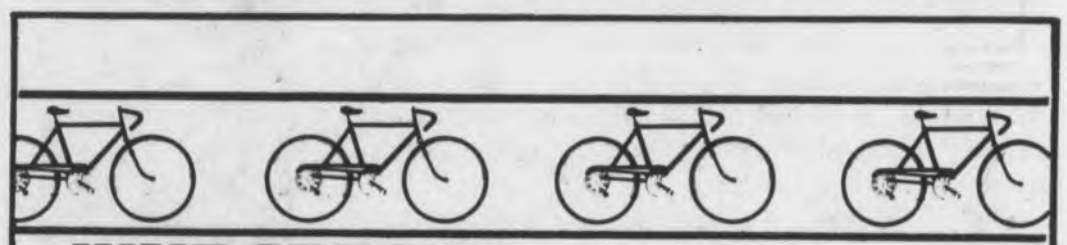
18,000 march for Lesbian, Gay Pride Day

BOSTON (AP) — About 18,000 people marched through Boston streets to celebrate the 13th anniversary of Lesbian and Gay Pride Day.

Marchers shouted: "We are everywhere, we will be free!"

Karl Houston, co-chairman of the Lesbian and Gay Pride Day Committee, said the march was to commemorate a 1969 incident in New York City called the Stonewall Rebellion. Homosexuals in Greenwich Village had rioted against police who were closing down homosexual bars and arresting gay men and women.

Weather



It's beginning to look a lot like summer! Today will be a typical summer day with sunny skies and temperatures soaring into the upper 80's to low 90's. There will be a southeast winds 15 to 25 mph. Tomorrow will be much like today — BEAUTIFUL.

Judge's decision protects students

Another step has been taken to further abolish the U.S. government's attempts to force male students to disclose their draft registration when applying for financial aid.

U.S. District Judge Donald D. Alsop was correct on his issuance of a permanent injunction on Friday against the Solomon Amendment, which requires such disclosure.

If the votes taken last spring against such a clause in financial aid application by the student governments at the University of Kansas, Wichita State University and K-State — in Student Body President Jerry Katlin's veto of a resolution which supported the controversial rule — are any indication, then few would disagree with Alsop's declaration that the law is unconstitutional.

One viable argument against the law's constitutionality was that such disclosure conflicts with the Fifth Amendment, which protects a person from self-incrimination.

To place unregistered male students in such a "Catch-22" situation could possibly deprive them of their educational rights.

The Selective Service Agency plans to appeal the decision to the U.S. Supreme Court and will ask Alsop to stay the ruling pending the appeal.

However, the agency should find these efforts to be a waste of time, because, as Alsop puts it, "the court did not find those (the agency's) arguments to be persuasive then (on March 9 when he issued a preliminary injunction) and does not find them to be so now."

It is time for the agency to find other alternatives to get the approximately one million unregistered males to register for the draft. After all, to allow the government to interfere with a student's educational rights and privileges for something of an entirely different matter may only result in damaging consequences.

One only needs to remember the student unrest demonstrated during the '60s and early '70s to see the possible student reaction if the judge's ruling is overturned.

Diary madness

— "5 a.m. — Swam the River Thames and saved a group of drowning fishermen."

— "7 a.m. — Flew across the Atlantic to New York and helped the U.S. Coast Guard capture a $1 million consignment of cocaine."

— "6 p.m. — Received a honor from the president for saving a group of 10 mine workers from a landslide."

How I wish I had such James Bond-type activities to relate in my diary. Quite contrarily, my diary often reads:

— "Monday — Got up 7:15 a.m. Trudged wearily to the 7:30 a.m. class, still under the throngs of a severe hangover from yesterday's party. Bumped into a familiar face that was hardly cognizable until the person asked me for some dues."

— "Came home at 2:30 p.m. Hit the sack. Assignments postponed until tomorrow."

Since I was 11 years old, I started writing diaries. My father often told me that it was the only virtuous habit I had inherited from him.

Well, even then I had this instinct that in the future, I was going to be a reputed personality and millions of readers were going to enjoy reading my biography. Apparently, I do not place any constraints upon my imagination.

Recently, I was browsing through my old diaries.

A DIARY WRITTEN when I was 16 years old — in the prime of youth and when all those romantic thoughts haunted my mind — reads:

— "Mom woke me up early in the morning to catch the 10 a.m. bus to school that also commuted a lovely girl who made my heart skip several beats everytime I saw her. Reaching the bus stop, I found the bus just taking off. Got damn depressed. Went back home and read the book, 'How To Be Punctual In Future.'"

While often in a pensive mood, I sit down and reflect on the past. Diaries help in kindling memories of days gone by. One of my old diaries also describes my first "date" when the girl fails to show up.

Again, a dumb mistake on my part for asking the girl for a date after deliberately trampling on her foot in order to attract her attention.

You can see from the description above how diaries point out your earlier mistakes so you can learn from them. Seriously, since that incident, I've never trampled on a girl's foot before asking her for a date.

Diaries are of various types, and they largely depend on the person who writes them.

MY FRIEND MAINTAINED a diary that purely served as a counter for the number of girls he had dated in a calender year and a directory of the girls' names and phone numbers.

A guy who I knew in school wrote emotional diaries that would bring tears to its readers' eyes. Personally, I don't think I have ever known a more pessimistic character.

My brother, who works on a ship, also is affected by my family's idiosyncratic diary habit. He has a regular, but despicable diary habit which is totally unwarranted.

Browsing through his bookshelf one day, I spotted one of his diaries, which I stealthily transported to my room. I hoped to unravel the finer aspects of his personal life for which I had never really understood.

Being a seaman, his diary reads almost everyday as, "at sea," and nothing more. Occasionally, it read as, "at port." I am sure, however, that he has more things going in his life than just being at sea or port.

I have known people to maintain two diaries — one for their own personal reference and another for others' reference. The former type usually is more factual, and the latter, wholly fictitious.

THIS USUALLY HAPPENS with the so-called VIPs who are widely covered by the press. Something tells me that the folks in Hollywood believe in this concept.

I never really realized the significance of diaries until recently, when the Fuhrer's "diary" created such an uproar all over the world. In the future, my diaries may be in greater demand — and probably yours, too.

Just like every other constructive habits in life, the diary habit also is quite demanding. It is necessary that you spend at least 10 minutes recollecting the day's happenings and put them on paper.

Sometimes I have forgotten to write my dairy for the day, and there cannot be a worse ordeal than trying to catch up with a postponed diary entry.

Writing about things that happened makes one more aware of the implications of any act. This way, it can get the better — or worse — of you.

Bluegrass in the Park

Blakes' work deserves wider acclaim

By KYLA STOLFUS
Staff Writer

Toward the end of his concert, Norman Blake praised Manhattan for supporting a program such as Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department's Arts in the Park concert series.

"The world needs more music — not just the kind on the radio," he said.

Someone should put Blake's music on the radio. This performer's work deserves a much larger audience than it gets.

Review

Norman and Nancy Blake are big names in the bluegrass world, having recorded several albums of their own. Judging by the warm response Saturday night in City Park, the husband and wife team and accompanying performers could convert many music lovers to bluegrass.

A large part of the crowd came from the concurrent arts and crafts festival situated behind the park stage, while the cool night air brought out others. The biggest attraction was the music.

The music of the Rising Dawn quartet originated from the hills of Alabama and Georgia. The lyrics were depressing — about death, lost loves, jail and broken dreams. The instruments were unassuming acoustic strings. This music came from a world other than that of the slick commercial type heard every hour of the day. The group communicated — something every musician wants to do.

THE QUARTET DISPLAYED virtuosity on several instruments. Norman Blake played guitar and mandolin as did Carl Jones, its banjo man. James Brown played an excellent lead fiddle and Nancy Blake added the warm sound of a cello. The cello, in fact, gave the group its appealing sound and blended in surprisingly well considering the instrument's classical background.

Although simple and repetitious, bluegrass music has character. The casual listener might have dismissed the Blakes as just "more-'country'-music-which-all-sounds-the-same." The group was careful to prevent that. The musicians' technique gave them the control to play with great subtleness.

The group looked completely relaxed even during the fast audience clappers like "Lazy Kate," "Third Street Gypsy Rag" and "Salty." Although these were crowd pleasers, the slower ballads were especially nice.

Numerous groups can pick fast and loud, but real talent is required to play the slow tunes effectively. Norman had a good voice for ballads and his own tunes such as "Last from Poor Valley" and "Last Train to Georgia" were appropriately slow and sad.

Nancy Blake's solos were slow and expressive to complement the rich tone of her cello. Although usually playing the part of accompanist, she shined with confidence in the folk songs "Darcy Farrow" and "My Love is Like a Red, Red Rose."

REAL BLUEGRASS DEVOTEES would have recognized the traditional songs the group did in the instrumental medleys. A lot of bluegrass is derived from Irish and Gaelic song tradition, and Norman was great about explaining the origins of the songs to the mixed crowd.

In an attempt to please a variety of listeners, the group formed a string quartet of three violins and the cello. The four came close to sounding classical with two difficult pieces called "Green Leaf Fancy" and "Fields of November." Although they didn't play with the style of classical training, the resulting sound blended like a quartet should.

Part of the crowd left during intermission and missed the best part of the concert. Jones' five-string banjo solo was great as were Nancy's solos. An instrumental piece called "Natasha's Waltz" was especially haunting with a Greek sound. Brown had a fantastic solo in "Salty." The entire group scored with its improvised version of "The Old Brown Case."

Through audience demand, for an encore Norman picked the first piece he'd learned on guitar, "Spanish Fandangle."

Exotic, unusual crafts highlight eighth annual arts festival

By JAN HISH
Collegian Reporter

Scratch-carved ostrich eggs and herbs from China — a couple of things not commonly found in Manhattan.

These rarieties were only a part of the eighth annual Arts & Crafts festival in the City Park Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Sponsored by the Manhattan Park and Recreation Services' Arts in the Park program, the festival featured 150 different exhibits in the weekend extravaganza.

Besides the exotic and unusual, everything imaginable made of wood, clay, cloth and various materials were on display, as well as paintings and photograhy.

Despite the exotic atmosphere, the festival didn't escape reality. Upon opening Sunday morning, three exhibitors discovered items missing from displays.

Included among the missing items were several ceramic pieces, belt buckles, and $10 worth of Christmas ornaments, according to Sgt. Walt James of the Riley County Police Department.

"Unfortunately, these things happen at exhibits like this," he added.

The disturbance failed to halt the fair, which continued all day Sunday. Artists and craftsman from across Kansas, as well as from surrounding states, displayed their wares.

SIMON & SIMON, wood carvers from Corpus Christi, Texas, have made Manhattan a regular stop during their yearly circuit of arts and crafts shows. Specializing in wood carved signs, the husband-and-wife team were designing a K-State Wildcat plaque during the festival. The couple also operate a craft business in Texas and frequently appear on television to demonstrate their talents.

Told to get her recipes out of a cluttered kitchen drawer and put them in order, Carol Ebert, of St. George, started her "Wheat Country Health Delights" recipe book, now in its second edition.

OBTAINING WHEAT STRAIGHT from that grown on her family's farm, Ebert offers a finely ground whole wheat flour, without preservatives, to use in her 200 recipes. Samplings of various dips and sauces containing herbs from China also highlighted her exhibit. With the additional responsibilities of being a mother, Ebert limits her traveling to northeastern Kansas.

Eggs are the object of the Athavichitchanyaraks' talents. From Hutchinson, Athaporn and Janet flaunt an exotic display of laced and scratch-carved eggs.

Using geese eggs from South Dakota, along with real canary, ostrich and chicken eggs, these artists begin their trade. First each egg must be sand blown via a small hole to clean the inside.

"You'd be surprised how sturdy eggs are after they have been blown," Janet said.

This exclusive trade is limited to six professionals in the country, including Athavichitchanyaraks and her sister.

KC rallies, defeats Mariners

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Rookie Cliff Pastornicky, hitless in his first 14 at-bats in the major leagues, drilled a three-run homer in the seventh inning Sunday to rally the Kansas City Royals to a 4-2 victory over the Seattle Mariners.

Pastornicky, called up from Omaha on June 14 to fill in for injured George Brett at third base, lashed an 0-2 pitch off Matt Young, 7-6, into the left-field bleachers to give the Royals a sweep of the three-game series.

The homer, which followed an error by shortstop Domingo Ramos and a single by Don Slaught, made a winner of Bill Castro, 2-0, who relieved starter Keith Creel.

Pat Putnam gave the Mariners a 1-0 lead in the fourth with his eighth home run of the season, and Seattle made it 2-0 two innings later when Steve Henderson hit his third homer of the season.

Kansas City narrowed the margin to 2-1 in the bottom of the sixth when U.L. Washington singled with one out, stole second, and went to third on catcher Rick Sweet's throwing error. Hal McRae's single brought him home.

Martin remains as Yanks' skipper

NEW YORK (AP) — Billy Martin appeared to find a small island of safety Sunday in the sea of controversy surrounding his third tenure as manager of the New York Yankees.

On the brink of losing his job over a clubhouse row with a New York Times researcher, Martin met Sunday morning with club owner George Steinbrenner.

The New York Times lodged a protest with Steinbrenner over the incident, which occurred Friday afternoon. The researcher, Deborah Henschel, complained to her boss that Martin cursed at her while she was doing a survey regarding the All-Star Game.

On Saturday, three members of the Yankees, coach Don Zimmer, pitcher George Frazier and assistant trainer Mark Letendre, backed Martin in his contention that he had not sworn at the woman.

Rain delays U.S. Open; Watson, Nelson lead

OAKMONT, Pa. (AP) — Larry Nelson and defending champion Tom Watson were tied for the lead when a thunderstorm forced a suspension of play late Sunday afternoon in the final round of the 83rd U.S. Open Golf Championship.

With the dark clouds rolling over the Allegheny Valley, Watson invoked the rule that allows a player to leave the course when he deems it to be unsafe. He trotted off and seconds later the siren sounded, signaling players to seek shelter.

Play was held up at 5:30 p.m., EDT, with six golfers on the course.

If play could not resume Sunday, the sponsoring U.S. Golf Association announced, the final round will be completed Monday morning.

Watson had five holes to go in defense of his American national championship and Nelson had three holes remaining when the storm, packing lightning and heavy rains, swept over the Oakmont Country Club course.

Watson and Nelson shared the lead at four-under-par. Watson was three-under for the day and Nelson, the soft-spoken little man who won the 1981 PGA national title, was four-under.

Dr. Gil Morgan, the non-practicing optometrist who won the first two PGA Tour titles of the season, was one-under for the tournament and three shots off the lead with two holes to play.

Seve Ballesteros of Spain, the current Masters champion, and Calvin Peete, the most successful black player the game has produced, were one-over-par, and five strokes off the lead.

'Cats name Hickey new baseball coach

A former Oklahoma junior college "coach of the year" was hired to be the head coach of the Wildcat baseball team.

Bill Hickey, 34, replaces Dave Baker, who resigned in May in frustration over a lack of financial support for the team.

Hickey, a native of Buffalo, Kan., who played baseball at K-State from 1969 to 1971, calls his hiring "a dream come true."

"When I left K-State as a graduate assistant coach in 1972, I set several goals for myself," Hickey said. "In the back of my mind I wanted to be a major college coach and it's always great to come back to your alma mater."

Hickey, whose wife, Lynn, currently serves as the Wildcat women's basketball coach, was K-State's pitching coach in 1981 when the team racked up a 34-21 record — its second best.

In 1973, Hickey became an assistant coach at the University of Oklahoma when the Sooners were 48-12.

In 1979, he accepted the head baseball coaching job at Murray State Junior College in Tishomingo, Okla., where he compiled a 94-51 record in two years.

He was named Oklahoma Junior College Coach of the Year when his 1980 team was 64-26 and had four players drafted into professional baseball.

Researcher speaks out against sex bias in schools

By CINDY DREYER
Collegian Reporter

Boys are doctors. Girls are nurses. Boys fix things. Girls need things fixed. Boys invent things. Girls use what boys invent. Boys are presidents. Girls are first ladies, or at least they are according to an elementary reading book "I'm Glad I'm a Boy. I'm Glad I'm a Girl," by Whitney Darrow Jr.

"This is my all-time favorite sex bias book," David Sadker, co-author of "Sex Equity Handbook for Schools," said at a presentation Friday morning in Bluemont Hall.

Sadker, director of the Mid-Atlantic Center for Sex Equity, spoke about sex bias in the classroom, conclusions from his and other researchers findings and what educators can do to prevent further stereotyping.

Sadker's talk was sponsored by the Women's Studies Curriculum Revision Project, the multi-cultural Task Force of the College of Education and the Midwest Sex Desegregation Assistance Center.

"THE LIMITING EFFECTS of sex-role stereotyping inhibit all our students — girls and boys — from reaching their full potential," Sadker said. "How does sex bias start? From curriculum used right through the education ladder."

Although sex bias today is not as blatantly expressed as in Darrow's book, the problems still exist in very real and subtle forms, Sadker said. He pointed out that much sex bias occurs so often that it's not even recognized.

To demonstrate this, Sadker had those at the lecture evaluate a film on sex bias in which a teacher is interacting with four students, two boys and two girls.

At first observation it seemed there was very little sex bias in the classroom situation, but after evaluating the film a second time and using a form designed to evaluate sex bias, it was found that the boys were getting twice the amount of the teacher's attention than were the girls.

Sadker has researched 102 classrooms of fourth, sixth and eighth graders in five states. From his research and that from other sources, Sadker has summarized the cost of sex bias in schools into three catagories: academic; psychological and physical; and careers and familly relationships.

On the academic level, girls start out ahead of boys in speaking, reading and counting and are equal to boys in math and science skills. But as girls progress through school their achievement test scores show significant decline while the scores of boys continue to rise and eventually surpass those of their female counterparts, particularly in the areas of math and science, Sadker said.

TEACHERS INITIATE more academic contact with boys, he said. They ask them more complex and abstract questions and are also more likely to help girls by completing tasks for them resulting in "short circuiting," or learned helplessness.

Girls are more likely than boys to exhibit the pattern of learned helplessness, attributing failure to internal factors, such as ability, rather than to external factors, such as luck or effort, Sadker said.

Research indicates that on the psychological and physical level it has been found that although women achieve better grades than men, they are less likely to believe that they can do college work. Of the brightest high school graduates who do not go on to college, 70 to 90 percent are women.

By high school, young women demonstrate a decline in career commitment, which research has indicated is related to their feeling that men disapprove of a woman using her intelligence.

BOYS ARE TAUGHT stereotypical behaviors earlier and more harshly than girls, Sadker said. Society socializes boys into an active, independent and aggressive role. But such behavior is not within school norms and rituals stressing quiet behavior and docility. This results in a pattern of role conflict for boys, particularly during the elementary years.

There is a 20 percent greater probability that such stereotypical behavior will stay with them for life, Sadker said.

On the level of careers and family relationships, elementary girls identify only a limited number of career options when asked what they want to do when they grow up and even these fit stereotypic patterns, according to research. Boys, on the other hand, are able to identify many more potential occupations.

The preparation and counseling girls receive in school contribute to the economic penalties that they encounter in the workplace. Although over 90 percent will work in the paid labor force for all or part of their lives, the following statistics reveal the cost of the bias that they encounter:

— More than a third of families headed by women live below poverty level.

— A woman with a college degree will typically earn less than a male who is a high school dropout.

— The typical working woman will earn 59 cents for every dollar earned by a male worker.

MEN BECOME "TRANS-PARENTS" rather than parents because they are taught to supress emotions as children and, therefore, find it difficult to express feelings toward their family and friends, Sadker said. In fact, the typical father spends only 12 minutes a day interacting with his children.

To decrease sex bias in schools, Sadker suggested teachers make a conscious effort to encourage equal participation of all students, give extended directions to boys and girls on an equal basis, provide extensive directions so girls and boys can complete tasks independently and avoid doing or completing tasks for students.

Sadker said in order to overcome sex bias in classroom discipline, teachers should avoid stereotyping girls as obedient and complacent and boys as aggressive and disruptive. Reprimands should be related to the misbehavior — not on the basis of sex.

"All that we as educators have to give is ourselves and our time," Sadker said.
